"So the people who are choosing not to be vaccinated at this point, in the U.S. where we have vaccines available, are choosing for reasons other than public health" — Dr. Timothy Brewer

Local emergency services take a syringe half full attitude toward vaccines

Police and Fire report vaccine rates at about 50% compared to 81% for residents

Santa Monica residents have consistently surpassed county and national averages for Covid-19 vaccinations but rates among the local workforce are lagging behind.

According to the County Department of Public Health, 81 percent of Santa Monica residents have had at least one dose of a vaccine. Statewide, about 65 percent of Californians have had at least one dose and the nation recently reached 70 percent.

However, several sections of the Santa Monica economy and workforce have significantly lower vaccination rates.

In a virtual town hall this week, Interim Police Chief Jacqueline Seabrooks said SMPD's vaccination rate is about 55 percent.

"Consistent with what you see in the county, about 50-55 percent of the police organization has undergone vaccinations," she said. "Some of our staff have religious and/or medical exemptions that would preclude it."

That rate is similar to the Santa Monica Fire Department.

"Santa Monica Fire supports its personnel to get the COVID-19 vaccine," said Santa Monica spokeswoman Constance Farrell. "Currently, 52 percent of Santa Monica Fire staff have self-reported being fully vaccinated. City leadership continues to strongly encourage the safe, free, and effective vaccine to increase voluntary compliance across the organization. The City has coordinated six vaccination clinics since March for the community and employees, and has facilitated the scheduling of hundreds of vaccination appointments for employees."

The local rates are on par with county levels. Only about 51 percent of Los Angeles firefighters and 52 percent of the city's police officers are at least partially vaccinated. Fewer than 30 percent of Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department staff have received vaccine doses through employee clinics, and about 54 percent of state corrections employees are at least partially vaccinated.

Santa Monica's Big Blue Bus employees have a 65 percent vaccination rate.

Local healthcare providers are vaccinated at a much higher rate. Approximately 82 percent of UCLA Health employees are fully vaccinated. Currently, 86 percent of residents and 85 percent of staff at skilled nursing facilities are fully vaccinated county-wide.

"Providence is committed to the safety of all who enter our hospitals and other facilities, particularly as COVID-19 cases escalate again, rapidly spreading, especially among the unvaccinated. We have been steadfast in promoting and encouraging vaccination, knowing it has proven not only safe and effective, but lifesaving," said Patricia Aidem with Providence St. John's Hospital. "We have received notice of the new public health orders from the California Department of Public Health and are already beginning conversations on how to operationalize this so we can be in full compliance."

Government officials are now discussing mandatory vaccines for civic employees pending final authorization of a vaccine by the FDA.

California will require all of its roughly 2.2 million health care workers and long-term care workers to be fully vaccinated by Sept. 30 as the nation's most populous state is losing ground in the battle against new infections of a more dangerous coronavirus variant. The order, issued Thursday by the California Department of Public Health, is different than what Democratic Gov. Gavin Newsom said last month when he announced health care workers would have the choice of either getting vaccinated or submitting to weekly testing.

Some California local governments are going beyond the new rule. In Los Angeles County, some 110,000 government workers have until Oct. 1 to be vaccinated under a new

US hiring surges in July, but the variant is the wild card

PAUL WISEMAN
AP Economics Writer

U.S employers added 943,000 jobs in July and drove the unemployment rate down to 5.4% in another sign the economy is bouncing back with surprising vigor from COVID-19. But there is growing fear the fast-spreading delta variant will set back the recovery.

The worry is that the resurgent virus could discourage people from going out and spending and trigger another round of shutdowns or other restrictions.

"That is a definite downside risk," said Rubeela Farooqi, chief U.S. economist at High Frequency Economics. "The risk is from a more cautious consumer, if they don't want to engage in outside activities. ... You're also hearing about big companies that are delaying a return to work. That might be something that slows things down."

The Labor Department collected its data for the report in mid-July before the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention last week reversed course and recommended that even vaccinated people resume wearing masks indoors in places where the variant is pushing infections up.

Still, the July numbers looked good. They exceeded economists' forecast of more than 860,000 new jobs. Encouraged by their prospects, 261,000 Americans returned to the job market in July. And the unemployment rate fell from 5.9% in June.

Moreover, the report found that as customers come back and businesses scramble to find workers, they are raising wages: Average hourly earnings were up 4% last month from a year earlier.

The Labor Department also revised its jobs numbers for May and June, adding 119,000 jobs.

The economy lost over 22 million jobs in March and April 2020 in a practically overnight recession as the coronavirus forced businesses to shut down and people to stay home. Since then, the U.S. has recovered nearly 17 million jobs, meaning it is still almost 6 million short.

"If the pace of hiring over the last three months continues, all jobs lost due to the pandemic would be regained in seven months," Leslie Preston, senior economist at TD Economics, wrote in a research report. "However, the pace is likely to cool a bit and the risk of the delta variant looms."

The unexpectedly strong numbers come at a critical moment for President Joe Biden's agenda, with the Senate set to take up a $1 trillion infrastructure bill this weekend before moving on to a more than $3 trillion expansion of the social safety net pushed by the Democrats.

Biden said the jobs report validates his efforts to stabilize the economy and slow the spread of the virus, and he encouraged lawmakers to pass the rest of his agenda.

"The bottom line is this: What we're doing is working," Biden said, adding, "We've got a lot of hard work left to be done."

The U.S. is seeing an average of more than 98,000 new COVID-19 cases per day, up from fewer than 12,000 a day in late June — though still well below the peak of 250,000 reached in January. The vast majority of new cases are among people who have not gotten vaccinated.

Over the past week, a growing number of state and local governments and major employers have made masks and vaccinations mandatory in a move that could help beat back the virus and protect the economy.

A failure to contain the surge could lead to more closings and cancellations of various events and prompt schools to roll back plans to reopen, making it difficult for many parents to go back to work.

"The next 10 to 14 days are going to be critical to try to get it under control," said Labor Secretary Marty Walsh. "We need to get more people vaccinated. Where there are mask mandates in place, we need to follow that."

He added: "It's really important that we take this seriously so we don't get into a situation where we have to go into shutting down parts of our country."

Farooqi said she is optimistic the job rebound can continue despite the variant, but she is holding off on her forecast for August because "there are a lot of unknowns right now."

The rollout of vaccines encouraged businesses to reopen and consumers to return to shops, restaurants and bars. Many Americans are also in surprisingly strong financial shape because the lockdowns allowed them to save money and bank relief checks from the government.

As a result, the economy has bounced back with unexpected speed. The International Monetary Fund expects U.S. economic output to grow 7% this year, its fastest pace since 1984. And employers are advertising jobs — a record 9.2 million openings in May — faster than applicants can fill them.

Some businesses blame generous federal unemployment benefits — including an extra $300 a week tacked on to regular state jobless aid — for discouraging Americans from seeking work. In response, many states have dropped the federal assistance even before it is scheduled to expire Sept. 6.

Walmart is offering up to $5 more per hour to many warehouse employees as it tries to retain workers in the tight labor market.

Layne's Chicken Fingers, an eight-restaurant chain in Frisco, Texas, is raising wages, paying bonuses, offering health insurance and promising young workers the chance for advancement. Two of the four managers of its company-owned outlets are 19, and another just turned 20.

"We're finding they can handle it -- with a lot of oversight," said CEO Garrett Reid.

The Animal Humane Society near Minneapolis is running flat-out trying to find homes for animals. It has raised wages to $15 an hour for staffers who take care of the cats and dogs and help visitors pick out pets.

Eileen Lay, the organization's chief financial and operating officer, knows what she's up against.

"My 16-year-old just got a $15-an-hour job at Target," she said. "And he doesn't have to clean poop."

Associated Press writers Anne D'Innocenzio in New York and Martin Crutsinger and Zeke Miller in Washington contributed to this report.

California hydroelectric plant shut as water level drops

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Drought-stricken California has shut down one of its largest hydroelectric plants because there's not enough water to power it.

The six-turbine Edward Hyatt Power Plant was taken off-line after the water level in the Oroville Dam reservoir that feeds it sank to an historic low of less than 642 feet above mean sea level.

The Sierra Nevada foothills reservoir north of Sacramento was less than a quarter full.

It was the lowest level since the nation's tallest dam was completed in 1967 and the first time the hydroelectric plant has been idled by lack of water, officials said.

The plant can produce enough power for 80,000 homes and businesses but its shutdown had been expected "and the state has planned for its loss in both water and (electrical) grid management," said a statement from the state Department of Water Resources.

"Steps have been taken in anticipation of the loss of power generation," the statement said.

"This is just one of many unprecedented impacts we are experiencing in California as a result of our climate-induced drought," agency director Karla Nemeth said.

The western United States is in the midst of an historic drought that is emptying reservoirs and contributing to massive wildfires.

Extreme conditions are often from a combination of unusual random, short-term and natural weather patterns heightened by long-term, human-caused climate change that has made the West much warmer and drier in the past 30 years.

Hydroelectricity provides about 15% of California electricity but production has plummeted in recent years. Gov. Gavin Newsom last month signed an emergency proclamation suspending certain requirements so the state could obtain additional power capacity to avoid blackouts under high-demand conditions.

The low water level at Lake Oroville is a far cry from four years ago, when more than 180,000 people were evacuated after heavy winter storms filled the reservoir and its two spillways collapsed. The feared uncontrolled release of massive amounts of water didn't happen but the state was left with a $1 billion repair bill.

Re: SMPD adapting to riot report recommendations

It's a start. Meanwhile, how about removing from office any remaining political sycophants who supported ex-chief Renaud in her bizarre next-day self-congratulating press conference, and ultimately gave her a golden parachute instead of the summary dismissal she so richly deserved.

Potential military vaccine mandate brings distrust, support

JULIE WATSON
Associated Press

Since President Joe Biden asked the Pentagon last week to look at adding the COVID-19 vaccine to the military's mandatory shots, former Army lawyer Greg T. Rinckey has fielded a deluge of calls.

His firm, Tully Rinckey, has heard from hundreds of soldiers, Marines and sailors wanting to know their rights and whether they could take any legal action if ordered to get inoculated for the coronavirus.

"A lot of U.S. troops have reached out to us saying, 'I don't want a vaccine that's untested, I'm not sure it's safe, and I don't trust the government's vaccine. What are my rights?'" Rinckey said.

Generally, their rights are limited since vaccines are widely seen as essential for the military to carry out its missions, given that service members often eat, sleep and work in close quarters.

Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin has said he is working expeditiously to make the COVID-19 vaccine mandatory for military personnel and is expected to ask Biden to waive a federal law that requires individuals be given a choice if the vaccine is not fully licensed. Biden has also directed that all federal workers be vaccinated or face frequent testing and travel restrictions.

Lawyers say the waiver will put the military on firmer legal ground so it can avoid the court battles it faced when it mandated the anthrax vaccine for troops in the 1990s when it was not fully approved by the federal Food and Drug administration.

The distrust among some service members is not only a reflection of the broader public's feelings about the COVID-19 vaccines, which were quickly authorized for emergency use, but stems in part from the anthrax program's troubles.

Scores of troops refused to take that vaccine. Some left the service. Others were disciplined. Some were court martialed and kicked out of the military with other-than-honorable discharges.

In 2003, a federal judge agreed with service members who filed a lawsuit asserting the military could not administer a vaccine that had not been fully licensed without their consent, and stopped the program.

The Pentagon started it back up in 2004 after the FDA issued an approval, but the judge stopped it again after ruling the FDA had not followed procedures.

Eventually the FDA issued proper approvals for the vaccine, and the program was reinstated on a limited basis for troops in high-risk locations.

Military experts say the legal battles over the anthrax vaccine could be why the Biden administration has been treading cautiously. Until now, the government has relied on encouraging troops rather than mandating the shots. Yet coronavirus cases in the military, like elsewhere, have been rising with the more contagious delta variant.

If the military makes the vaccine mandatory, most service members will have to get the shots unless they can argue to be among the few given an exemption for religious, health or other reasons.

According to the Pentagon, more than 1 million service members are fully vaccinated, and more than 237,000 have gotten at least one shot. There are roughly 2 million active-duty, Guard and Reserve troops.

Many see the COVID-19 vaccine as being necessary to avoid another major outbreak like the one last year that sidelined the USS Theodore Roosevelt and resulted in more than 1,000 crewmember cases and one death.

An active-duty Army officer said he would welcome the vaccine among the military's mandatory shots. The soldier, who asked not to be named because he was not authorized to speak to the media, said he worries unvaccinated service members may be abusing the honor system and going to work without a mask.

He recently rode in a car with others for work but didn't feel like he could ask if everyone was vaccinated because it's become such a political topic. Commanders have struggled to separate vaccinated and unvaccinated recruits during early portions of basic training across the services to prevent infections.

Accommodating unvaccinated troops would burden service members who are vaccinated since it would limit who is selected for deployment, according to active-duty troops and veterans.

"The military travels to vulnerable populations all over the world to be able to best serve the U.S.," said former Air Force Staff Sgt. Tes Sabine, who works as a radiology technician in an emergency room in New York state. "We have to have healthy people in the military to carry out missions, and if the COVID-19 vaccine achieves that, that's a very positive thing."

Dr. Shannon Stacy, who works at a hospital in a Los Angeles suburb, agreed.

"As an emergency medicine physician and former flight surgeon for a Marine heavy helicopter squadron, I can attest that COVID-19 has the potential to take a fully trained unit from mission ready to non-deployable status in a matter of days," she said.

The biggest challenge will be scheduling the shots around trainings, said Stacy, who left the Navy in 2011 and did pre-deployment, group immunizations.

Army Col. Arnold Strong, who retired from the military in 2017, said he believes it's not anything the U.S. military cannot overcome: Troops working in the farthest corners of the Earth have access to medical order issued by Board of Supervisors Chair Hilda L. Solis. She noted that about 4 million of the county's roughly 10 million residents remain unvaccinated. The Los Angeles order doesn't specify penalties for employees who refuse to be vaccinated.

Santa Monica is in discussion with labor unions regarding mandatory vaccination.

Experts said the lack of vaccination among front line workers is particularly worrying for everyone involved. Individuals like police officers, firefighters or bus drivers encounter many more people than the average resident making it much more likely they will be exposed to the virus. They said a vaccine is the best way to protect workers from infection and subsequently protect everyone else they counter from community spread.

Dr. Timothy Brewer is a professor of medicine in the division of infectious diseases at the David Geffen School of Medicine at UCLA and of epidemiology at the UCLA Fielding School of Public Health.

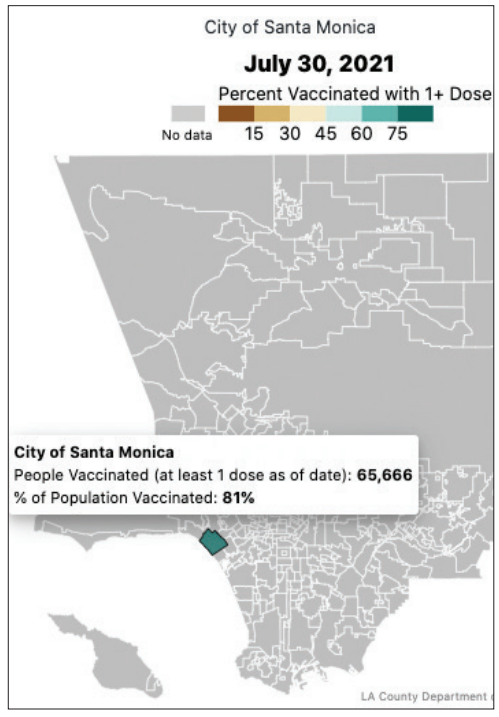

He said lagging vaccine rates are dangerous in both the short and long term as unvaccinated people are at greater risk of contracting the disease and spreading it.

"The reason why that's important is twofold," he said. "One is it can cause disease and in small numbers, one to two percent even actually die. The other reason why it's very important is, the more the virus transmits, the more it can change. So variants emerge because as the virus is replicating and makes mistakes, we call those mutations, and those mutations can result in new versions of the virus, we call them variants, and those variants may have properties like the Delta variant where they're more able to spread from person to person."

High vaccination rates also create a safety net for people who are unable to receive the direct benefit of a vaccine such as people with compromised immune systems or young children.

Dr. Brewer said the current resistance to vaccines has nothing to do with healthcare concerns given the probabilities associated with the disease and the known safety of the vaccine. Instead, he said that the healthcare response has become politicized.

"If you get a (coronavirus) infection, your risk of serious illness is about 15 percent, your risk of being hospitalized, including potentially in the intensive care unit is about 5 percent, your risk of dying is about 1 to 2 percent and if you survived all of this, your risk of post-COVID syndrome, or long hauler disease is somewhere between 30 to 80 percent. These are all bad things," he said. "If you get vaccinated, not only do you reduce those risks by about 90 percent, depending on the vaccine you get, but in terms of adverse side effects, the serious ones like blood clots or serious allergic reactions or Guillain-Barre, a neuropathy disease and neuron disease, occur in the order of about two to 11 per million doses, so about 1,000 times lower and these adverse reactions are not necessarily fatal. We know how to treat anaphylaxis, they know how to treat blood clots now, we know how to treat Guillain-Barre, so why expose yourself to all these potentially terrible things when we have vaccines that are extremely safe, have been given to hundreds of millions of people. Over a billion people have been vaccinated globally. So, we have a lot of data on these vaccines. We know they're safe, we know they work so there's really no public health reason not to be vaccinated. So the people who are choosing not to be vaccinated at this point, in the U.S. where we have vaccines available, are choosing for reasons other than public health."

SANTA MONICA: About 81 percent of the population is vaccinated.

Dr. Brewer said individuals with questions about vaccines should talk to a healthcare provider or make use of the resources available from the County's Public Health Department.

"I think the majority of service members are going to line up and get vaccinated as soon as it is a Department of Defense policy," he said.

Strong has lost five friends to the virus, three of whom were veterans.

His hope is that the military can set the example for others to follow.

"I would hope if people see the military step up and say, 'Yes, let's get shots in arms,' it will set a standard for the rest of country," he said. "But I don't know because I think we face such a strong threat of disinformation being deployed daily."

Shots give COVID-19 survivors big immune boost, studies show

LAURAN NEERGAARD AND MIKE STOBBE
AP Medical Writers

Even people who have recovered from COVID-19 are urged to get vaccinated, especially as the extra-contagious delta variant surges — and a new study shows survivors who ignored that advice were more than twice as likely to get reinfected.

Friday's report from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention adds to growing laboratory evidence that people who had one bout of COVID-19 get a dramatic boost in virus-fighting immune cells — and a bonus of broader protection against new mutants — when they're vaccinated.

"If you have had COVID-19 before, please still get vaccinated," said CDC Director Dr. Rochelle Walensky. "Getting the vaccine is the best way to protect yourself and others around you, especially as the more contagious delta variant spreads around the country."

According to a new Gallup survey, one of the main reasons Americans cite for not planning to get vaccinated is the belief that they're protected since they already had COVID-19. From the beginning health authorities have urged survivors to get the broader protection vaccination promises. While the shots aren't perfect, they are providing strong protection against hospitalization and death even from the delta mutant.

Scientists say infection does generally leave survivors protected against a serious reinfection at least with a similar version of the virus, but blood tests have signaled that protection drops against worrisome variants.

The CDC study offers some real-world evidence.

Researchers studied Kentucky residents with a lab-confirmed coronavirus infection in 2020, the vast majority of them between October and December. They compared 246 people who got reinfected in May or June of this year with 492 similar survivors who stayed healthy. The survivors who never got vaccinated had a significantly higher risk of reinfection than those who were fully vaccinated, even though most had their first bout of COVID-19 just six to nine months ago.

A different variant of the coronavirus caused most illnesses in 2020, while the newer alpha version was predominant in Kentucky in May and June, said study lead author Alyson Cavanaugh, a CDC disease detective working with that state's health department.

That suggests natural immunity from earlier infection isn't as strong as the boost those people can get from vaccination while the virus evolves, she said.

There's little information yet on reinfections with the newer delta variant. But U.S. health officials point to early data from Britain that the reinfection risk appears greater with delta than with the once-common alpha variant, once people are six months past their prior infection.

"There's no doubt" that vaccinating a COVID-19 survivor enhances both the amount and breadth of immunity "so that you cover not only the original (virus) but the variants," Dr. Anthony Fauci, the U.S. government's top infectious disease expert, said at a recent White House briefing.

The CDC recommends full vaccination, meaning both doses of two-dose vaccines, for everyone.

But in a separate study published Friday in JAMA Network Open, Rush University researchers reported just one vaccine dose gives the previously infected a dramatic boost in virus-fighting immune cells, more than people who have never been infected get from two shots.

Other recent studies published in Science and Nature show the combination of a prior infection and vaccination also broadens the strength of people's immunity against a changing virus. It's what virologist Shane Crotty of California's La Jolla Institute for Immunology calls "hybrid immunity."

Vaccinated survivors "can make antibodies that can recognize all kinds of variants even if you were never exposed to the variant," Crotty said. "It's pretty sweet."

One warning for anyone thinking of skipping vaccination if they had a prior infection: The amount of natural immunity can vary from person to person, possibly depending on how sick they were to begin with. The Rush University study found four of 29 previously infected people had no detectable antibodies before they were vaccinated — and the vaccines worked for them just like they work for people who never had COVID-19.

Why do many of the previously infected have such a robust response to vaccination? It has to do with how the immune system develops multiple layers of protection.

After either vaccination or infection, the body develops antibodies that can fend off the coronavirus the next time it tries to invade. Those naturally wane over time. If an infection sneaks past them, T cells help prevent serious illness by killing virus-infected cells -- and memory B cells jump into action to make lots of new antibodies.

Those memory B cells don't just make copies of the original antibodies. In immune system boot camps called germinal centers, they also mutate antibody-producing genes to test out a range of those virus fighters, explained University of Pennsylvania immunologist John Wherry.

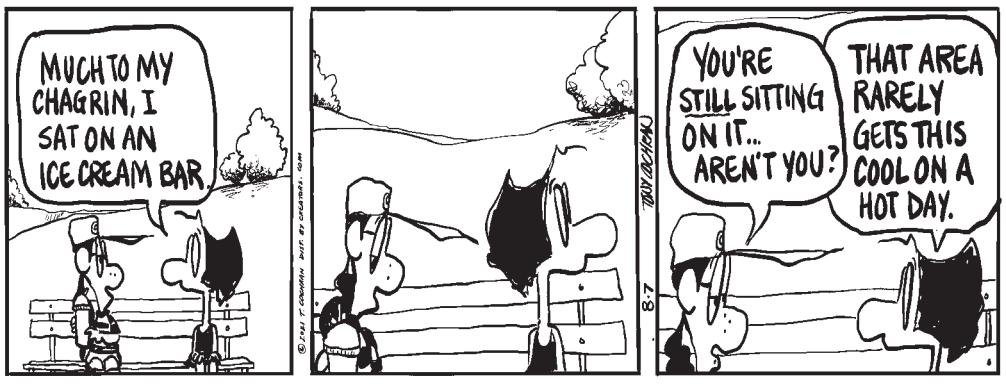

The result is essentially a library of antibody recipes that the body can choose from after future exposures — and that process is stronger when vaccination triggers the immune system's original memory of fighting the actual virus.

With the delta variant's super infectiousness, getting vaccinated despite a prior infection "is more important now than it was before to be sure," Crotty said. "The breadth of your antibodies and potency against variants is going to be far better than what you have right now."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (AUGUST 7)

The ocean, the Grand Canyon, a wall of sound from a magnificent band... to feel at once enveloped and miniaturized by something vast pulls your spiritual self to the helm. From there, you make excellent decisions and find your way to the people who sing your soul. You embody awe. Sagittarius and Aquarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 25, 41, 27 and 12.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). When you don't have the patience to sit through the lecture or read the book, dive in and learn by doing. Mistakes make the best teachers anyway! Their lessons are relevant by nature, brief, thorough and acute.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). There is certainly a mystical aspect to what you are taking on, but it's not worth thinking about now, let alone trying to describe it to others, as it's unexplainable. Live it and love it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Because you believe that everyone is great in a different way, you wouldn't value your own efforts while devaluing the efforts of another. You'll have to search for the value that isn't readily apparent.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Don't take the chaos as a bad sign. You're early to the party, that's all. Things are still swirling around, deciding where and how to settle in. Early to the party means you get to establish the rules. You get to be a founder.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). This scene is far from perfect, but as you aim to keep stress low and spirits high, you succeed in creating the sort of day you'll enjoy even as you build your sunnier future upon it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Perhaps when Narcissus contemplated his reflection and got stuck there, it wasn't his fault. Rather, the contemplation of one's own reflection is an all-around bad luck move, especially for anyone who has real things to accomplish.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). There was a time for blending in and adding your subtle colorations, and that time is over now. As you paint yourself onto the canvas of this backdrop called your community, use broad strokes and bold colors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). It's a hard thing for children to understand, but you'll model this concept so well today: Just because we put others first doesn't mean we make ourselves less important. You'll embody social organization with compassionate maturity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You've been known to get swept into the slipstream of beauty and gladly, helplessly glide wherever it takes you. In today's case, you'll wind up where the wild things quench their thirst.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It is only natural for people who are good at one thing to think they would also be good at an adjacent thing. The wise take overlapping strengths in stride while tending to the unique study each discipline requires.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). This new venture needs definition. Go powerfully into the realm of naming and renaming. What you call a thing will strongly influence what it becomes.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Timing sends a message. Arguably, the spaces are more informative than the information that interrupts them. You want to be in control of this.
