Parents prepare for distance learning

Maria Symchych

ONLINE LEARNING: Parents and students in Santa Monica and beyond are preparing for a second round of distance learning this August and some have found unique ways to address the challenges scholars face.

CLARA HARTER
SMDP Staff Writer

Pods, Zoom, Seesaw, and Screencastify — this might have sounded like a garble of nonsense back in February but parents are now being forced to master a number of these online programs as they prepare for an upcoming semester of distance learning.

Replacing a classroom with a computer is no simple swap, but parents are developing a new set of strategies to help their children be effective online learners. After all, there are many challenges children face with distance learning such as organizing their time, asking for help online, working independently, and maintaining motivation.

"Once you are doing distance learning, things are revealed that you might not have realized about your children that their teachers have been managing for a while and that you need to address," said Candis Berens, an Educational Specialist and the founder of Indigo Learning and Wellness.

As a result, many parents are looking to "learning pods" as a solution to several of the challenges that come with distance learning. These pods typically consist of two-to-eight families who bring their children to a shared space, such as a backyard, where they complete their schoolwork under the supervision of a parent or a tutor.

Pods can allow students to

City services: What's opening soon?

BY BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

City Hall remains closed but some of Santa Monica's essential services and departments are planning to open this week.

"We want to be sure that residents know that all of our departments are working to keep the community clean and safe, to provide essential services, and to expedite safe and sustained economic recovery while City Hall is closed," city spokesperson Constance Farrell said. "I know it's hard for residents to track the closing and reopening of city programs and services, but here is a current roundup and a quick reference for what's available and soon reopening."

All reopening plans are subject to change at the direction of LA County Public Health and the State of California, but the City is closely monitoring the seven-day average of COVID-19 cases and testing positivity rate, "which is currently at 8.4% countywide, to make adjustments to our plans," Farrell added, before detailing the latest information on the Cove Skate Park, Santa Monica Swim Center, Pico market, and curbside pickup at library branches.

Local bike retailers continue to pedal through the hardships of COVID-19

BY ASHELY NAPIER
SMDP Intern

As residents continue to persevere through California's second round of lockdown orders, local bicycle retailers are also trying to race through the hardships created by COVID-19.

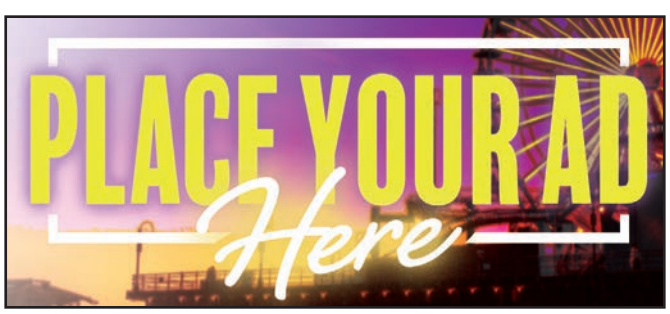

Bicycle retailers and repair shops are essential businesses, meaning they are not subjected to the COVID closures that have been implemented in recent months. Despite being able to stay open to the public, many are facing unique challenges that prevent them from pursuing business as usual.

Ron Durgin, owner of The Bike Center in Downtown Santa Monica, has experienced many of the same challenges faced by his peers in the bike industry, but the longtime businessman believes he has made positive strides to keep his business going strong in recent times.

"Really early on, like in April, we were only open one day a week, then demand kept going up," Durgin said, as he detailed how The Bike Center was eventually able to increase operating hours to six days

Caltrans Repaves Roadway with Recycled Plastic Bottles

Pilot Project uses 100% recycled material on highway repair

Caltrans repaved a section of Highway 162 in Oroville last week using recycled asphalt pavement and liquid plastic made with single-use, plastic bottles, which marks the first time the department has paved a road using 100 percent recycled materials.

The pilot project features work on three lanes of a 1,000-foot highway segment, and the department is testing the material for later use throughout the state since a one-mile segment of pavement using this treatment will recycle 150,000 plastic bottles.

"This pilot project underscores the department's commitment to embracing innovative and cost-effective technologies while advancing sustainability and environmental protection efforts," said Caltrans Director Toks Omishakin.

The "plastic" roadway has been found in previous tests to be more durable and last two to three times longer than traditional hot-mixed asphalt pavement. This pilot will be the first test on a state highway.

"California has set ambitious goals for recycling and other environmental priorities, and meeting them requires innovative and cost-effective solutions," said Senator Ben Hueso, who has advocated for Caltrans to test this material. "Using waste plastic that was otherwise destined for a landfill will not only reduce the cost of road repair and construction but also increase the strength and durability of our roads. As a leader on environmental justice issues, California is uniquely positioned to transform the transportation industry once again by using this new technology that could revolutionize the way we look at recycled plastic."

Caltrans currently has a cold in-place asphalt recycling program that uses large machines to remove 3 to 6 inches of roadway surface and grind up the asphalt while mixing it with a foamed binding agent made of bitumen, a leftover sludge from oil refining. However, the recycled material used in this process is only durable enough to serve as the roadway base. Trucks need to deliver hot-mix asphalt from a production plant miles away and place a final layer over the base.

Using this new technology developed by TechniSoil Industrial of Redding, a recycling train of equipment grinds up the top 3 inches of pavement and then mixes the grindings with a liquid plastic polymer binder, which comes from a high amount of recycled, single-use bottles. The new asphalt material is then placed on the top surface of the roadway, eliminating the need for trucks to bring in outside material for a paving operation. By eliminating the need to haul asphalt from the outside, this process can significantly cut greenhouse gas emissions.

"We're excited about introducing a new sustainable technology and helping pave the way for utilization of recycled plastics throughout the state," said Caltrans District 3 Director Amarjeet S. Benipal. "This process is better for the environment because it keeps plastic bottles out of landfills and helps reduce greenhouse gas emissions and reliance on fossil fuels."

The $3.2 million paving project covers a stretch of Highway 162 between the Feather River and Christian Avenue in Oroville. The construction schedule is subject to change due to traffic incidents, weather, availability of equipment and/or materials, and/or construction-related issues.

Trader Joe's says no to changing ethnic-sounding label names

BY JOHN ROGERS
Associated Press

Trader Joe's, which indicated earlier this month it might change the names of some of its products after an online petition denounced them as racist, now says it will stick with labels like Trader Jose's and Trader Ming's for Mexican and Asian food.

"We want to be clear: we disagree that any of these labels are racist," the popular grocery chain said in a statement posted on its website. It added, "We do not make decisions based on petitions."

The petition posted on change.org by a high school student claims the names create "a narrative of exoticism that perpetuates harmful stereotypes."

Other Trader Joe's names cited include Arabian Joe for Middle Eastern food, Trader Giotto's for Italian and Trader Joe San for Japanese cuisine.

After the petition was launched Trader Joe's issued a statement saying it has been in the process of updating product labels and hoped to conclude that effort soon.

"While this approach to product naming may have been rooted in a lighthearted attempt at inclusiveness, we recognize that it may now have the opposite effect — one that is contrary to the welcoming, rewarding customer experience we strive to create every day," company spokeswoman Kenya Friend-Daniel said at the time.

She didn't respond to a message Friday asking what changed the company's mind.

But in its recent statement the grocery chain said it still believes the names, many created decades ago, represent lighthearted efforts at inclusion, adding that its customers say they still like them.

Initial word that it would change the names, Trader Joe's said, was based on "inaccurate reports."

"We thought then—and still do—that this naming of products could be fun and show appreciation for other cultures," the company said.

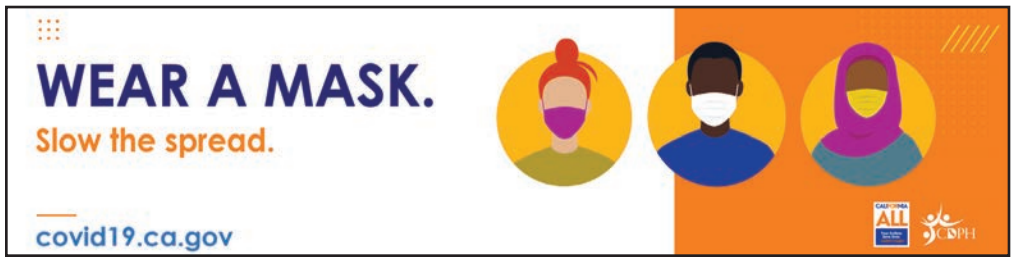

The petition, which had more than 5,000 signatures on Friday, also provoked disagreement among some who saw it.

"Enough is enough," one person commented. "Let's stop stereotyping and perpetuating narratives that are harmful and hurtful."

Another responded, "Pick on something else. The packaging indicates it's authentic to the country the recipe comes from! There are far more important issues to be worked on!"

DISTANCE LEARNING

regain some of the collaborative learning of school in a safe environment while providing parents with relief from child care duties and space to work from home. However, pods are not an option for all parents, particularly those who lack the financial resources, space, or community networks with which to organize them.

Although there are many positives to pods, Berens, who will be running a pod herself in the fall, cautions parents against rushing into these arrangements.

"I love the idea of learning pods if they are done correctly, and I've thought it through to the point where I can see it going very well or very poorly," said Berens. "The most important step is to figure out what your child needs and then find families that match that need."

According to Berens, there are different types of support children need and families often want to get different things out of pods. Some parents with very social children are looking for a place where their kids can have a peer to work on assignments with. Other parents are unsatisfied with the prescribed curriculum and are looking for a pod that will develop more imaginative learning projects.

Molly Lague has children enrolled in elementary and middle school at SMASH and high school at Samohi's PPBL pathway program, but she is not opting to join a learning pod. Instead, Lague plans to use lessons learned from her three children's online learning experience in the Spring to manage a productive environment at home. She hopes to "fill in the blanks" by finding safe ways for her kids to socialize after school and intends to create a family schedule that will help manage her and her children's busy lives.

"We needed to start posting a schedule because there were multiple Zooms happening and we were coordinating multiple after school activities that were now happening in the living room," said Lague. "It took a lot of preplanning to create quiet and clear spaces for whoever needed it."

Beren also advises developing a schedule for each day, especially for younger children who need more structure. In the classroom teachers play a large role in organizing students' time and in managing their executive functioning to break large tasks into manageable steps.

"Now, with distance learning, a lot of kids are getting assignments and thinking, 'Oh where do I even start,'" said Berens. "There is also a lot of energy monitoring that happens with teachers. They get a sense of when kids need a brain break or a physical break, which students may not know to take themselves."

To help parents deal with these obstacles Beren is offering a Home Learning Coach program where she works with children to develop strategies to plan, stay organized, and follow through with assignments.

"Memory is tied to emotion, so if you are sitting and trying to learn something all by yourself there is not a lot of learning going on," explains Berens. "So, if you can find a way to engage with friends and make it fun, you are going to retain a lot more information."

One reason why Lague feels prepared for the Fall without joining a pod is that her children are fortunate to already have good relationships with their teachers. According to Lague, a connection to their teachers also helps them maintain motivation and feel like their learning is important.

As for advice to other parents, Lague said, "Don't be shy to reach out to the teachers that your child has. As we are all figuring this out, I think establishing a personal relationship will help teachers understand what is happening behind the screen, which allows them to better help your student."

RECREATION

The Cove Skate Park at Memorial Park is expected to reopen on Tuesday, Aug. 4, for Monday through Saturday operations. Safe reopening plans for the Santa Monica Swim Center are also in progress as an opening is currently planned for the week of Aug. 10, Farrell said, mentioning the swim center will operate Tuesday through Saturday by appointment only.

"We have issued permits for surf camps and beach yoga classes, in accordance with LA County requirements," Farrell said, stating all outdoor licensed fitness instructors have also been asked to bring their services in alignment with public health guidelines.

Beach parking lots are open and so is the Santa Monica Pier for physically distanced strolling. Tennis courts at Ocean View, Reed Park, Memorial Park, Clover Park, Douglas Park, Los Amigos Park, Marine Park are open 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. and no reservations will be taken for the courts. The East Court At Colorado Center Park can be booked though by visiting Bookmycourt.com.

LEARNING AND ENRICHMENT

The Santa Monica Public Library has already resumed services through contactless pickup service at the Main branch, and curbside pickup will begin at the Pico branch on Wednesday, Aug. 5.

Fall direct services programs at CREST, PAL and Virginia Avenue Park are in the planning stage, and city officials expect more information to be available for residents in the next two weeks.

HOUSING AND FOOD

The City's Below Market Housing waitlist is still open, and opportunities are available, particularly for households earning moderate income, seniors, and individuals living with a disability. Visit santamonica.gov/housing-apply.

The Downtown Farmers Market is open on Wednesdays and Saturdays, and the Pico market is slated for reopening sometime in August, according to Farrell. School-aged children can receive free summer lunches at Virginia Avenue Park through Aug.14 between 11:30 a.m. and 1 p.m.

The COVID-19 Emergency Pantry at Virginia Avenue Park in partnership with the Westside Food Pantry offers pre-assembled food bags to low-income Santa Monica residents and/or families with children enrolled in SMMUSD schools as well. Residents only need to schedule an appointment by calling 424-410-1354 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Residents are invited to learn more about the expected reopenings by visiting the website www.santamonica.gov/coronavirus-reopenings, Farrell said, "where all of our facility and service information is kept up-to-date."

a week by June.

Even with the recent rush of repairs and sales, Durgin has had to make serious changes to his open storefront, including closing the garage-style doors in an effort to limit the number of customers inside to just one at a time. He has also hired vendors to thoroughly clean the store and bikes with an EPA-approved sanitizing vaporizer and even went as far as remodeling the retail area to comply with the six-foot distancing mandate. But the biggest change to his shop, Durgin said, is that access to the bike lockers is currently closed to the public and he doesn't envision them reopening anytime soon.

However, according to Durgin, "we are up more than double our normal volume," and that doesn't account for the rental side of his business, which he estimates has seen a 20% increase from years past.

Although the recent rental and sales numbers have been somewhat positive, Durgin explained his business is "way down" when you compare the stats to what a normal July in Santa Monica typically looks like.

Other cycle retailers are experiencing similar effects due to the lack of tourism, including Spokes 'N Stuff owner Joey Harris, who owns three locations on the Westside in places like Santa Monica, Venice and on Melrose Avenue.

Harris said his Santa Monica location is experiencing a 75 percent decrease in revenue, which he attributes to both a lack of tourism and residents wanting to stay indoors. Harris added his Venice location was hit hardest by the downtick in tourism and shared he is only able to keep it open on weekends at the moment, while he is struggling to keep his Santa Monica location open seven days a week.

Harris believes there is a double standard since he is taking steps to keep his business clean and safe, but there are no health regulations imposed on dockless scooters and bicycles seen around the city.

"I am very disappointed in the dockless scooters and bicycles," Harris says. Because, while he is sanitizing his bicycles after every use, "those (scooters) are the ones that are spreading the virus from person to person. I think that there is something wrong with that."

As he detailed the ramifications of forcibly closing businesses to abide by COVID-19 regulations, and how local officials have not provided enough protection for small businesses during recent looting attempts, Harris said he wants to see local and federal officials protect small businesses like his own, because he believes the government is treating small businesses, "like sacrificial lambs," during an era of economic uncertainty.

Closed: The popular ramen restaurant "Ippudo Ramen" has shuttered after nearly 2 years of occupying its space on second street, but it's far from the only commercial property that's been forced to close during the Covid-19 pandemic.

Residents traveling down Ocean Park boulevard might have noticed a trio of businesses near each other that have all been forced to shut down in recent weeks due to a lack of customers.

A flyer advertising Dan Modern Chinese, a San Gabriel Valley establishment that opened its own first location back in 2018, is currently posted on the window of the former Ippudo Ramen location. The restaurant's Instagram page states officials expect an opening in September, but it's not yet known what will replace the other businesses that have experienced misfortune during the pandemic.

DO YOU HAVE COMMUNITY NEWS?
Santa Monica Daily Press office (310) 458-7737

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (AUGUST 03)

You can trust instinct and intuition better than any other influence around right now. You are like a blessed baby who doesn't have to know where it's going or what it's doing to be blissfully protected. A risk taken in September brings abundantly more opportunity. Health and love improvements happen in November. Sagittarius and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 45, 2, 28 and 16.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Being stuck is a thing that happens when you're afraid of loss. Once you're willing to lose a thing, you can drop it. There's suddenly some wiggle room, if not an entire swath of space you can simply walk on out of.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). If you can't quite put words to this thing you're doing, don't let that bother you. As suggested by the ancient philosopher Laotzu, "The way is ever nameless."

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There is no need to reach or struggle for your contentment; you only need to claim it if you want it. If you don't, that is fine, too. It will be waiting for you either way.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). When you can't lessen the measurable impact of a thing, you can still alter the immeasurable elements. Only you can determine how much it means to you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You can love a plant all you want, but it will grow according to the sunlight and soil, not according to your love. To position and provide what's required for thriving -- this is how to effectively love a plant or anything else.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). If you experience it at home, and then, when you try to get away from it it's still there but no matter where you go, that means that you're it. This is about the best news you could get; that the thing is well within your locus of control.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). The river never stops. It is moved by water falling from the sky to the mountaintop, where water rushes down to the deepest part of the ocean. You, feeling stuck, are, in fact, in motion. Your connection to others makes it so.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Even though you receive praise for being versatile and adept at many endeavors, you'd feel like you're somewhere instead of everywhere. Today, you long for and will achieve, focus.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Before you ask a person to give you something, you might want to check to make sure that it is within their ability to do so. This one assurance will steer interactions in a productive direction.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). There is a point in which the most productive thing you can do is nothing at all. Think of a screw. If you tighten it past a certain point, it becomes stripped and no longer can perform its purpose. Know when to stop.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Your mindset around money and what it's for is changing. Try this on: You have enough and therefore you are rich. Could this statement be true? How does it make you feel?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The infinite is formless, which is why we need frames made out of our judgments and rules, our boundaries and negations. It's a day to use and celebrate the word "no," as it creates the frame around all your yesses.
