New foundation looks out for young adults with special needs

BY MELONIE MAGRUDER
Special to the Daily Press

When actress Kym Karath, who played the youngest Von Trapp child in the 1965 film "The Sound of Music," moved to Malibu seven years ago with her special needs son, Eric, she was at the end of her rope.

Eric, who first suffered a stroke at the age of three weeks, had been lost in an educational system in Greenwich, Conn., that had never been able to accommodate his special learning requirements. Eric's godmother is Karath's "Sound of Music" co-star Heather Menzies-Urich, who was married to the late actor Robert Urich.

Little did Karath know that the caring tutelage of Malibu High School special education teacher Lisa Szilagyi would lead not only to hope for the future for her son, but a new nonprofit foundation to serve an often-overlooked community of physically and mentally challenged adults who age out of a state support system.

"Walking into Lisa's class at Malibu High literally saved my life and Eric's life," Karath said. "It seems like she was the first teacher to truly understand that brain damage is as individual as the brain that is damaged."

College president looks to the future

SMC strong, but needs state support

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

PICO BLVD It's not an easy time to lead a college in California, but Dr. Chui Tsang says he's still having fun.

It's not the circumstances that thrill him.

The state has taken $800 million from community colleges since 2008, forcing Santa Monica College to cut 1,100 class sections since the 2008-09 school year.

Things will only get worse if voters refuse to pass Proposition 30, an increase to wealthy Californians' income taxes and a quarter of one percent increase to the sales tax, which supporters say will make it possible to maintain current funding levels.

Very few community colleges in the Los Angeles area could afford to offer summer school, and the other two public higher education systems in California — the UC and CSU systems — have announced tuition increases in recent years.

SMC's solutions to the state funding problems have come under fire, particularly a program called contract education that would have allowed students to take classes in the summer if they paid the full cost of the Pilot dies in small plane crash in West L.A.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES The pilot of a small plane has died after crashing into a West Los Angeles neighborhood two miles northeast of the Santa Monica Airport.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Ian Gregor says the pilot of the single-engine Cessna 210 declared an emergency before the plane crashed Friday evening. Gregor didn't know the cause of the emergency.

He says the pilot was approaching the airport for a landing when the crash occurred.

Los Angeles Fire spokesman Brian Humphrey says the crash lit a palm tree on fire. Television footage from a news helicopter showed the charred wreckage on a street corner and a broken wing on the ground.

The FAA and the NTSB will investigate the cause of the crash.

State GOP struggling to stay afloat as election approaches

MICHAEL R. BLOOD
AP Political Writer

BURBANK, Calif. With November elections approaching, the California Republican Party is in trouble, struggling to pay its bills and hold its ground in a state that has been growing increasingly favorable for Democratic candidates.

At a low-key meeting of party members and activists Saturday, even state Chairman Tom Del Beccaro remarked at one point, "We like this underdog thing."

Short on cash and in danger of slipping below 30 percent of the statewide registration, the once-imposing state party is facing the possibility of losing seats in the Legislature, particularly the Senate, and in Congress. The party nominated a virtually unknown candidate to challenge U.S. Sen. Dianne Feinstein, and Mitt Romney has shown no signs he intends to contest the nation's most populous state, where President Barack Obama rolled up a 24-point margin over rival John McCain in 2008.

On the day Romney added Rep. Paul Ryan to the Republican presidential ticket, the only visible sign of the campaign at Saturday's state party meeting in Burbank was a few lapel buttons and T-shirts for sale in the lobby. When asked why the campaign did not send a surrogate to speak on Romney's behalf, Del Beccaro said, "This is a working convention for us — it's workshop heavy."

California counted more registered Republicans in 1988 than it does today, even though the state population has grown since that time by about 10 million. Democrats hold every statewide office and the two U.S. Senate seat, and they control both chambers in the Legislature.

Democrats hold a 2.2 million voter edge over Republicans in the state. Independents now outnumber Republicans in about a dozen congressional districts.

COMING OUT STRONG: 'The Bourne Legacy' was the top film at the box office this past weekend. It opened with $40.3 million.

'Bourne,' 'Campaign' bump Batman from No. 1 spot at the box office

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES "The Dark Knight Rises" has finally fallen out of first-place at the weekend box office.

Jeremy Renner's action tale "The Bourne Legacy" took over as the No. 1 movie with a $40.3 million debut, according to studio estimates Sunday.

Will Ferrell and Zach Galifianakis' political comedy "The Campaign" opened at No. 2 with $27.4 million.

The new movies pushed "The Dark Knight Rises" down to third-place with $19.5 million, raising the superhero blockbuster's three-week domestic total to $390.1 million.

The weekend's other new wide release, Meryl Streep and Tommy Lee Jones' marital comic drama "Hope Springs," opened at No. 4 with $15.6 million.

"The Dark Knight Rises" had been the No. 1 movie for three-straight weekends since debuting amid tragedy as a gunman killed 12 people and wounded 58 at a midnight screening of the film on opening day in Colorado.

The violence seems to have had little effect on the runaway success of the Batman finale.

"The opening weekend in our business is very important, and this incident took place before the picture officially opened. It took place at a midnight screening. I can't give you an actual number, but I'm sure we were affected on that opening," said Dan Fellman, head of distribution for Warner Bros., which released "The Dark Knight Rises."

Universal's "The Bourne Legacy" casts Renner and Rachel Weisz in an offshoot of the three hits that starred Matt Damon as unstoppable operative Jason Bourne. Renner plays an agent pursued by Bourne's old spy masters after they try to snuff out the espionage program in a cover-up conspiracy.

"The Bourne Legacy" came in well behind the $69.3 million debut of Damon's last entry in the series, 2007's "The Bourne Ultimatum." But the new film had a strong start and establishes Renner as a sturdy frontman to keep the franchise running.

"I love the fact that we were able to reboot this and do as well as we were able to. It leaves it open for us to think about it going forward," said Nikki Rocco, Universal's head of distribution. "We are very much into what it's going to look like the next time."

While Damon was absent, his presence is felt throughout "The Bourne Legacy," with characters commenting on Jason Bourne sightings and his former handlers jittery over the fact that the rogue agent is still out there.

Renner is a bankable star to carry on

Ban was the right thing to do

Editor:

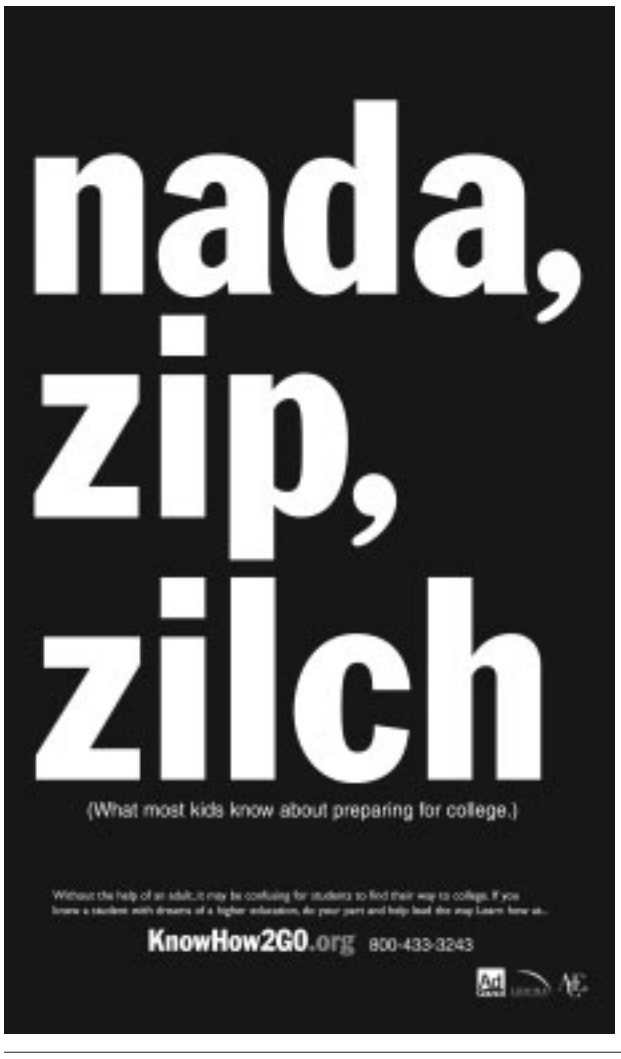

California isn't the only place looking out for the welfare of ducks and geese. The Compass Group, a British company that caters events such as Wimbledon, has decided it will no longer serve foie gras due to ethical concerns ("Challenging the forbidden food," July 25).

It's an important reminder that California's foie gras ban was the right thing to do, even as chefs and restaurants look for sneaky loopholes to continue serving diseased livers to diners. Birds force-fed for foie gras have up to four pounds of grain and fat pumped into their stomachs through metal pipes every day. The pipes sometimes puncture the birds' throats, and the force-feeding process causes their livers to balloon to as much as 10 times their natural size, sometimes causing their livers to burst. It is common for birds who have been force-fed to suffer from hepatic encephalopathy, a serious brain ailment that occurs when their livers fail. This seems radical for a moment of gustatory sensation.

Hopefully other businesses and states will also find their moral compass and agree that it is better to have a big heart for animals' welfare than to dine on their engorged livers, especially when chefs are capable of creating so many other wonderful options.

My Write

Tidying up loose ends

ON JULY 23 ("CITY HALL'S gravy train derails development," My Write,) I wrote about the new development planned for the Village Trailer Park at 2930 Colorado Ave. The "East Village" by developer Marc Luzzatto is one of a half-dozen oversized projects proposed in the immediate Colorado/Stewart Street/Olympic Boulevard neighborhood.

Luzzatto's development is a 378,460-square-foot, 438-unit, housing/retail complex in a small neighborhood that's facing over 2-million square feet of new construction in the next few years. Citizens are objecting about height, size, density and the displacement of some 48 low-income, elderly tenants in a trailer park on the property.

The project was discussed at the July 24 City Council meeting. After lengthy public input, the council voted to continue the item until Aug. 28 when they will vote on entering negotiations for a development agreement (DA) that would clear the way for redevelopment of the 3.85-acre site and a relocation plan for the property's current tenants.

I'm hoping they force the developer to reduce density and make the East Village more harmonious with the surrounding community. It's council's responsibility to do the right thing for all Santa Monicans and not blow it — especially in an election year.

TRAMMEL CROW'S MONSTER

The Planning Commission voted last month to advance yet another jumbo development on the city's eastern border to City Council. Multi-national developer Trammel Crow (TC Development, LLC) proposes a 197,971-square-foot, four-floor complex consisting of a mix of 300 apartments, retail space and parking for 554 vehicles on 2.5 acres at 3402 Pico Blvd.

Like the East Village, this development's large scale and mass along with potentially major traffic increases have Sunset Park and Pico neighbors up in arms this time.

Even without architectural renderings, City Hall planning staff described this as a "gateway project" that will provide, "good, healthy and diverse neighborhoods," with "a variety of (roof) heights and architectural elements and shapes to create visual interest." Keep in mind no architectural renderings have been submitted.

Staff promises it will contain "workforce housing in proximity to transit and major employment centers" (like the Trader Joe's up the block?) and "make a range of housing options available in multi-family neighborhoods to suit the spectrum on individual lifestyles and space needs."

Do we really care if this monster meets Land Use and Circulation Element (LUCE) criteria or that it will offset Tier 3 density issues with community benefits such as the usual affordable housing, bicycle parking, a community gym and green rooftops (for the project's residents only?) and "free" parking for neighborhood businesses? Free? Really?

Planning commissioners ruminated about traffic increases, pedestrian circulation and health threats to future residents who'd be living literally feet from Interstate 10. Despite reservations, commissioners still voted to forward the development to City Council to begin the process of turning this nightmare into reality. It will be before council in October.

Do you think neighbors have been sold out by clueless commissioners willing to buy a pig in a poke and a planning staff that should be writing brochure copy for developers?

SCHOOL BOARD SAYS, 'SHOW ME THE MONEY!'

The Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District approved the placing of a $358 million construction bond on the November ballot just after I wrote about this ("Proposed school bond is simply greed not need," July 30).

Bond money can only be used for building and renovations — not for classroom or operating expenses. School district voters approved a similar $268 million renovation and construction measure (BB) in 2006. Some of that money hasn't even been spent yet.

The district and its cheerleaders have placed fundraising measures on local ballots numerous times in the last 12 years. Expectations are that they will push for another parcel tax measure for the November 2014 ballot because there's never enough money to fill this district's bottomless financial hole.

MORE PARKING WOES

On July 9, I wrote ("City Hall is a spoil sport," My Write) that it was cheap of City Hall to charge Main Street Fourth of July Parade participants and visitors $3 to park in the Civic Center Parking Structure the morning of the parade. I mentioned the trouble I had with the ticket machine and how I was sorely inconvenienced by an "unreadable" ticket that prevented me from exiting the garage.

Fast forward to Aug. 7. I arrived at 4:30 p.m. to park for the Santa Monica Police Department's National Night Out. I tried to take a ticket needed to open the gate to enter the garage, except it was "out of folded entry tickets." I drove forward and a disembodied voice boomed out, "You need to take a ticket!" I yelled back, "It's out of tickets. I'm here for National Night Out. Parking is supposed to be free."

"Who are you?" I answered, "A volunteer working the event." "Someone will be down to load the machine," the voice crackled. "You better hurry," I responded. "Cars are lined up behind me waiting to get in."

Then, like the parting of the Red Sea, the parking gate swung open. I felt like Moses as I led a parade of vehicles into the promised land. When I left later that evening, the exit gates were open, so no problems getting out.

City Hall's crappy customer service hasn't improved one iota since last month. Maybe candidates running for council will straighten things out if elected. Will it make a difference? If you think so, I'll give you my pet unicorn.

Lost to the night

Dear EarthTalk:

Has anyone calculated the energy wasted at night by unnecessary lighting in and around buildings? What can we do to reduce our light footprint?

– Bill Rehkamp,

WASTED ENERGY: The federally-funded National Optical Astronomy Observatory reports that poorly-aimed, unshielded outdoor lights waste 17.4 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity in the U.S. each year.

Americans do squander a lot of electricity keeping things lit up at night while most of us sleep. This light blocks our view of the night sky and stars, creates glare hazards on roads, messes with our circadian sleep-wake rhythms, interrupts the patterns of nocturnal wildlife, and is by and large annoying. It also takes a financial toll: The federally funded National Optical Astronomy Observatory (NOAO) reports that poorly-aimed, unshielded outdoor lights waste $2 billion (17.4 billion kilowatt-hours) of energy in the U.S. each year.

NOAO has monitored outdoor lighting levels across the U.S. and beyond for the past six years through its GLOBE at Night program whereby citizen-scientists track nearby outdoor lighting levels over a two-week period beginning in late March and submit their observations to NOAO electronically. A simple star map provided by NOAO is all that participants need to track their slice of sky. "All it takes is a few minutes for a family to measure their night sky brightness by noting how many stars are missing from an easy-to-find constellation like Leo (in the northern hemisphere) or Crux (in the southern hemisphere)," says GLOBE at Night project director Connie Walker. "This tells us how much light is directed upwards into the sky."

Over the last six annual campaigns, participants from 100-plus countries have contributed almost 70,000 measurements, giving project organizers a detailed picture of light pollution globally. Unfortunately, analysis of the data shows that participants have seen brighter skies and fewer stars over time, meaning that light pollution is a growing problem. The free and publicly-accessible data gathered by the project is not only useful for educational purposes but can also help inform planners and policymakers on decisions about increasing public safety, reducing energy consumption and even identifying parks and green spaces that can serve as "sky oases" where city dwellers can appreciate the night sky from a safe, dark place.

According to the McDonald Observatory's Dark Skies Initiative (DSI), the solution to light pollution is 90 percent education and 10 percent technology. "We can reclaim vast amounts of energy currently wasted inadvertently into the night sky...by using light fixtures that are shielded to reflect light down where it is needed, as well as using the smallest number of lights and lowest wattage bulbs necessary to effectively light an area," says DSI. Leading by example through the installation of downward-pointing outdoor light fixtures is a great place for home and building owners to start: "Once people see it in action, and understand its implications for cost savings and enhanced visibility, they are far more likely to adopt good lighting practices on their own." Another group committed to reducing light pollution, the International Dark-Sky Association, maintains a list of distributors that sell approved fixtures.

Some cities have instituted standards to limit outdoor night lighting to protect citizens against unwanted light (or "light trespass"). The International Dark-Sky Association has developed a set of model lighting ordinances that cities and towns can adopt and modify to suit their needs accordingly. Also, the U.S. Green Building Council has incorporated a credit for buildings seeking to reduce the amount of light trespass and sky glow through its Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) program.

The Q Line

In the weeds

City officials have so far refused to grant a business license to the owner of a laboratory that tests medical marijuana samples for potency and the presence of pesticides and mold.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Is banning a marijuana laboratory where no pot is sold a solid plan, or should City Hall ease up and allow the business?

Contact qline@smdp.com before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. You can also call 310-573-8354.

Fire fee ignites anger as bills go out to owners

DON THOMPSON
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. More than 800,000 Californians who own property in wildfire country will begin receiving bills this week for a new annual fire-protection fee, rekindling outrage among rural residents and leading to a likely lawsuit seeking to overturn the surcharge.

The fee, passed by Democrats in the Legislature and signed by Gov. Jerry Brown last year, is intended to raise an estimated $84 million in its first year for fire-prevention efforts. The annual charge can run as high as $150 for property owners with a single occupied dwelling, although there is a $35 discount for those who already pay a local tax for fire protection.

The discount will apply to about 95 percent of rural property owners, but it's not enough to quell the anger in the parts of California where the fee will apply.

"Everybody that knows about it is upset, but I think 90 percent of the public has no idea it's coming. It's going to be quite a shock," said John Little of Laytonville, chief of the Long Valley Fire Protection District in rural Mendocino County.

He said the $115 annual bill will hurt residents in his 250-square-mile district. The region, between the Mendocino National Forest and the Pacific Ocean, has a jobless rate of 18 percent and many seniors living on fixed incomes.

The bills start going out Monday and will have been issued to more than 825,000 property owners by year's end. They are being sent to counties in alphabetical order, so residents of Alameda, Alpine and Amador counties will be first in line.

The fee was imposed on those who own property within the 31 million rural acres covered by the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection, a responsibility area that includes about one-third of the state.

Fire danger there is growing more extreme, according to a recent University of California, Merced study prepared for the California Energy Commission. Climate change, development and changes to the landscape may double the fire risk to rural homes over the next 40 years, researchers found. They predict the greatest increase in risk in Northern California's foothills and mountains.

Brown sought the fee mostly to help close the state's budget deficit, calling it "a fee consistent with the 'beneficiary pays principle'," in his signing message. If additional money can be raised and dedicated to CalFire, he reasoned, a similar amount could go to other state services that have experienced deep budget cuts.

The fee will help prevent more spending cuts for state firefighters, department spokesman Daniel Berlant said.

Over the last 18 months, the department has dealt with an $80 million budget cut by hiring 700 fewer seasonal firefighters, closing an air base in Fresno and mothballing five bulldozers and both of its fire engines serving the Lake Tahoe area because it lacked enough firefighters to operate them. Fire protection around Lake Tahoe is now provided by local fire districts and the U.S. Forest Service.

The fee will pay for the department's existing fire-prevention efforts, including thinning brush and trees and clearing around homes.

Soon after the bills go out, the Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association plans to file a lawsuit to have the fee declared unconstitutional.

Association president Jon Coupal said the fee is actually a tax, which requires a two-thirds vote in the Legislature to enact. The fire fee passed on simple majority votes in the Assembly and Senate, without support from any Republican lawmakers.

Adding to the confusion is a notice sent by the state Board of Equalization to alert affected property owners that a bill for the new fire fee would be coming. The notice shows a picture of a firefighter spraying water on flames, giving the impression that the fee is for suppression rather than its stated purpose of prevention. It further says property owners have 30 days to send their payment or "protest the amount of the bill in writing."

After her son was born, Karath withdrew from her film and television career to care for him.

In Greenwich, she thought the affluence there would translate to compassion and educational opportunity. Like many parents with special needs children, she instead learned that most school districts are unprepared to offer the individualized lesson plans most states mandate.

"Eric was happy in Lisa's class," Karath said simply. "The parent of every child she teaches will tell you the same. Her secret? It might sound corny, but it's love. And flexibility and intelligence and indefatigable energy."

The needs and abilities of brain-damaged children vary widely. Some are unable to communicate verbally. Some have uncontrollable behavioral challenges. Some are mentally very bright, but unable to learn in a traditional classroom.

Szilagyi's approach to teaching was heavily influenced from working with her own special needs daughter (22-year-old Emily). After working as a special educational aide for five years at MHS, Szilagyi returned to college to get credentialed and then took on the job as a full-time special education teacher.

"Each kid is really unique and requires a different approach to education," said Szilagyi. "We all continue to learn after we leave high school. Special needs children continue to learn different life skills as they grow older. It might be that they don't learn to read until they are in their 20s, but they are still learning."

While Szilagyi is able to provide a nurturing and creative learning environment for her students through 12th grade, state-supported programs are cut off for such individuals at age 18. As Karath described it, the only day programs for adults that exist for continuing education and training are so few that the system is overwhelmed.

After searching unsuccessfully for available programs herself, Karath approached Szilagyi with an idea.

"We created a foundation that would offer a lifelong learning program for special needs adults," Karath said. "When we began this, parents started coming out of the woodwork, all saying, 'We can't find anything for our older children.' So we found a group of dedicated parents to help form the foundation."

The Aurelia Foundation was established with the goal of creating a day center that offers continuing education to mentally disabled young adults and beyond in life skills, recreational activities, and vocational training and job support. Staffing would be intensely personal, with a 1:1 assistance ratio up to a 3:1 ratio.

Activities will include reading, math, speech, computer skills, occupational and physical therapy, and field trip activity. Sometimes, the biggest triumphs come with conquering ordinary chores, like learning to run a washer and dryer. Sometimes it's successfully negotiating a shopping expedition to Ralph's.

"I try to take my students out into the real world at least once a week," Szilagyi said. "Whether it's shopping or movies or the farmers' market, each trip offers great opportunities to these kids to learn how to function in real life."

Ideally, "real life" means learning a vocational skill and establishing micro enterprises, perhaps in art or craft products that can be sold at a local farmers' market.

Karath and Szilagyi believe they have a viable business plan and a motivated board of directors. Now all they need is funding and a space to establish their Aurelia Center. Fundraising has just begun.

"We are poised to prepare a lot of these young adults to become as self-sustaining as they will ever be," Szilagyi said. "There's a state-sponsored Workability Program that helps match special needs young adults with businesses that need hires. I've placed kids at Becker Surf Shop and Vital Zuman, myself.

"Most of these young people will never be able to live full-time without assistance," Szilagyi continued. "But ongoing education empowers them to be the best they can be."

Karath said the idea was to create a program that could be replicated across the country and in doing so, open up worlds that have long been unavailable to brain-disordered populations.

"I see people who have vastly more compassion for their animals than they do for the disabled population," Karath said. "We're hoping The Aurelia Foundation will help change people's perceptions of the disabled for the better."

solo, but Universal might really cash in if the studio managed to lure Damon back.

"The dream-team scenario of a 'Bourne' with both Damon and Renner would just be irresistible," said Paul Dergarabedian, box-office analyst for Hollywood.com. "That would be cool. I'd be first in line for that."

"The Campaign" stars Ferrell and Galifianakis as rivals in a mud-slinging congressional election. Distributor Warner Bros. hopes real-life politics can help keep the movie afloat as the election season enters the homestretch.

"We hope so," Warner distribution boss Fellman said. "We hope they run their campaigns a little more professionally than the one in the movie, but sometimes, you have to wonder."

Sony's "Hope Springs," featuring Streep and Jones as a couple in marriage therapy at a weeklong retreat, had a modest start but drew strongly among older women, a crowd that does not tend to rush out in big numbers over opening weekend.

Rory Bruer, Sony's head of distribution, said the studio hopes the film will have a long shelf life at theaters as women talk it up to friends.

"The Dark Knight Rises" is nearing $400 million domestically and will become only the second film in Warner Bros. history to reach that mark. The first was 2008's "The Dark Knight," the middle chapter in director Christopher Nolan's Batman trilogy, which topped out at $533.3 million.

Revenues for the finale are running 12 percent behind "The Dark Knight," which had climbed to $441.6 million at the same point in its theatrical run.

While the Colorado shootings may have scared away some viewers, the Olympics have dampened Hollywood's overall business as fans stay home to watch the games. "The Dark Knight" also had an advantage the new film lacks: a mesmerizing, Academy Award-winning performance by Heath Ledger as the Joker, with the actor's death helping to fuel anticipation for the film.

"All things considered, 'The Dark Knight Rises' is doing incredibly well," Dergarabedian said.

Expo Light Rail Line: Construction

Please note the following activities:
1. Street parking: striping and signage:
Work crews will complete installing parking meters on side streets listed below. Construction activities include installing meters, curb paint and signs.
• Seventh Street from Colorado Avenue to Olympic Boulevard
• Ninth, 10th, 12th, Euclid, 15th and 16th streets from Colorado Avenue to Broadway.
2. Sewer relocations on Colorado between Lincoln and 14th Street. Expect daytime lane closures on Colorado, one lane in each direction will be maintained. Expect delays if using Colorado. Note the loss of parking on Colorado but replacement parking is provided on adjacent streets.
3. Watermain relocation on 26th Street: Work crews will be relocating an existing water line currently located underground at various points along the Expo right-of-way in the city of Santa Monica. Please note that only one northbound lane will be maintained on 26th Street between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m., expect delays. Noise levels will be monitored to ensure work performed is within the necessary compliance levels.
4. Watermain relocation on Stewart Street: Work crews will be relocating an existing water line currently located underground at various points along the Expo right-of-way in the city of Santa Monica. Work is scheduled to commence the week of Aug. 6 on Stewart Street between Olympic and Exposition boulevards. Please note that only one northbound lane will be maintained on Stewart Street between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Traffic service officers will assist with traffic control as needed.
5. Centinela Bridge: Majority of the work will take place in the city of Los Angeles right-of-way, with the west abutment being built within the city of Santa Monica. Construction of the Centinela Bridge will be implemented in stages.
6. Soil removal and grading within the Expo right-of-way (ROW). Expect additional truck activates on Centinela, Stewart and 26th streets.
7. South sidewalk is closed on Colorado between 14th to 16th streets.
For more information about the Expo Line project, visit BuildExpo.org or call (213) 922-EXPO (3976).

Streetlight conversion project

The contractor will modify existing street light systems. Work will be taking place on Main Street from Pico Boulevard to the Civic Auditorium. The contractor will tie in the new street light multiple circuit to an Edison vault in the middle of Main Street at Pico. This work will impact the sidewalk on the east side of Main, close travel lanes in the northbound part of Main, and impact bike lanes. No southbound left-turn on Main Street at Pico and no parking on Main. Proper signs will be provided to guide all modes of traffic through the work zone. For more information, please contact Hany Demitri at (310) 458-8721, ext. 5385.

20th/Cloverfield improvement project

Construction activities on 20th Street and Cloverfield Boulevard between the Santa Monica Freeway (I-10) and Pico Boulevard include potholing, driveway reconstruction, irrigation line installation, curb ramp modification and street light pole foundation installation. Said work will involve lane closures. One northbound lane and one southbound lane will be closed on Cloverfield, and one northbound lane on 20th, however through traffic will be allowed. Traffic control will be in place during construction and will maintain one lane of traffic in each direction at all times. Left and right turn movements may be restricted at times. Please use alternate routes whenever possible. For more info, please contact Jim Litzel, Black & Veatch, (310) 863-4991

The GOP remains strong in some regional areas, and its candidates are threatening Democrats in several congressional contests. New district boundaries drawn by an independent commission — a power once held by state lawmakers and party insiders — opened the way for competitive contests.

In a swing district in the Central Valley, the 9th Congressional District, Ivy League-educated law student Ricky Gill is in a tight race with the Democratic incumbent, Rep. Jerry McNerney. In the narrowly divided 10th Congressional District in central California, Republican Rep. Jeff Denham is locked in a competitive race with former astronaut Jose Hernandez, a Democrat.

But the Republicans' challenges statewide are perhaps no better illustrated than in Elizabeth Emken, an autism activist who is challenging Feinstein.

Emken is in her first run for statewide office and has struggled to raise funds. She finished last among four candidates in her only previous campaign, a congressional primary in 2010.

At the Burbank meeting, she acknowledged even fellow Republicans might not know anything about her. She pleaded with party members for donations while depicting the incumbents as vulnerable, out of date and out of touch.

Emken never mentioned the incumbent's age — Feinstein is 79 — but said "there is nothing modern about her."

Feinstein consultant Bill Carrick called Emken a "rhetorical joke" and said Feinstein has no intention of debating her, despite requests from Emken for a series of face-offs. "She is not a serious candidate in terms of her credentials or her experience," Carrick said.

In a statement, Emken praised Romney's vice presidential pick, saying "I have always been impressed by Ryan's fiscal discipline and his vision for solving our most challenging problems."

The party's struggles in California contrast with other states, where the GOP is thriving. In 2010, Republicans notched big victories in Congress, governor's offices and statehouses around the nation, but California Democrats made a clean sweep of statewide contests and padded their majority in the Legislature.

Conservative positions on immigration and social issues have long made it difficult for GOP candidates in California to lure middle-ground voters, polling suggests. However, many party leaders say that the GOP can be energized by hewing to conservative principles, not straying from them.

When he was in office, former Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger warned state Republicans that they were in for a future of disappointment unless they shifted to the political center, seizing issues usually associated with the Democrats, including climate change and health care reform.

"We are dying at the box office," he said.

Party leaders say finances can improve quickly, and so-called super PACs have been funneling money into state races.

However, recent government filings suggest the state GOP is virtually broke. Del Beccaro, when asked how he intended to resolves the party's financial problems, said "we need to raise more money."

class rather than the state-subsidized fee of $46 per unit.

Why is Tsang hopeful? It's his belief in SMC, its students, teachers and the community that supports it.

"This is a great college with a great future," Tsang said. "The current crisis also brings out the best in the college. We know we are one of the best colleges in California. We know what we have here is quality, and we know what we have here is unique."

The Daily Press met with Tsang last week to discuss the financial climate, the reactions to its contract education proposal and how SMC will prepare its students for the future job market.

Daily Press: How did you get into education? Did you think you would be a college president?

(Tsang started out with a teaching position at Stanford University, where he'd gotten his graduate degree. He left to lead a national research project, but became dissatisfied with the work.)

Chui Tsang: At that time, someone told me about this organization that was doing work in the community, offering job training, offering language skills and computer skills in the community in San Francisco. The target population was immigrants, refugees, the unemployed or underemployed people in San Francisco.

It was called Career Resources Development Center. I thought that was interesting, and I went and interviewed for that job. They were looking for a director for the organization of about 20 people. And of course at that time the most management experience I had was to manage three or four research assistants part time. I was hired, and so I worked in the community. It was a nonprofit community-based organization located in the Tenderloin of San Francisco for 10 years. It was great.

It was also there that I found my passion, I found that that is what I wanted to do and I was also … able to master the skills I would need to do a job like that.

So you asked how did I become college president? That was the best preparation I ever had to become president because I had to do basically all of the tasks that one has to do as president but in a much smaller organization.

DP: What was the part of the job you felt the least natural?

CT: The part about having to go to City Hall and pound the table sometimes and jostle for position to get money from the city and from the state government and also from Washington, D.C. I had to do a lot of that.

(Tsang went from there to a position as dean at San Francisco City College and later the position of president at San Jose City College, where he stayed nine years before moving on to Santa Monica College.)

DP: Why community college?

CT: I have an affinity for community college, I understand community college. I went to community college after I graduated from high school. It was at community college that I really woke up to what my interest in education was, really.

Community college, we all understand that it's the open access. What is real open access? Open access is when we don't care who they are; the background of students is not such a concern. We provide an opportunity to students.

We get the students who haven't done quite well before. Some of them have done very well, and they come here because they know the place, but we have a lot of students who are just … searching for themselves, searching for a future, searching for the right path for themselves. And it is in community college that so often they find their future.

This is the remarkable part of it. Because I experienced it myself and I know how it works.

DP: What do you think is the future in terms of the job market? What do you prepare students for?

CT: This is a technology and … modern-day economy. It requires people who are educated to add value to any organization. They have to be well-skilled, well-trained and they need to be able to work with other people. They need to be able to solve problems. And they need to be able to adapt to new environments. Those are the things that all companies are looking for.

We have a natural asset because we are a very diverse community and we counted up, at the time of the last survey we had of students, we know that over 40 percent came from a home that spoke a language other than English. So this is a natural asset we have with our population and we are going to make use of it instead of looking at them as an "English learner." These are students that have a natural advantage. They have a cross-cultural background, they have a bilingual background. When they adapt to mainstream society they have already mastered the skills of working across cultures. Instead of looking at these as educational deficits, we need to look at these as assets.

DP: Any specific industries that are hot right now?

CT: Let's take a look at software animation. This is a really robust program. It is one of the best programs. We have probably the most robust program in California. We offer over 50 different courses. Those courses are so over-subscribed. And not that other places won't offer it, but they probably won't be able to offer it. Because we're so lucky we're here in Southern California. We can find the people to teach and we can teach the latest.

Other areas that we are working on, that we are pushing for, (are) science technology, engineering and math.

That is the foundation to many jobs in the future. This is the fundamental training that they get here. When they have the fundamentals they can go on to get a four-year degree or a graduate-level degree. Many of the jobs in this area require graduate degrees, but they all have to start somewhere.

One of the most important areas that we have to provide a good foundation is skills. Those are really important because that's what we are. We provide lower-division education, and that we want our students when they leave here, they will go to the university for their third year or fourth year of college very well prepared. And we've been successful at that. Many of these great universities come here to recruit from Santa Monica.

We send hundreds to USC, hundreds to

UCLA, hundreds to Berkeley every year. Even Columbia comes here. They know our students, they come here. They accept 20 to 30 students every year from SMC. We're the school they accept the most transfers outside of New York City.

DP: What's the status of the contract education proposal?

CT: There is a program called the self-funded program that we are still looking at, but we are not in a hurry to implement a program, so we continue to study it, talk to people, see if there's a need for it. But right now, what we want to do is focus our attention on the November election.

Why is that so important? There's a proposal there that would mean a world of difference for us in community college, for this college. The impact of the failing of that proposal would mean we would immediately have to reduce our offerings by 500 sections on top of everything else we've already lost.

(Tsang is referring to Proposition 30, a measure by Gov. Jerry Brown that would increase taxes on the wealthiest Californians and raise the sales tax by one-quarter of one percent. SMC has cut 1,100 sections since the 2008-09 school year.)

DP: Were you surprised by the reaction to the self-funded idea?

(Self-funded classes, called the "two-tier system" by its opponents, would have required students to pay the full cost of their tuition in the summer. Protests, which some said were instigated by outsiders rather than SMC students, resulted in a pepper-spraying incident that made national news.)

CT: Yes. Because this is a program that harms nobody but creates new opportunities for those who choose to make for themselves this opportunity at a time when the state's offerings have been reduced by so much. We know there are a lot of students who are not able to continue their education because they don't have the classes. Not just in this system, but in the UCs, CSUs and community college.

For example, this summer we are one of the few community colleges that's offering a full summer program in the entire (Los Angeles) basin.

So we were able to offer a robust, fairly robust summer program of 600 sections. East Los Angeles College has 200 sections and is the second highest in the entire Los Angeles basin.

Now, we also deficit spent $8 million. We're trying to maintain the services to meet the need, however, we don't have an unlimited amount of money. We're running out of money, and that's the message we tell people. We can't pay for it anymore.

DP: What is the status of the independent review of the pepper spray incident?

CT: It's ongoing … We want them to work on it diligently and thoroughly, and to make sure that we get a report that will be useful to us. We will use it to improve everything in the college. How the college will need to operate, the policies we may need to implement that will be different than what we have right now, how we need to educate our students to behave in the public and make sure they understand what free speech is, and how to express them in a way that would not jeopardize themselves or harm other people.

All of these are questions that we want the group to review and make recommendations to.

Capuano holds Miami Marlins hitless until seventh inning, Dodgers win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI Chris Capuano was well aware he was working on a no-hit bid, thanks to a fan who constantly gave him updates.

Capuano held Miami hitless until the seventh inning and Hanley Ramirez drove in three runs against his former team, leading the Los Angeles Dodgers over the Marlins 5-0 Sunday.

"I started thinking about it a little bit probably after the fifth, sixth," Capuano said. "I had a nice heckler today when I was in the on-deck circle that kept reminding me. I actually turned to him and said, 'Yeah, I know.'"

Capuano (11-8) shut down the Marlins until Jose Reyes lined a clean single to center field with one out in the seventh.

"Jose's got a quick bat. I left one over the middle and he smoked it," Capuano said.

Capuano allowed two hits in eight innings, striking out nine. The 33-year-old lefty had lost his last three starts with a 6.75 ERA in that span.

"He's tough and he's tough for a younger club," Dodgers manager Don Mattingly said. "They've got some older guys, but they've got some younger guys that he can really pull the string and rock you back and forth, hard, soft, hard, soft. That's tough for young hitters."

Ramirez, acquired in a trade with the Marlins on July 25, hit a sacrifice fly in the third. He added a two-run single in eighth, giving him 500 career RBIs.

"His swing is great and if he just takes his hits, he's going to drive in a ton of runs, but he's going to hit more home runs too," Mattingly said. "Hanley can hit. He sees the ball early. He's a talented cat."

Ramirez went 6 for 13 with five RBIs in his first series against his former club. He was booed before each at-bat.

"Only my first at-bat (was emotional)," Ramirez said. "After that everything was back to normal. I was trying to do my job."

The Dodgers took a 1-0 lead into the eighth, and Heath Bell relieved Marlins starter Wade LeBlanc (1-2). After getting one out, Bell allowed four straight hits, including the single by Ramirez and an RBI single by Andre Ethier.

Luis Cruz added an RBI double off Chris Hatcher to push the Dodgers lead to 5-0.

"The game went from a very good game to very bad game in one inning," Marlins manager Ozzie Guillen said.

Capuano allowed a bloop single by Nick Green in the eighth before Jamey Wright came on to pitch a perfect ninth. Capuano threw 69 of 102 pitches for strikes.

"He's got an unbelievable changeup and when he throws that fastball at 88, it looks like 100," said Reyes, who played with Capuano last season with the New York Mets.

LeBlanc pitched a season-high seven innings, allowing one run and six hits.

NOTES: Matt Treanor was the Dodgers' catcher. His wife, Olympic beach volleyball gold medalist Misty May-Treanor, was at the game. ... The Marlins optioned C Brett Hayes to Triple-A New Orleans.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card℠ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Head home tonight, Aries

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You have been maintaining a high level of activity and are full of spunk. Some people might be taken aback by your frenetic energy and wish you would slow down. Tonight: Happily head home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You could be a little overwhelmed by everything you need to do. You express gentleness when speaking through your expressions and body language. Tonight: Catch up on a friend's news.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Realize what is happening, and take responsibility for your role. A friend or associate acts in a most unexpected manner. Buy a token of appreciation in order to demonstrate your support for this unpredictable person. Tonight: Pick up tickets to a game or concert. Make it a treat.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ You wake up feeling great. Throw in an impromptu activity, and you won't need your morning coffee. You feel as if you need to contain a situation. You cannot control someone, but you can choose to not be involved. Tonight: All smiles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Please note what is happening behind the scenes. You could be surprised by forthcoming news. Clearly, a loved one cares. Be willing to have a long-overdue discussion with this person. Tonight: Vanish. Do your thing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Zero in on what is important. Do not sell yourself short. Others know, and are receptive to, your talents and ideas. Do nothing halfway. Pressure builds to return calls, but make it a priority to attend all of your meetings first. Tonight: Only where the action is.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Be aware of your limitations, and understand that you will need to take the lead anyway. You are juggling two very different interests right now. Understand that sometimes this is necessary. Think positively. Tonight: To the wee hours.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Read between the lines. Understand how someone might be too vulnerable to share his or her feelings. You see right through control games, but out of kindness, you'll choose not to mention it. Rising energy levels could drive you. Tonight: Make sure music is playing wherever you are.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Deal with an associate or loved one directly. You might not be aware of what is happening with this person, but you'll have an idea by the end of the day. Rebelliousness is connected to a need to have control. Tonight: Opt for togetherness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Defer to others with an understanding of what you want out of the situation, and be sure to explain those terms. Expect only a positive response. Someone still might be challenging and doesn't realize that you aren't the one to get into a control game with. Tonight: Just don't be alone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Dive into your day and clear out high-priority items early on. You might be surprised by a friend who pops in on you unexpectedly. Let an associate reveal more of his or her feelings. Tonight: Choose a relaxing activity.

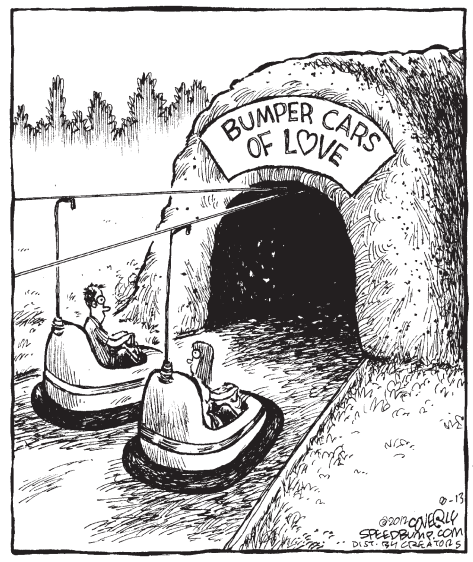

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Be sensitive to the possibilities that surround a creative endeavor. You might decide to go for a different style or new way of handling this situation. Tonight: So what if it is Monday?

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year you become more resilient than ever before. You learn to go along with the unexpected, as you see it as exciting rather than a problem. You express your feelings in a vulnerable yet thrilling manner, and you touch many people in your life as a result. At the same time, you grow and transform to a more dynamic, easygoing personality. If you are single, you attract many people. Your job will be to choose the right person. Many of you will enjoy this process. If you are attached, the two of you relate on an even more positive level. Relax more together. A SCORPIO could play a significant role in your emotional life.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ According to a June lawsuit by a former student, Western Nevada College's course in human sexuality was so over-the-top that it might be described as a collection of instructor Tom Kubistant's erotic fantasies about college-age kids. Among Kubistant's demands, according to "K.R.," were keeping a masturbation journal (and ramping up the activity to twice the student's pre-course level), disclosing one's uninhibited sexual fantasies that in some cases were described by the instructor to the class at large, and conducting discussion groups on the uses of sex toys and lubricants. By the fifth week, K.R. claimed, Kubistant had abandoned his schedule of topics and begun to dwell extensively on "the female orgasm." Kubistant's instructions appear to fit the faculty handbook's definition of sexual harassment.

■ "Deer stands," classically, are jerry-built platforms hunters climb onto to spot deer in the distance, but county officials in Duluth, Minn., complained in July that the woods are becoming cluttered with elaborate tree houses that are too often abandoned on public land at the close of the season. One official was alarmed by "mansions" -- tree stands, he told the Duluth News Tribune, with "stairways, decks, shingled roofs, commercial windows, insulation, propane heaters, carpeting, lounge chairs, tables, and even the occasional generator."
