NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ A 47-year-old man was arrested in Milwaukee in June and charged with stabbing a 54-year-old man in (according to the police report) an argument about not having an argument.

■ Marine veteran Christopher Marlowe, 25, was arrested in New Orleans in June and charged with shooting Army veteran Erik Beelman after an argument over which branch of service is tougher.

■ Pamela Majdan, 23, was charged with domestic battery in Wood Dale, Ill., on Memorial Day after allegedly repeatedly beating her sister, Joyce, 31, in a dispute over who had caught the most pieces of candy tossed during the town's holiday parade.

■ In June, Betty Jean Barachie was sentenced to 27 months in prison for embezzling $1.5 million from her employer so that she could indulge a mindless compulsive-shopping habit; among her inexplicable, 1,500-item haul were 58 coats, 16 chain saws, more than 3,000 books, and a John Deere tractor.

■ Nurse Christopher Irvin, 32, was charged in April with molesting a comatose 4-year-old girl under his care at Children's Hospital in San Diego; he told police he had touched the girl's genitals only "to see if I liked it." (He said he didn't and that, because he wasn't sexually aroused, he must not be attracted to children.)

Tenants banking on city

Building's landmark designation could stave off evictions

BY KEVIN HERRERA

SAN VICENTE BLVD. — A synagogue is planning to displace dozens of tenants here so it can demolish what may be a historic, 28-unit apartment complex and replace it with a combination of subsidized housing and high-end condominiums for Jewish refugees persecuted in the Middle East.

Tenants of Teriton Apartments, many of whom are seniors, learned about the plan last Friday during a contentious meeting with property owners Or Khaim Hashalom, an alleged non-profit, religious organization that is requesting City Hall make a determination as to whether the complex should be considered a historic landmark.

If so, Or Khaim Hashalom would be prevented from demolishing it and from evicting tenants, something which would create a significant financial hardship for the group and deprive it of full use of the site, said members of Hashalom's execu-

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★DYNAMIC ★★★★★ POSITIVE ★★★ AVERAGE ★★SO-SO ★DIFFICULT

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ Money does make a difference. Your decisions need to focus on communication and effectiveness. You might have to cut your budget in order to purchase something new or to make a change financially. Be more aware of others' spending. Tonight: Scan your budget.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You might want to rethink a situation more carefully. How you deal with someone and what goes on could change radically if you let it. Think in terms of positive changes and new experiences. Easily, you could be overwhelmed by so much information and news. Tonight: Live it up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★ You might not like what you hear, but it would be wise to absorb information and simply not react. What you hear could radically change shortly. Lighten up about the possibilities. Your instincts need to come out. Tonight: Take some personal time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Emphasize your long-term goals and don't get caught up in the immediate situation — you will be much happier. What comes out could open up another perspective. Curb your spending, if possible. Tonight: Where your friends are.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ You have energy and charisma, but those who are in charge could be touchy and difficult. Deal only with what you must, but go in a new direction. Not every path is paved with flak. You simply need to find the right road. Tonight: A force to be dealt with.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ You might be more out of sorts than you realize. Understand what makes someone tick, and you're halfway there. Take time to step back and look at the complete situation. Tonight: Easy does it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Friends might be pushing you in one direction, whereas a serious relationship will provoke another response. Think in terms of gains and growth. Deal with people individually, honoring your priorities. Tonight: Easy does it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Others certainly raise the roof and cause you to step back. Being out of the chaos is the best place to be. You don't want to get caught up in the present undercurrents. Let others run the show. Happily head in the direction you want. Tonight: Say yes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Your perspective and information don't click with another's actions. Become more observant, and know that something is out of kilter. Focus on your routine, though do schedule an outing to the theater or a concert. Tonight: Get some exercise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Your creativity could be needed when dealing with a child and loved one. Contradiction surrounds people or plans. Step back and decide how you can do it all. Carefully listen to what someone is sharing. You'll gain insight. Tonight: Do you really care that it's Monday?

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Pressure builds from others. How you decide to deal with it depends on their demands. You can decide that everyone is unreasonable. You say what is necessary to let others understand what your limits are. Tonight: Happy at home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You talk up a storm. You might get better results if you pull back, understand and listen. The whole story hasn't revealed itself yet. Think about moving in a new direction. Don't let energy become diffuse. Tonight: Hang out.

Venice Arts program gets big coporation support

By Daily Press staff

The Los Angeles Times Family Fund (LATFF) and the Starbucks Foundation have recently awarded $25,000 and $20,000, respectively, to support Venice Arts' innovative Art Mentoring program for low-income youth. The Art Mentoring program offers intensive, long-term mentoring at ratios of 1:1 to 1:3 and provides opportunities for advanced participants to use Venice Arts' digital labs, darkroom, equipment and gallery.

Support from LATFF and Starbucks will nurture young people such as sisters Francesca and Alex Thomas, who joined Venice Arts' programs nearly two years ago. Francesca said, "I used to wonder what I was going to be good at. Now I found it: dark-room. I found my niche." Her goal is to be "the best printer ever. I'm getting better and better..." So good, in fact, that during the spring she worked as a Youth Art Mentor (YAM) and, this Fall, will be the first young person to fill a newly expanded YAM position. About mentoring Francesca said, "It's cool working with (Lead Photographer) Joanne, teaching other kids what I know... and being in charge."

Francesca has come a long way in the nearly two years since she, Alex and their mother moved from South L.A. to Venice. Until that time, the girls hadn't had much exposure to the arts. However, when they learned about the opportunity with Venice Arts during a presentation at church, Alex said, "Photography was the first thing that caught my ear. From there we knew we would sign up." Now, they are dedicated young artists who, between them, have taken more than 20 classes including digital arts and film with photography remaining their passion.

They are particularly moved by documentary photography and think it is an important way to expose world problems. "I used to think that artists didn't matter," Alex said. "But then I learned you can...really make a difference. When I started (at Venice Arts) I thought photography would be a fun hobby, but now it's a big part of who I am." She describes how she used to look for a pretty picture, but now she looks for the best image.

Venice Arts considers foundation supporters such as LATFF and the Starbucks Foundation — as well as corporations, individuals and the public sector — as partners in making a difference in young people's lives.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Terrorist weak spot
Editor:
 Muslim terrorists plot to blow up a dozen airliners. Maybe the only thing Muslim terrorists care about is their religion. Perhaps a promise to destroy Mecca if there is another massive terrorist attack will deter them. Threats to their own lives does not deter them, as they plan to martyr themselves in these attacks. Back in the days of the Cold War, the Soviet leaders could be reasoned with, they didn't want to die any more than our people did. So World War III never happened.
 Threat of death does not deter a fanatic. Maybe only the threat of what they do care about can stop these "people."

Lieberman support is predictable
Editor:
 Of course, the Republicans are supporting Joe Lieberman, Independent, in Connecticut, and will pour $$$$ into his campaign, hoping it totally divides the Democratic vote (in the primaries, Lieberman and Ned Lamont were, unfortunately, very close), which will give the GOP the Senate seat.
 But Lieberman does not have the good of the people of Connecticut or America at heart, or he would get out of the race — unless, of course, he wants the GOP to gain that seat. (It's so embarrassing that he's Jewish.)

Cheers for Lamont
Editor:
 We should extend Ned Lamont a well-deserved congratulations for his upset over Joe "Bush Lovin" Lieberman. It's about time to clean house in the Democratic camp by endorsing more new candidates with new ideas instead of recycling the same old dogs like Joey L. The Democrats should be like a football team in the rebuilding stages: mixing in young rookies that are driven to make an impact for the future with a few loyal and "somewhat honest" veterans like Kennedy, Feinstein, Kucinich, Boxer, Waters and Conyers to guide them with experience. With a formula like that, Democrats can distinguish the difference between those with the backbone to stand up against the evil insanity of President "BS" and his cronies or be like Hillary and Joey L., who supported an illegal war and are endorsed by corporate lobbyists like Rupert Murdoch, Time Warner and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.
 Our time has come to change for the better because the GOP still has and always had stupidly bad ideas.

SMRR wisely keeps O'Connor

MY WRITE
 BY BILL BAUER

The Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights (SMRR) political machine endorsed councilpersons Kevin McKeown and Pam O'Connor, along with school activist, Gleam Davis for City Council seats in the upcoming election during their annual congress on Aug. 6.
 There was a move to dump O'Connor, who seems to have amassed more political enemies this year than former City Councilman Michael Feinstein did two years ago. In 2004, Feinstein didn't receive SMRR's endorsement and came in a distant ninth and lost his council seat.
 The Santa Monica Coalition for a Livable City (SMCLC), which I find to be the smartest and most savvy of the civic groups around, uncovered a slew of donations from Jan. 1, 2005 to June 30, 2005, from Macerich Company executives to O'Connor's still open, debt-ridden 2002 campaign. Thirteen Macerich executives contributed a total of $3,100, according to campaign disclosures posted on the City's web site. Macerich is the owner of Santa Monica Place mall.
 Two years ago, Macerich announced a controversial plan to completely rebuild the aging mall with underground parking, office space and three 21-floor market-rate condominium towers -- a plan that was later withdrawn. In January 2005, "O'Connor voted to move forward with an expedited timetable for a new proposal." Two months later, O'Connor received the contributions about the same time, she "lunches with Macerich execs, knowing she may vote on their (new) project in the Fall," stated an SMCLC flyer circulated at the SMRR congress.
 O'Connor claims she did nothing wrong. But, accepting campaign donations from a developer of a multimillion dollar project that must have City Council's "OK" raises serious questions about her judgment and ethics in my book.
 Former planning commissioner Kelly Olsen had his fangs out, too. In a letter posted just before SMRR's congress on surfsantamonica.com, Olsen charged that O'Connor joined with big developer and hotel-backed council members Michael Feinstein, Bob Holbrook and Herb Katz in years past "to create a new pro-developer Council."
 Olsen accused O'Connor of siding on development issues with now-Mayor Holbrook and Councilmen Katz and Bobby Shriver, who replaced Feinstein in 2004. Olsen also accuses O'Connor of betraying her SMRR colleagues and playing politics with her "true ally" — Bob Holbrook — at the detriment of fellow SMRR, Kevin McKeown.

 Olsen sandbags O'Connor by writing her pro-development voting pattern has put her in the same league as Holbrook, "who is in bed with the developers and does take there (sic) money and does vote their way." Holbrook, who is seeking a fifth council term this year, is once again being backed by a coalition of hotels, developers and business interests.
 People still talk about O'Connor, a preservation planner by occupation, reluctantly telling a room full of surprised "Proposition A" advocates three years ago at a Franklin School forum that she supported the March 2003 "mail-in" ballot measure that would've allowed single family homeowners to refuse city landmark status for their homes.
 Many believed that she lied about supporting Prop A so as to not anger a room packed with its supporters. Later in the campaign, she changed her mind and joined SMRR in opposing the measure, which ultimately failed.
 SMRR was wise in endorsing O'Connor. If denied their support, I could easily see her hiking up her skirt, jogging over to the opposition and seeking their endorsement. Because most Santa Monica voters are uninformed about local politics and often vote for a familiar name, a seated councilperson, especially a woman, is assured thousands of votes out of the box.
 With hundreds of thousands of dollars in support from Casa Del Mar and Shutters hotels and other business interests, O'Connor would have an excellent chance of keeping her seat without SMRR's resources. And, if rejected by SMRR, O'Connor could "get even" by breaking SMRR's grip on City Council if Holbrook and McKeown were re-elected.
 So it's McKeown, O'Connor and Davis on SMRR's ticket, and most likely Holbrook and planning commissioner Terry O'Day on the opposition slate. While the opposition could endorse a third candidate, some observers feel that too many candidates on their slate could draw precious votes from Holbrook.
 Will the hotels and business interests go for a double or a triple? There's more to come.

Take a stand, Mel

COMMON SCENTS
 BY CAROLE ORLIN

I don't know if Mel Gibson reads the Santa Monica Daily Press. I suspect that someone who knows him personally probably does read our paper. I would respectfully ask you to share my thoughts with Mr. Gibson.
 Mel, if you want all of this to go away, start by telling the truth. If you are an anti-Semite, admit it and then you can engage in an authentic dialogue with the Jewish leaders with whom you say you want to meet. Your constant denials, along with some celebrity friends coming forward to say you are not an anti-Semite, is tiring. Do you really think anyone doubts that you are an anti-Semite? The rumors and stories have been swirling for years. Are you denying your anti-Semitism because you are afraid of losing fans? By not taking a stand, you risk losing both your anti-Semitic fans, who are angry with you for your weak apologies, along with your non, anti-Semitic fans, who are turned off by hateful vitriol. Perhaps you have made a careful calculation that overall you have gained some fans and lost some others, with a net effect of evening out in the end. Though, I'm sure you are now the hero of the white supremacists and Islamic-fascists. Hey, a fan is a fan. Money is money. You don't really need Hollywood anymore.
 I have never understood why people in the public eye deny their guilt when the facts point to a contrary conclusion. This reminds me of the Clinton-Lewinsky farce, the Nixon-Watergate scandal and the Ken Lay-Enron debacle. Do these people really think the American public is so stupid? Mel, you know that in AA, one of their very important tenets is: "You're as sick as your secrets." If you are serious about getting and remaining sober, you need to admit to yourself and others what irrational hatred and anger does to your soul. Get rid of the hatred and anger, and you will get sober and be able to remain sober. Blaming Jews for all the wars in the world is both ridiculous and dangerous. Unfortunately, the intense hatred of Jews is responsible for many wars and so much suffering.

 Do you really want your legacy to be that of an out-of-control alcoholic, anti-Semite? Or do you want to be the hero that so many people used to think you embodied? It is not too late. People love redemption; but genuine redemption, not something your spin-doctors tell you to do. When you feel stressed and you start blaming Jews for everything, read the works of Maimonides, the great 12th century Jewish sage and scholar. His writings are well respected by all religions, including Christianity and Islam. I am drawn to a statement of faith of his that was often among the last words said by Jews as they were marched into Nazi gas chambers. "I believe with a full heart in the coming of the Messiah and even though he may tarry I will still wait for him". Can you truly hate people who are really not all that different from you? Another quote comes to mind from the great Jewish philosopher, Hannah Arendt: "The sad truth is that most evil is done by people who never make up their minds to be good or evil".
 It's up to you, Mel. I should be angry, but I am sad. I have always loved your movies, your professional persona and now I realize that I have been duped. Although this saddens me, it does not alter my belief that helping others and trying to make this a better, more tolerant world is much of what life is about. If you want to not be filled with hate, it can be done. Let go of your irrational hatred. It's not too late to be a real hero. Do it for yourself, your family and the millions of innocent people you have harmed.

BUZZ'IN SANTA MONICA

Buzz (b'z) v. buzzed, buzz-ing, buzz-es

1. confusion of activity and gossip, 2. to be noisy with activity, 3. to talk, often excitedly, in low tones.

Slang

1. Excited interest or attention. 2. To move quickly and busily; bustle.

... Well, it seems not all are fans of the Buzz-meister. After just one week of writing insights and witticisms, one Daily Press reader was moved to request he be taken off the paper's mailing list, pointing out "there is nothing polite or decent" about Buzz's stories. Well, Ben, maybe the highbrow humor was lost on you, and that's OK, THERE'S NO SHAME IN LIKING VANILLA, that's why they make it. Point taken, we hope you will keep reading and give Buzz a second chance to raise his standards. As for opinions, well, "Buzz" knows everyone has one, just like -- [editor's cuts made in sense of decency and politeness] ...

... Meanwhile, another reader (who apparently is drawn to the crassness of it all) was telling Buzz about the JERRY GARCIA-LOOKING DUDE IN BORDERS on the Promenade the other week. Looking a tad suspicious, he procured a grip of Ann Coulter books and walked off to a far corner of the bookstore. Intrigued, the Buzz buddy went in pursuit, only to find Grateful Guy deep-filing the Coulter collection behind some obscure history books. A job well done, Buzz and friend nodded ...

... In our "Crash" movie moment item of the week, Buzz was out buying a six-pack at a liquor store on Broadway on Friday night ('cause that's the way Buzz brings it) when two patrons — a middle-aged white man and a black youth (with no ID, Buzz might add)— began going at it. Apparently, they both reached the register — manned by a man of Asian descent — at the same time and an argument ensued over which one was the bigger "bit_." The youth pulled off his shirt and ANNOUNCED HE JUST GOT OUT OF "THE PEN." The man said that's where he belonged and that he should go back "to Boyle Heights." Intriguing, yes, but not worth delaying Buzz's Fat Tire sixer ...

... In an update to our popular "Cornbread" entry of a week ago, whereby a woman in a public beach bathroom was imploring a man to give her the Southern dinner staple with gusto, a Buzz reader informs us that "the indigenous Indians of Central America have passed down through Palamayo dialect an expression of lovespeak still used today, roughly translating, 'YARE MY CORN, OR MAIZE, OR BREAD MADE OF CORN,' but more specifically meaning, 'my sustenance,' or 'you light up my life.' Buzz doesn't know what Debbie Boone has to do with any of this, but he may just open up a cornbread stand if peeps get this excited about it ...

... While Buzz was getting a stylish new pair of fatigues at the Supply Sergeant on Lincoln Boulevard last weekend, none other than Mr. Dead Man Walking — Sean Penn — came strolling in. Penn was kind enough to sign an autograph for Buzz, but in all the excitement, Buzz left the store without his favorite means of transport, his skateboard. Passing a group of skaters on the way home, Buzz realized his precious board was still at the store. At Supply Sergeant, the staff informed him that his board had just become more valuable, AS THE OSCAR-WINNER RETURNED TO HIS "SPICOLI" ROOTS and took Buzz's board for a few carves around the store. ...

... Buzz likes to tan on the beach as much as the next guy. While soaking up some rays recently, Buzz beheld an unusual sight — a very hairy gentleman wearing nothing more than LOONEY TUNES BOXER SHORTS STORMED PAST Buzz. The man made eye contact with no one and had a supreme look of determination. Upon reaching his shoreline destination, the man began to do a series of acrobatics, including handstands and cartwheels. Following the completion of his routine, he leapt into the surf before storming back up the beach. With his boxers now wet, Buzz thought he saw a "Putty Tat" ...

... Buzz was cruising Lincoln Boulevard for the ladies the other night, and boy did he find one. Near Pico Boulevard, Buzz spied a large black man in the 230-pound range flaunting his goods and "working it." The man — BEDECKED IN STUNNER SHADES, a short denim jacket and matching pink bra and panty set — left little to Buzz's imagination. His ensemble also featured black lace-up platform stilettos to accentuate his considerable curves. Buzz's search for ladies took a considerably wrong turn ...

practiced. The key is to perform each move repeatedly, with the same precision and intensity, until they become second nature. Perfection is difficult to attain, coming only to those who show complete dedication.

With that in mind, one can't help but wonder why an accomplished sensei like Naidoo — who has a countless number of clients, including two members of the Mexican National Karate Team — would spend so much time teaching kata to a 7-year-old.

“For him, it's not just about teaching someone to block or kick,” the elder Lares said. “He follows the traditions and really brings all of the elements together. It's not just about learning how to fight, but how to respect yourself and those around you. When my son told me he wanted to take karate, we drove all over looking for the right place. This was the only one where I felt there was more to it than just going through the motions.”

Since his son joined Naidoo's Goju-Ryo Karate Do, located across the street from Virginia Avenue Park, the elder Lares has noticed a significant change in his son's behavior.

“He's calmer now, and he really listens and pays attention more,” the elder Lares said. “He really enjoys what he's doing.”

For Naidoo, a native of South Africa who has been practicing Goju for 40 years, 26 of those in Santa Monica and the Palisades, there is nothing more rewarding than working with children.

“You can see the light at the end of the tunnel with them,” said Naidoo, a fit 60-year-old of Indian descent who, despite a few gray hairs, doesn't look a day over 45 — the side-effect of continuous training and meditation. “You see how their whole attitude changes. They become more mellow. They start doing the chores at home, because I insist that their moms let me know, call me anytime, if they don't do their homework and chores at home. They have to keep up their grades, and karate can help them do that as well.”

With the loss of sports in many public schools, as well as concerns about increased incidents of youth violence, it is Naidoo's goal to incorporate karate, and in particular the form of Goju, into the curriculum as a way to keep kids fit while simultaneously nourishing their self-esteem.

He also continues to teach for free those kids who cannot afford his classes.

“If they can't afford it, of course, I'll teach them,” Naidoo said as he stood below pictures of his master, Chogan Miyagi, as well as countless awards. “I don't throw them away. They're the kids that need it most ... My goal is, at some point, to start teaching martial arts in schools, like in India and Japan. That's why the kids, compared to most western countries, the respect is way up. There is that discipline that comes with practicing and appreciating karate.”

On a recent Saturday afternoon, Naidoo, a resident of Santa Monica's Ocean Park neighborhood, took a break from teaching to talk with the Daily Press about his love of martial arts.

WHAT IS GOJU RYU KARATE?

“There are five traditional major styles in the world and Goju is one of the traditional styles. We belong to the roots of Goju. A lot of people are off-shoots, but our lineage can be traced to the original roots of Goju. Goju means hard and soft. In other words if someone attacks you and you block hard (with your forearm), something's going to break, so you block soft (deflecting the blow away from the body). It also teaches you to have a soft heart, but it is very hard to get inside it.”

WHAT ARE THE ELEMENTS OF GOJU?

“We do a lot of basics to build you up to doing good kata. You must practice kata to become a good fighter. Everything in the kata means something. You have offense and defense, learn to fight with both sides. It's very much like a dance, where every move tells some story, some emotion. Kata really comes from within. It can be very spiritual. That is why in traditional karate, you can train for the rest of your life, for every time you practice, you gain so much and learn even more. I've been practicing for most of my life and I still discover new things.”

HOW DID YOU GET INVOLVED WITH MARTIAL ARTS?

“I used to play with a second division soccer team, Aces United, in a city called Natal. I was 19, a late bloomer, and someone introduced me to (karate), and after the first time I tried it, I fell in love with it and I've been practicing ever since... 40 years. I started off in South Africa, trained in Thailand, Hong Kong, Europe. I was teaching in South Africa last year and they inducted me into the hall of fame for martial arts in South Africa... When I was much younger, there was apartheid in South Africa and I was one of the pioneers in the non-white community, holding the first multi-racial tournament in a soccer stadium ... We had a wonderful response. They didn't interfere. I think they knew better, because it would have caused an uproar.”

WHAT WAS IT LIKE FOR YOU LIVING UNDER APARTHEID?

“For me, it was OK. I was known in the community, contributing to the community like I do here. I had about 300 students and out of them, 200 were non-paying because they just couldn't afford it. I did a lot of charity work, so I was OK. But most others weren't as fortunate as me and it was very difficult to see, very difficult.”

IS THE POPULARITY FOR KARATE GROWING IN THE UNITED STATES? IT'S BEEN MORE THAN 20 YEARS SINCE RALPH MACCHIO BECAME “THE KARATE KID.”

“I think compared to the rest of the world, we are way behind. I say that because the intensity of winning, we don't have it here, because there are so many other sports that concern money. When you do martial arts, what you look for is how good it is for you, both physically, mentally spiritually and everything else, and not to make a living off of it. But if you go soccer, baseball, basketball, football, and if you're good at it you can make a lot of money. And traditional martial arts is not that easy to do. Everything is very precise, the footwork especially, with the heel and the pushing back of the hips, keeping the hara (abdomen) tight and the focus, pulling your chin in. People don't have the time to go through all that. People who really know, want and understand it will go through it.”

YOU MENTIONED SOME OF THEM, BUT WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS OF KARATE?

“First off is your health, your focus, your coordination. Everything you do with the left, you've got to do with the right — balance. It also gives you self-esteem, self-control and self-respect. That last one is important because if you don't respect yourself, you don't respect anyone else, which in turn causes you not to respect karate. You learn to fight to avoid fighting. That's the key... fighting is just one part of karate. That's why there are so many aspects of it, from stretching, breathing, the basic exercises, your kata, all of that.”

YOU JUST RETURNED FROM JAPAN. WHAT WERE YOU DOING THERE?

“I represented the United States in the Japanese Karate Federation. I was able to study with some of the best masters of martial arts in the world. I do this every year as a way to enhance my understanding of Goju so that I can come here and host seminars. For those who cannot afford it, Japan comes to them.”

BRUCE LEE OR CHUCK NORRIS?

“That's a tough one. I like both of them. I like Chuck Norris in the movies. His moves are more based in reality, nothing too fancy. Bruce Lee was one of the greatest as well, but

Landlords want tenants out, refugees in

tive committee, some of whom were dressed in traditional Hasidic garb — long black suits and wide-brimmed hats — with fluffy beards and dangling sideburns.

"If we are not allowed to demolish the building, then we are stuck with what we have today, which is an annual loss of $500,000 a year," said Rosario Perry, a real estate and land-use attorney in Santa Monica who is representing Or Khaim Hashalom in the development process.

"Because of complex zoning and rent control laws, there is no way that we can meet our goals without demolition and reconstruction," Perry said. "We need to add more units and secure some public financing just to break even. That's our goal."

Or Khaim Hashalom would like to build 38 to 40 units, including some for sale, a temple for worship and possibly a day-care center, Perry said.

The Teriton, designed by architect Stanford Kent in 1949, is comprised of two, low-rise, high-density buildings centered around an L-shaped courtyard known as "garden style" architecture, a popular form that offered inexpensive housing for the working class and became just as emblematic of early 20th century Los Angeles as bungalows or Spanish Colonial Revival homes.

The building is situated in a potential historic district known as the San Vicente Courtyard Apartment Historic District. It has been surveyed by City Hall three times in the last 25 years, and will be reviewed again as city preservationists look to update the citywide historic resources inventory, said architectural historian Jennifer Hirsh, who was hired by Or Khaim Hashalom to provide an assessment of the property, located at 130-142 San Vicente Blvd.

In her report, Hirsh said the apartments do not appear to be eligible for landmark designation, but further research is needed to judge the significance of the building as it relates to Kent's overall work.

"In addition, research is needed on how the work of Stanford Kent fits into the development of Santa Monica and the Los Angeles region," Hirsh wrote.

Faced with the possibility of losing their homes, tenants were visibly upset with Or Khaim Hashalom members. Many resented the fact that the organization wanted to kick them out to make room for Jewish refugees, a clear act of discrimination, tenants and others at the meeting said.

Patricia Hoffman, who is not a tenant but is opposed to the project, said when she first moved to Santa Monica, there were restrictive, racial covenants preventing those of the Jewish faith from purchasing homes in certain neighborhoods. Today, those same blocks are filled with people of all religious and ethnic backgrounds.

"To create property with religious covenants is reprehensible," Hoffman said.

Risa Freeman, a tenant who just moved to the Teriton after being evicted from another complex being converted into condos, said she cannot understand how a religious organization can justify evicting seniors and other tenants on fixed incomes who only survive because of the low rents provided by rent control. If they are forced to move, they'll face a steep increase in housing costs.

"I'm Jewish," Freeman said. "I go to synagogue. I partake some of the same traditions as you do and just don't see how you can do this. You shouldn't be evicting people from their homes."

Rabbi Hertzl Illulian said the congregation felt sympathy for those affected and has agreed to help with relocation for long-term tenants.

"By no means do we intend to take the health of people or create hardship," Illulian said. "I wish so much that there was so much land, enough for everybody. We really feel bad. We are human beings like you. We all want family. I feel your pain. It bothers me. I wish there was another way."

A few in the audience believed the synagogue is a front for developers looking to capitalize on prime real estate and rising condo prices. The belief was fueled by the executive committee's refusal to answer any questions about the history of Or Khaim Hashalom or whether there are any other parties involved with the project.

"We are not here to answer those questions," Perry said several times as audience members tried to dig for more information.

Illulian said Or Khaim Hashalom is a legitimate, Jewish organization that helped transport roughly 1,000 Jewish refugees to the United States using student visas in 1978 during the Iranian revolution. With the current crises in the Middle East, Illulian said it is even more important to find a safe haven for those Jews living in a war zone.

At the conclusion of the meeting, which occurred earlier than expected because of the executive committee's observance of Shabbat, the weekly day of rest in Judaism, Or Khaim Shalom's leadership voted to file with City Hall a summary of hardships and an objection to the granting of landmark status. The issue is before the Landmarks Commission, which must review any permits for demolition.

The vote seemed to have been decided before the meeting began, leaving tenants disenchanted.

"This was a complete waste of time," several Teriton residents said as they left the meeting. "They're going to do what they want, regardless."

Dean demands

Angelides gets show of support from the Dems' Party Chairman

BY LISA LEFF

Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Democratic Party Chairman Howard Dean on Friday said California voters would be endorsing the policies of President Bush if they re-elect Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger in November.

Dean was helping fellow Democrat Phil Angelides, who is battling Schwarzenegger in the November election, spread one of his central campaign messages.

Surrounded by cheering teachers, nurses, gay-rights activists and firefighters at a labor union hall, Dean and other elected officials compared Schwarzenegger's record on the environment, deficit spending, immigration reform and corporate influence with the president's.

"There are a lot of similarities between George Bush and Arnold Schwarzenegger," said Dean, chairman of the Democratic National Committee. "America needs a new direction and California needs a new direction. And if Phil Angelides is elected, we will have a new direction for California and a new direction for America."

Matt David, a Schwarzenegger campaign spokesman, described the comparison as an attempt to distract voters.

"Phil Angelides can invite whoever he wants to California to help out his messaging, but it doesn't change the fact that he is running a flailing campaign centered on $18 billion in higher taxes," he said.

Schwarzenegger campaigned for Bush during the 2004 presidential election but often has taken positions contrary to the Bush administration's, most notably on environmental matters and social issues such as embryonic stem cell research.

Dean's visit was one of two developments Friday indicating that trying to link Schwarzenegger with Bush remains a lynchpin of the state treasurer's campaign strategy. A fundraising letter sent on Angelides' behalf by Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., struck the same theme.

In his remarks, Angelides relied on boxing imagery to persuade voters not to count him out of the gubernatorial race even though he trails Schwarzenegger in fundraising and public opinion polls.

Tribal college close to collapse

BY ROBIN HINDERY

Associated Press Writer

DAVIS — On a remote stretch of land where stray chickens outnumber students, California's only tribal college is clinging to life against seemingly insurmountable odds.

D-Q University has had its share of hard times since it was founded on the outskirts of this liberal university town west of Sacramento in 1971, during the peak of the American Indian self-determination movement. Its turbulent history includes land disputes with the neighboring University of California, low enrollment and a loss of federal accreditation in early 2005.

But even its most ardent supporters acknowledge that the school has hit an all-time low.

In June, the board dismissed the university's interim president, Art Apodaca, accusing him of squandering the school's few remaining assets. It also rejected his proposal to boost enrollment by dividing D-Q into an Indian-only "D" school and a separate, non-Indian "Q" school.

With the remaining six students drifting away and no money for even a working telephone line, a handful of board members and community volunteers are desperately searching for a way to keep the school and its mission alive.

"Every day it's a new crisis," said Susan Reece, a former board member who now spends several days a week on campus sorting through piles of paperwork left behind by Apodaca and his predecessors. "Every day there's a new group of bills and new debts we didn't know about."

In early August, the six-member board decided to abandon its efforts to keep students on campus for the fall semester. Instead, it will try to attract revenue by cleaning up the campus and renting it out for workshops and conferences.

"Hopefully, it will draw in people from different areas and let them know we're here," board member Calvin Hedrick said.

But he acknowledged that in its current condition, D-Q is nowhere near ready to accommodate visitors.

The main meeting areas are largely bare, except for the occasional piece of worn-out furniture and various items left behind by former students and staff members. Weeds cover the grounds, and six rusted, broken-down cars sit clustered next to one of the back buildings.

Reece said her biggest fear is that D-Q will lose its 600 acres to the federal government if it is found to be violating its federal property deed. The deed stipulates that the land must be maintained as an educational institution.

The demise of D-Q University would deal a heavy blow to the tribal college movement, supporters say. The school was one of the six original tribal colleges in the United States, all founded between 1968 and 1972. That group created the American Indian Higher Education Consortium in 1972 to address common challenges such as fundraising and attracting qualified faculty.

Nationwide, the U.S. Department of Education recognizes 34 tribal colleges, most of which are two-year schools.

The programs range in size from several hundred students to several thousand, serving about 30,000 total students nationwide each year, according to Department of Education estimates. They offer two-year associate degrees, and some provide bachelor's and master's degrees and vocational certificate programs.

Indian students "were failing miserably in mainstream institutions before the tribal college movement came around," said Gerald Gipp, executive director of the Virginia-based consortium.

While many of the current colleges are thriving, he said they have faced their share of hardships. For example, the schools receive about $4,400 per student from the federal government — far less than their average annual expenses require.

In addition, many of the schools are geographically isolated and have to provide basic coursework to students who arrive with a sub-par high school education, he said.

Stable leadership and support from a tribal government and the surrounding community are crucial to a tribal college's success, Gipp said. But he added that ultimately, D-Q and other struggling schools must figure out their own solutions.

"What does it take to develop a viable institution?" he asked. "We haven't really answered that question at this point."

D-Q's turbulent history was preceded by a dramatic birth. In 1971, two California-based American Indian scholars applied for control of the land, a former Army communications center.

After it was learned that the federal government intended to award the land to UC Davis instead, a group of Indian and Hispanic activists jumped the barbed wire fence and refused to leave the property.

Perks offered to sell condos

BY ALLISON HOFFMAN

Associated Press Writer

SAN DIEGO — The hip Atria condos have a lot to offer young professionals and empty-nesters — a prime downtown address, skyline views, gym, rooftop deck and units starting at $300,000.

Developers are even offering free plasma TVs and $5,000 home renovation gift certificates to lure skittish buyers in what had been one of the nation's hottest real estate markets.

With sales stalled by a spreading slowdown, incentives are on the rise in San Diego and other big cities that saw explosive condo construction during the boom.

But in real estate, as in dating, signs of desperation can be counterproductive. Many prospective buyers are shrugging off the enticements.

"We can wait a while and try to get the most for our money," said Andy Albert, an empty-nester who recently sold his home in a suburban beach community — after knocking 10 percent off the asking price.

Like many would-be buyers, Albert and his wife intend to rent an apartment near his downtown law office while they keep looking for the best possible deal.

San Diego County was at the forefront of the national housing boom that began five years ago. But it recently became the first major California real estate market to see its annual median price for houses and condos slide since the run-up began.

Humble, historic cabin is still home to northern anthropology

BY DAN JOLING

Associated Press Writer

FAIRBANKS, Alaska — Gleaming, multi-million-dollar buildings at the University of Alaska Fairbanks stand as symbols to the advancement of science in the North and a research budget of more than $120 million.

But if you know where to look on the campus of 5,600 students, tucked in a remnant of the boreal forest you can find a smaller testament to research in a different age.

The Rainey-Skarland cabin, a single-story, 1,142-square-foot building, has been home to northern anthropologists since 1936 and a social center for researchers studying the history of Alaska's indigenous populations.

Built for Froehlich Rainey in 1936 or 1937, the cabin's former residents and their guests are a Who's Who in Alaska anthropology research.

"These are all people who developed the understanding of Eskimo prehistory," said David Koester, an associate professor of anthropology and a former tenant himself. The Anthropology Department maintains the cabin and decides who lives there. Mostly it's faculty.

"Anybody who gets to live there, in the Anthropology Department, really feels the historical weight that goes with living there," Koester said.

The cabin has a kitchen, bedroom and basement. But the outstanding feature is a two-sided stone fireplace, an island of warmth dividing the cabin's third room into a living room on one side and a study area on the other. The cabin with its wood floors and log walls has the feel of a hunting lodge.

The living room has a couch and oval coffee table. It's easy to imagine scholars next to a crackling fire, discussing digs or poring over maps, planning future field trips.

"The fireplace is really the centerpiece," Koester said. "There's something about the cabin, when you have guests there, everyone feels comfortable and conversation just flows."

"It's really an unusual space, and I don't know if it's because of the rich history, or there's always something to talk about, but it's a very convivial place."

The history begins with Rainey. Luring him to Fairbanks to begin the Anthropology Department was a coup for the tiny university in 1936, Koester said. Nationally famous in his field, Rainey went on to fame outside his specialty when he hosted "What in the World," an archaeology television program.

"There haven't been many of those," Koester said. "They got the most famous anthropologists to come on and they'd show them an object and they were supposed to guess what it was and where it was from."

The campus in the mid-1930s was a drive down a bumpy dirt road from Fairbanks. Rainey and his wife, Penelope, asked permission from the Board of Regents to build a private home on campus. The regents agreed on the condition that the university be given the first chance to buy the home if they left.

The Rainey's sketched out a layout for the cabin and handed it to builder T.S. Batchelder.

SMC program mixes academics, athletics for inner-city teens

By The Associated Press

Boisterous chatter filled Santa Monica College professor Nancy Grass Hemmert’s class of inner-city teenagers. When she asked about the source of the commotion one student said, “It’s not that we’re trying to be bad, everything you say is so exciting, we can’t stop talking about it.”

It was a pleasantly unexpected response from a class of low-income African American and Latino high-schoolers taking their first college course as part of a new Major League Baseball recreational and educational program.

Grass Hemmert’s students are among a group of teens that have been spending the past month taking courses with SMC professors in the morning and playing baseball and softball in the afternoons at Major League Baseball’s facility in Compton.

The Urban Youth Academy is a $10 million, 10-acre baseball complex at Compton College which looks similar to many major league team’s spring training facilities. The Academy opened in Feb., but is already demonstrating it’s as committed to classroom instruction as it is to creating a field of dreams for budding players.

On June 26, two professors and two counselors from SMC started teaching college-level courses to a group of about 40 students ages 14 to 17. Students spend their mornings four days a week taking either interpersonal communication or English and three days a week in study skills classes with SMC counselors Patricia Ramos and Leigie Henderson.

A graduation ceremony will be held at 1 p.m. Mon., July 31 at the Academy, located at 901 E. Artesia Blvd. in Compton.

"SMC is the real deal. If it weren’t for SMC, we wouldn’t have nearly the program we have,” said Darrell Miller, Academy director and former Angel player. “SMC’s teachers are amazing. They have the passion and have gone above and beyond the call of duty.”

On a recent day, students in Grass Hemmert’s communication class were doing a group exercise learning about cooperation, while students in Melody Nightingale’s writing course were in a Compton College computer lab, writing essays.

"Mrs. Nightingale is a wonderful person,” said 16-year-old Trevor Oliver, a student at Dominguez High School in Compton who plays outfield on his high school team and wants to go to UCLA or USC on a baseball scholarship.

"She tells us how to break down sentences and teaches us about grammar and good writing.”

Piano man suits him

The surprise guest at a free concert of classical compositions by BILLY JOEL was — Billy Joel.

The actual headliner at Friday's outdoor concert at Heckscher Park on Long Island was Richard Joo, a British-Korean pianist who arranged and performed Joel's music on the album "Fantasies and Delusions" which was released on the Sony Classical label in 2001.

Joel strolled on to the stage during the second half of the concert, sat down at an electronic keyboard and joined Joo for a duet.

The piano man also promised to buy a piano for the Huntington Arts Council, which co-sponsors the summer concert series.

"I'm known for my philanthropy," Joel told the audience of about 300, "and I'm going to buy them a new piano."

'Lt. Dan' seeks his destiny with troops

GARY SINISE brought his Lt. Dan Band to this Army post to show his support for troops in Iraq.

"It's important we support our defenders. It's a very serious time in our country and the world," he said.

About 1,800 turned out Saturday to watch the band, a spinoff of Sinise's role in "Forrest Gump."

"I just want to see what Lt. Dan is doing now. See if they're any good," said Sgt. Erik Bull.

WASICKA

PAUL WASICKA is betting on a big future in the world of professional poker.

He's already got an ace up his sleeve: $6.1 million he collected after beating out 8,771 rivals this past week to claim second place in the main event at the World Series of Poker in Las Vegas.

Until February, the 25-year-old Boulder native was managing his brother-in-law's restaurant, Via Toscana, in Louisville, Colo. But after two years of daily poker sessions online and hours of analysis and study, Wasicka said he knew what he wanted to do: high stakes, no limit Texas Hold'em.

Wasicka (pronounced WAH'-sih-kah) says he still has plenty to learn about a game the pros say takes a minute to learn and a lifetime to master. And his arrival at the professional ranks didn't come by accident. It was all hard work.

He estimated he played 3,000-7,000 hands a day, almost all of it online.

PRINCE ALBERT

Prince flying solo

PRINCE ALBERT of Monaco said Sunday that despite recent rumors linking him romantically to South African swimmer Charlene Whitstock, he doesn't see marriage in his future.

"I have no plans in the near or distant future," the 48-year-old monarch toldb ABC News' "Good Morning America."

"Any time I'm seen with a pretty young woman by my side more than once, then everybody flashes the 'M' word as you say. Then it becomes very difficult to have a relationship with someone in any semi-public or private way."

The prince is the second child of Prince Rainier and American film star Grace Kelly, who were married 50 years ago. He was visiting the U.S. this weekend to attend an international leadership conference and a celebration of the 50th anniversary of his late mother's last movie "High Society."
