HODGIN

Two decades of un-development

BY EMMA TROTTER
Special to the Daily Press

SUNSET PARK Emmalie Hodgin calls traffic "a cancer in Santa Monica," and on busy cut-through thoroughfare 23rd Street she might just have a point.

Twenty years ago, further development projects — a mini-mall, in particular — motivated Emmalie and about 10 other neighborhood residents to form the Friends of Sunset Park.

At the time, Emmalie and her husband Charles — Chuck, she calls him — had lived in area for over 30 years.

"This was a sleepy little suburb," she said of the neighborhood in 1952. At that time, she continued, there were no problems with traffic, the city attracted few tourists and tuition at SMC was only $3 each semester.

When they saw this paradise slipping away, residents took the fight to City Hall.

"We fought 'em hard, but we just got no place," Emmalie said. "They made all kinds of offers they knew we couldn't accept."

The issue became so controversial that meetings at City Hall were broadcast by loudspeaker onto the streets, and later moved to a Douglas hangar to accommodate all interested citizens.

Ultimately, the Friends of Sunset Park brought the mini-mall project down — along with a few city officials.

"They were going on the assumption that the little people don't know crap," Emmalie said, pausing for effect before describing how she learned to fight back from her father growing up in Louisiana. "He said, 'Look what they're doing when you're fighting them, and think what they'd be doing if you weren't.'"

Over the years, Emmalie said, the organization's goals have shifted. They still fight development — trying to stop Santa Monica from becoming "Manhattan" — but now they work with City Hall instead of against them, together facing ongoing issues with SMC and the airport.

As for the everyday operations of the organization, the board holds open meetings once a month and operates on simple majority rule.

Fire crews battle through rough terrain

JARED GRIGSBY
Associated Press Writer

DAVENPORT, Calif. California residents are being urged to follow orders to leave their homes as crews struggled to control nearly a dozen wildfires burning in areas with inaccessible terrain.

"These fires will be different than most of the fires because of the terrain," California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger said Saturday during a tour of the Lockheed Fire zone. "It's very hard to get equipment in there and the resources in there. That's why you see a lot of helicopters and fixed winged aircraft being used."

The fire has blackened more than 10 square miles of remote wilderness since Wednesday and prompted mandatory evacuations of the mountain communities of Swanton and Bonny Doon, which have about 2,400 residents and several wineries.

Lt. Gov. John Garamendi declared a state of emergency Friday for Santa Cruz County.

The blaze damaged two small structures and was threatening more than 1,000 homes and buildings. No homes were destroyed, but Schwarzenegger said 25 firefighters had been injured. The extent of their injuries wasn't immediately known.

"We pray that they heal as quickly as possible," Schwarzenegger said.

More crews have arrived to help with the blaze, which currently was being held back by a total of 2,000 firefighters, Nadim Yehia of CalFire said late Saturday. The fire was about 40 percent contained, he added.

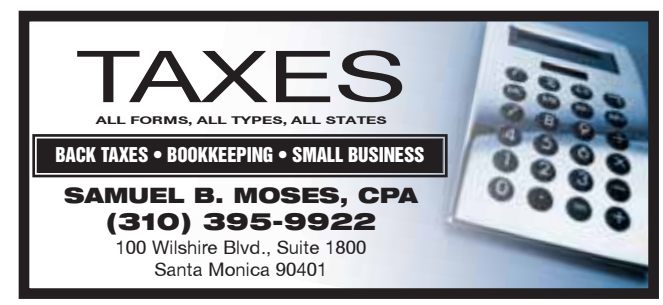

Meanwhile, a separate fire in Yuba County north of Sacramento tripled in size Saturday to more than 6 square miles as the flames jumped the north Yuba River and began burning in Nevada County, according to CalFire spokeswoman Joann Cartoscelli. It was about 15 percent contained Saturday.

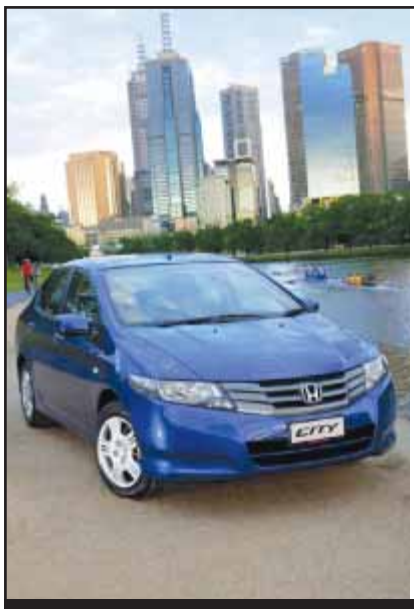

Schwarzenegger said the Lockheed Fire was among 11 burning up and down the coast in the state. Other blazes have forced evacuations and knocked out power, and smoke and ash from the growing wildfire in Santa Barbara County whirled into the Los

'District 9' tops at box office

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES The first-time director and cast of unknowns of the acclaimed sci-fi thriller "District 9" have given Hollywood a late-summer box-office boost.

The Sony release produced by "Lord of the Rings" director Peter Jackson led the weekend with a $37 million debut, according to studio estimates Sunday.

"District 9" is the debut feature from commercial and music-video director Neill Blomkamp, who co-wrote the tale about extraterrestrials forced by humans to live in squalor in a ghetto in South Africa.

The movie built audience interest with a clever marketing campaign playing up the theme of prejudice against aliens, including posters instructing citizens to report non-humans and ads on bus benches stating that the seats are for humans only.

"Everybody was like, 'What is this?' There was a big question mark in people's minds," said Rory Bruer, head of distribution for Sony. "It did really pique their interest and drove them to the Internet and elsewhere to discover what's going on."

The previous weekend's No. 1 movie, Paramount's "G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra," slipped to second place with $22.5 million, raising its 10-day total to $98.8 million.

Another sci-fi tale, the Warner Bros. romance "The Time Traveler's Wife" starring Eric Bana and Rachel McAdams, opened a solid No. 3 with $19.2 million. The film joined the previous weekend's "Julie & Julia" as a choice for women, with females accounting for 76 percent of its audience.

"District 9" and "Time Traveler's Wife" led a wave of five new wide releases for mid-August, when Hollywood's summer output normally is petering out. The rush continues next weekend with another surge of new releases, led by Quentin Tarantino's World War II saga "Inglourious Basterds."

"It's getting very crowded, and it's these films that want to compete in the summer time frame but can't compete in the sweet spot of summer," said Paul Dergarabedian, box-office analyst for Hollywood.com. "Opening 'District 9' against 'Star Trek,' that would not be a good strategy. But to release it now makes sense. August is the month of opportunity for films that in other months of summer would get slaughtered."

The weekend's other debuts: Paramount Vantage's used-car comedy "The Goods: Live

GREG RISLING
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES Before film producers Gerald and Patricia Green took over a movie festival in Bangkok, the weeklong event struggled to capture Hollywood's attention.

Over the next four years, the Southern California couple transformed the festival into a rising star on the international circuit for screening new films, attracting the likes of Michael Douglas, Jeremy Irons and director Oliver Stone to Thailand.

The success earned the couple a small fortune and drew scrutiny from federal prosecutors who have charged them with bribing Thai officials to run the festival and land lucrative contracts.

In a novel trial scheduled to start Tuesday in U.S. District Court, prosecutors allege the Greens paid bribes so they would be awarded business contracts that brought the couple $14 million. The trial is the first in which entertainment industry figures are charged under the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, a federal statute prohibiting corrupt payments to foreign officials for business purposes.

Gerald Green, who produced Stone's "Salvador" and the Christian Bale-led "Rescue Dawn," faces 20 counts. Patricia Green, who produced "Diamonds," a comedy starring Kirk Douglas, Dan Aykroyd and Lauren Bacall, faces 21 counts.

If convicted, they each could receive up to life in prison. They have both pleaded not guilty to the charges and are free on bond.

The outcome of the trial coupled with recent comments by federal officials could have an effect on how Hollywood studios conduct business in foreign countries. Earlier this month, Robert Khuzami, head of the Securities and Exchange Commission's enforcement division, said the agency will create a unit that will focus on possible foreign corruption violations.

"I think a message is being sent loud and clear that the government is going after violators no matter what industry they are in," said Franceska Schroeder, an attorney in Washington, D.C., who specializes in trade compliance law. "Even if you are in the entertainment industry, you have to be mindful of payments government officials are asking you to make."

Slow down, Santa Monica

Editor:

Scott Mossman's Denver observations are right-on about the issues of bicycling and auto congestion in Santa Monica (Letters to the editor, Aug. 1-2, page 4). Like in Colorado, we cyclists must observe the following:

1) Bicycles on the street are part of the traffic and therefore must obey all traffic laws as vehicles do, no exceptions."

and

2) If the traffic is too intimidating and the cyclist decides to take to the sidewalks for safety reasons then they become part of the pedestrian traffic and must walk their bicycles, no exceptions."

But the greater problem in our city, as he mentioned, are the motorists. In their four-wheeled, two ton steel chariots, cars dominate our urban landscape.

In the book, "In Praise of Slowness, How a Worldwide Movement Is Challenging the Cult of Speed," (found in the Santa Monica library), Carl Honore has some suggestions for slowing down the drivers of our fair city.

Speeding kills, and has done so many notable times in Santa Monica, from the running over of pedestrians on the raging Santa Monica Boulevard, to the horrific scene at the Farmers' Market several years ago on Arizona. I witnessed that while on my bicycle when a car sped out-of-control and mowed down shoppers.

What can be done about the zooming traffic to make Santa Monica a more livable city?

Walking, bicycling, taking the Big Blue Bus are three ways – as the less traffic that flows through an area, and the more slowly it flows, the more social contact among the residents there is.

Speed bumps, radar cameras, and synchronizing traffic lights are current methods, but are coercive, and perhaps are not as effective as trying to nurture a slower culture. For example, some people in UK villages are erecting their own slower speed limits on streets, fed up with speed demons.

Another populist anti-speeding campaign in the U.S. is the Neighborhood Pace Program (www.waba.org/pacecar/). Its members pledge to drive at the speed limit, and in so doing act as "mobile speed bumps" for the traffic behind them.

We can make Santa Monica a quieter and safer place. Slow down – and practice respect for others, whether we're driving a car or riding a bicycle.

On spikey coconuts and Eunice Kennedy Shriver

I RECEIVED AN E-MAIL LAST weekend from North of Montana neighborhood activist Doris Sosin who was out of town on vacation. She was asking for support for a request from Susan Hartley.

Hartley had e-mailed City Manager Lamont Ewell and members of the City Council that, "The Public Landscape Division intends to kill the bunya-bunya tree in Douglas Park ... Public Landscape claims they are concerned about public safety because of the size of the cones dropped from the tree, usually during September or October ... The tree could be killed early this week, even this Monday."

Hartley asked for "the tree to be saved, or at the least its destruction be delayed while other alternatives are explored." Apparently, initial requests to delay chopping down the tree were refuted by Walter Warriner, the city forester.

I understand Warriner's concern about public safety — if a "small coconut with spikes" hit somebody. But, Hartley pointed out, "the tree with its falling cones had been a fixture in Douglas Park for a number of years, so why the rush to eliminate it now? Next, they'll be wanting to eliminate the ducks because they might bite." She asked that Santa Monica Treesavers salvage the tree or assist in other tree saving alternatives.

My e-mail box filled up as many citizens weighed in. I heard from numerous folks like Pico neighborhood activist Peter Tigler who wrote, "The extended logic would dictate the city remove all the palm trees in the city. When the fronds fall, and they do fall, the spikes on them are like flying knives that could skewer a fire plug."

Kevin McKeown, who'd been out of town, e-mailed that Ewell had promised, "He will check into this Monday and get back to us." McKeown added that there was a bunya-bunya or Australian False Monkey Puzzle tree in front of City Hall. He wrote he "didn't see the reason for the proposed Douglas Park removal ... It may be a question of risk management rather than risk removal."

On Monday, McKeown sent out another e-mail. "The tree in Douglas Park will NOT be cut down.... Lamont has just advised Council that he has directed staff to not remove the tree and seek alternatives for mitigating the risk." Another e-mail from planning commissioner Ted Winterer, advised "that any future discussions about removing this tree would be in a public meeting."

Finally, the official word from Warriner himself: "In response to the public's interest in retaining the bunya bunya (Araucaria bidwillii) located in Douglas Park, the City is exploring options to retain the tree. The Public Landscape Division will be maintaining the tree on a bi-monthly schedule that will involve monitoring cone development and de-coning the tree as the cones develop as well as the removal of dead and/or dying foliage.

"The City's policy of posting tree removal notices is designed to obtain public comment on recommended tree removals. We thank everyone for their comments and good ideas and we will continue to take them under advisement as we explore all the options."

Thanks to everyone for their efforts. Well done! This proves concerned citizens can work together for positive results without chaining themselves to trees.

THE LOSS OF A GREAT LADY

Last Tuesday, Eunice Kennedy Shriver passed away. She was the sister to the late U.S. President John Fitzgerald Kennedy and mother to City Councilman Bobby Shriver.

There are a very few times in one's life when meeting a person is an electrifying experience because you know you're in the company of someone extraordinary. The first time it happened to me was well over 30 years ago when I met Cesar Chavez while on stage crew at the Ackerman Union Ballroom where he was addressing UCLA students. Backstage, we exchanged pleasantries — nothing profound — but nevertheless, still an amazing moment for me.

Such were the occasions of meeting Eunice Kennedy Shriver at a couple of campaign events in 2004 when Bobby Shriver and I were both running for City Council. His mother came to most of the candidate forums and always greeted me warmly. She made me feel like a member of the family and I was thrilled beyond words.

She was intelligent, gracious and inspiring. She exuded class and humility. I'll never forget her sitting in the front row of the audience, smiling and nodding as I presented my platform.

More than once when talking with her I felt shivers down my spine and had goose bumps because of how special she was. I was in awe. We had fabulous conversations about local politics and I marveled at her amazing insight. Although I've met and spent time with many celebrities and notables, being in the company of such an astonishing and inspiring individual was a momentous occasion.

Her loss is a great one for all of us and we will miss her. My condolences to her family and friends.

Charles Manson's race war

EVERY GENERATION HAS ITS MANIACS – especially racist maniacs. Such was Charles Manson. Here's his story as it unfolded 40 years ago — one that is a lesson to us today. This is especially so in light of the rise of racism in America and violent acts that inevitably follow from it.

Drenched in blood, a dead body was slumped in a car on the driveway. Two bodies, looking like mannequins dipped in red paint, lay on the manicured lawn. As police officers entered the home, they noticed the word "PIG" painted on the door in blood. In the center of the living room, facing the fireplace, was a long couch. Draped over the back was a huge American flag. It was Saturday, Aug. 9, 1969. (Ironically, the day before in England, the Beatles walked across Abbey Road for the last time — the photo captured for posterity on the album of the same name.)

On the other side of the couch lay a young blond woman, very pregnant. Later identified as Sharon Tate, film director Roman Polanski's wife, she lay in a fetal position, her legs tucked up toward her stomach. Blood had been smeared all over her. A white nylon rope was looped around her neck twice; one end extended over a rafter in the ceiling, the other led across the floor to yet another body, that of a man, about four feet away. The man was drenched in blood, his face covered with a bloody towel, his hands bunched up near his head as if still warding off blows. When the police lifted the towel, the man's face was so badly contused that the police became sick to their stomachs.

Charles Manson, the psychopathic killer responsible for the seven murders at this Hollywood Hills home, blamed the Beatles' "White Album" for the series of killings his "Family" committed.

In Manson's case, he thought the messages were ordering him to kill, and that the Beatles' song "Helter Skelter" foretold an uprising in which blacks would murder a third of the world's white population. Like many white convicts, Manson was a racist. However, at some point in 1968, fear of black revolution began to pervade his delusions. Manson's own ultimate domination of the black race became a primary element of the apocalypse he would orchestrate. It would be Helter Skelter. It was also the name his followers used for the murder spree.

Manson thought virtually every one of the 30 tracks on the Beatles' White Album brimmed with hidden significance for him.

Manson believed that the song "Happiness is a Warm Gun" was the Beatles telling the blacks that the time had come to fight, and the lyrics to "Blackbird" spelled it out even more clearly. The white enemy was identified in "Piggies," which is why the Family scrawled the words "Death to Pigs" in blood on the wall after killing several of the Hollywood Hills victims with knives and forks.

Manson's interpretation of the Beatles lyrics was a strange, twisted affair but also was heavily dependent on the Bible — primarily the book of Revelation, especially Chapter 9, which Manson acquainted with John Lennon's song "Revolution 9."

In Revelation, we read, "So the four angels held were set loose to kill a third of mankind. They had been held ready for this moment, for this very year and month, day and hour." To Manson, the Beatles were the four angels. At the beginning of Revelation 9, St. John sees an angel (or star) fall to earth:

"[A]nd the star was given the key of the shaft of the abyss. With this he opened the shaft of the abyss; and from the shaft smoke rose like smoke from a great furnace, and the sun and the air was darkened by the smoke from the shaft. Then over the earth, out of the smoke, came locusts."

Locusts, in Manson's mind, meant beetles. The fallen angel with the key, of course, was Manson himself.

Manson also found an abandoned mine shaft in the desert north of Los Angeles which he told his brainwashed followers was the shaft to Revelation 9. From there, Manson taught his followers that the "White Album" prophesized that the black race would rise up and murder the white race but that Manson and his Family would be saved.

Vincent Bugliosi, a District Attorney for Los Angeles, whose book "Helter Skelter" is the standard work on the trial and Manson's cult, questioned Manson about his beliefs. "We both know you ordered those murders," Bugliosi told Manson. "Bugliosi," Manson replied, "It's the Beatles, the music they're putting out. They are talking

After a series of trials, four Family members were eventually convicted of the murders, including Manson himself, on Jan. 25, 1971.

The Q Line

Pigeon problem?

The City Council recently approved a net that will be installed under the Santa Monica Pier to prevent pigeons from fouling the bay, which has some of the most polluted waters in California. This has animal rights activists in an uproar, with some claiming the net could kill or injure the birds who roost underneath the famous structure.

So this week's Q-Line question asks:

Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press.

KNOW BEFORE YOU GO

"Know Before You Go" is a weekly update on construction projects throughout Santa Monica.

Annual Tree Trimming Project

Construction is underway at 18th Street at San Vicente and Wilshire boulevards through Aug. 24. City trees will be trimmed at various locations. For the address and location please visit the KBUG Web site (www.knowB4ugo.smgov.net). The annual tree trimming schedule is subject to change without notice due to inclement weather, emergencies, community events, budget conditions, street repairs or other public improvements. Residences and businesses will be notified in advance of tree trimming operations, blocks will also be posted with no parking signs.

Alley Project

Starting Aug. 17 through Aug. 24 the Street Maintenance Division will be resurfacing alley ways with asphalt at the following locations: 1000 block of Cedar and Pearl streets and the 2300 block of 10th and 11th streets. The alley will be closed (24 hours) during construction. Daily work start time will be 7 a.m. till 4:30 p.m. The "no parking" signs will not be enforced for street cleaning or permits at this location. We ask that you please observe all construction signs. If possible, please park your vehicles on the streets during construction.

Big Blue Bus Campus Expansion (1620 Sixth St.)

No public parking along the eastside of Sixth Street (south of Colorado Avenue) until Aug. 25, 2009. No parking along the west sidewalk of Seventh Street between Colorado Avenue and Olympic Boulevard until March 2010. No parking along and no pedestrian access to south sidewalk of Colorado Avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets.

Charnock Well Field Restoration Project

Construction is under way to improve the water disinfection and water softening processes at the Santa Monica Water Treatment Plant, 1228 S. Bundy Dr., Los Angeles for the City of Santa Monica, Charnock Well Field Restoration Project. The work, which will include some demolition of existing equipment and facilities, is expected to take about one year to complete.

Euclid Court Project

Grinding, concrete gutter and asphalt paving is under way in the 1800 and 1900 block of Euclid Court. Parking enforcement and other public safety agencies have been notified. Please follow posted detour signs and flagmen's direction to ensure your safety.

Federally Funded Street Resurfacing Project no. 5

Construction is underway through Sept. 11. Please follow flagmen's direction to ensure your safety.

Parking Structures 1-6 Facade Improvement Project

Starting July 6-14, all six parking structures counting signs on Second and Fourth streets will be replaced. There will be a period of 10 days when there will be no sign displaying the number of available parking spaces in garages 1 through 6. The City is switching to a new software system which will operate the new signs.

Street and Park Lighting Project

Construction is currently under way at 12th to 17th streets between Georgina and Montana avenues. Some parking spaces will be temporarily lost and alleys may be briefly closed at one end

BOOMING BUSINESS: The federal Investment Tax Credit was expanded and extended (through 2016) this year, allowing for 30 percent of the cost of a home renewable energy system to be deducted from your federal tax bill. Pictured: A home rooftop solar installation in progress.

Solar could make dollars and cents

Dear EarthTalk

I'd like to know the relative electricity cost of utility scale solar and wind plants versus rooftop residential solar. In other words, how can I know whether to subsidize my utility's alternative energy plant or renovate my own home?

Randy Wilson
Flagstaff, AZ

MAKING SUCH A DETERMINATION IS complex, but you could start with "In My Backyard," a new online tool by the National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL). You first need to know your electricity usage and what size solar photovoltaic (PV) system or wind turbine you could install. Then, using Google Earth maps and data on the amounts of sunshine and wind at your location, the tool will estimate the electricity you could get from a certain size wind turbine or PV array installed on your property.

The costs to install renewable energy systems vary greatly by location, warn researchers at the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, which is supported by the Department of Energy (DOE). And kilowatt hour (kWh) costs vary by utility, as do state and local financial incentives. One piece of good news: The federal Investment Tax Credit was expanded and extended this year. It allows for 30 percent of the cost of your system to be deducted from your federal tax bill, and is good through 2016.

Comparing the cost of going it alone to that of simply buying green power through your utility is not a simple equation, either. You can support your utility's renewable power infrastructure by paying a premium on your electric bill, or you can buy renewable energy certificates — also known as green tags — even if your utility does not offer green power (green tags inject renewable energies into the grid even if they don't come back to you via your own utility). To decide which equation is better for you, compare the costs of those programs over the same time period with the cost of building and maintaining your own system (minus any installation credits and/or revenues from selling your excess electricity back to the utility). That would give you the relative costs and return-on-investment.

But that's still not the whole picture: Another question is whether your home system can continue to produce energy more cost-effectively than your utility, as it brings more and more green energy sources into its mix. Lawrence Berkeley says no, essentially. A February 2009 report summarizing the costs of PV from 1998 to 2007 concluded that larger systems averaged a 25 percent lower cost than the smallest ones.

The same is true for wind power, says the American Wind Energy Association. The group's February 2005 report calculates that a large wind farm can deliver electricity at a nearly 40 percent lower cost than a small one. It also can take advantage of economies of scale in lower operational and maintenance costs.

The bottom line is this: Decades ago, when widespread use of alternative energy was still only a dream, building one's own private source of home power was the only way to get off the carbon-intense grid and ensure that your own energy needs left little footprint. But today, with considerably more renewable energy sources coming online or about to do so in quantum leap measures — and at much greater efficiencies than can be achieved privately — the best bet may well be to forego the go-it alone path and support your utility's efforts to generate green power not just for your own household but for everyone.

Tropical Storm Claudette approaches Florida Panhandle

MELISSA NELSON
Associated Press Writer

PENSACOLA BEACH, Fla. Brewing in the Gulf of Mexico, Tropical Storm Claudette was bringing heavy rain to the Florida Panhandle Sunday, likely becoming the first tropical storm to strike the U.S. mainland this year.

Claudette had winds of at least 50 mph, but was not expected to cause significant flooding or wind damage. Lurking more ominously was Tropical Storm Bill, which was quickly turning into a powerful storm over warm waters in the open Atlantic with sustained winds of 65 mph. Ana, a tropical storm that had also been churning in the Atlantic, had weakened to a depression.

Skies clouded and bands of intermittent heavy rain moved on shore ahead of the storm, but the Panhandle was largely calm.

Condominiums on Pensacola Beach warned residents to bring balcony furniture indoors with winds anticipated to strengten throughout the evening. A trickle of cars and SUVs with surfboards on top headed east along the Panhandle as surfers hoped to catch waves whipped up by Claudette.

On Pensacola Beach, the National Park Service closed low-lying roads that connect the restaurants and hotels to the undeveloped National Seashore and historic Fort Pickens Fort. The Park Service said campers would be ordered to leave the area because of the likelihood of the road flooding.

Rainfall of 3 to 5 inches was expected, with isolated areas getting up to 10 inches, forecasters said.

"We may see some heavy rains as a result, but we don't expect any high winds or coastal flooding," said John Dosh, manager of Emergency Management. "This event is a good example of how quickly a tropical storm can develop. We won't always have a lot of warning. This is why citizens need to be prepared throughout hurricane season."

In Panama City, the Bay County Emergency Operations Center opened a shelter at a local high school for residents of low-lying areas and people with special needs.

A tropical storm warning covers most of the Panhandle, from the Alabama state line to the Suwanee River more than 300 miles to the east.

Miguel Gonzalez, on vacation from North Carolina, was unconcerned about the storm as he readied his children for day on Pensacola Beach. But he said his family would head in when the rain started.

"We will just stay out there for an hour or so, take a few pictures and then leave," he said.

Pensacola Beach is still recovering from Hurricane Ivan, which devastated the western Florida Panhandle and parts of Alabama in 2004.

At 5 p.m. EDT, Claudette was about 40 miles west-southwest of Apalachicola and moving northwest near 14 mph. Its center was expected to reach the northern Gulf Coast by Sunday evening.

Meanwhile, Ana's winds had diminished to 35 mph and was expected to make landfall at the Leeward Islands early Monday. Watches were posted for Puerto Rico, the U.S. and British Virgin Islands, Antigua, St. Maarten and several other islands in the area. Ana was forecast to bring 2 to 4 inches of rain.

Tropical Storm Bill, however, was intensifying far from land in the open Atlantic, and could become a hurricane late Sunday or on Monday.

In the Pacific, Hurricane Guillermo had winds that had dropped to 85 mph, and it was expected to lose steam in the next day. Guillermo was moving west at 14 mph, about 995 miles east of Hilo, Hawaii, and didn't threaten any land.

Despite the storms, a warmer weather pattern called El Nino over the Pacific Ocean is generally expected to damper the formation of tropical storms in the Caribbean and Atlantic this year, said Brian Daly, a meteorologist with the national weather service in Mobile, Ala.

"It's pretty frequent that an El Nino year would be somewhat delayed with fewer storms," Daly said.

Forecasters revised their Atlantic hurricane season predictions after the first two months of the season passed without any named storms developing.

Elephant receives artificial leg

APICHART WEERAWONG
Associated Press Writer

LAMPANG, Thailand Motola, an elephant who lost a foot and part of her leg when she stepped on a land mine 10 years ago, happily if tentatively stepped out Sunday after being fitted with an artificial limb.

In her first stroll with the permanent prosthesis, the 48-year-old female walked out of her enclosure for about 10 minutes, grabbed some dust with her trunk and jubilantly sprayed it in the air.

"It has gone very well — she has walked around twice," said Soraida Salwala, secretary general of the Friends of the Asian Elephant, a private group. "She has not put her whole weight on it yet but she's OK."

Motola was injured in 1999 while working at a logging camp near the Myanmar border, a region peppered with land mines after a half-century of insurgency. Her mangled left front foot was subsequently amputated.

Motola had been wearing a temporary device for three years to strengthen her leg muscles and tendons and to prepare her for the permanent prosthesis. Soraida said Motola has otherwise been in fine health and that her once bony frame now weighs more than 3 tons.

Motola's initial operation used enough anesthetic to floor 70 people — a record noted in the 2000 Guinness Book of World Records.

The artificial leg was made by the Prostheses Foundation, which also makes artificial limbs for human amputees.

Soraida's group established the Elephant Hospital in northern Thailand, where Motola was being treated, in 1993. The world's first such facility, the hospital has treated thousands of elephants for ailments ranging from eye infections to gunshot wounds.

Mine injuries are only one of many problems facing the domesticated giant, whose numbers have dropped from 13,400 in 1950 to today's estimated 2,500. The number of wild elephants has dropped dramatically.

Iranian leaders expand trial of their opponents

NASSER KARIMI
Associated Press Writer

TEHRAN, Iran Iran expanded a mass trial of opposition supporters on Sunday with the addition of 25 defendants — including a Jewish teenager — in defiance of international condemnation, as France said Iran agreed to release a French woman held on spying charges from prison.

The defendants are among more than 100 people charged with plotting a "soft revolution" against the Islamic theocracy during the postelection protests. The mass trial is part of an attempt to put an end to the protests by those who say Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's June 12 re-election was the result of fraud.

In apparent attempt to fend off criticism and move ahead with his second term, Ahmadinejad named three women who, if confirmed, would be Iran's first female Cabinet ministers since the 1979 Islamic Revolution.

The trial, now in its third session, has included a number of televised confessions and has drawn international condemnation from human rights groups that allege the confessions are coerced. The U.S. last week labeled the event a "show trial."

The trial and official acknowledgments that some detainees have been abused in prison have only added to anger among both opposition supporters and some conservatives upset with the treatment of protesters.

The additional defendants brought the total number being tried to 135.

The defendants include a number of high-ranking politicians linked to the country's pro-reform movement as well as employees from the British and French embassies and an Iranian-Canadian reporter for Newsweek magazine.

A 24-year-old French academic, Clotilde Reiss, who had appeared during one of the previous court sessions, was freed Sunday from an Iranian prison, the French president's office said late Sunday.

She was arrested July 1 for attending a postelection demonstration. During her court appearance, Reiss apologized for attending the demonstration but said she did so because she was curious. The French Foreign Minister has said the statement was "worked on," suggesting it was coerced.

The French president's office said it was asking for all charges to be dropped against Reiss and that she'll be residing at the French Embassy in Tehran until she can return home.

France is also asking for all charges to be dropped against another of its citizens, Nazak Afshar, who has dual French-Iranian citizenship and worked at the French Embassy. She appeared during a previous court session before being released from prison. She's now residing at the French Embassy in Tehran.

French Foreign Minister Bernard Kouchner later said on the iTele TV station that bail was paid for Reiss but that the sum was "not enormous."

While she stays at the embasssy, Reiss will prepare her defense "to make her innocence known," Kouchner said in a statement. He also reiterated the charges against her and the French-Iranian embassy employee, Nazak Afshar, were "unfounded."

At Sunday's hearing, officials showed a film of attacks on public property, cars and a mosque by protesters, and the prosecutor accused the defendants of plotting the postelection turmoil years in advance.

One of the new defendants was Yaghoghil Shaolian, 19, a member of Iran's Jewish community, which numbers about 25,000 people. He was quoted by the semiofficial Fars news agency as saying that he was not an activist but that he got caught up in the moment and threw stones at a Tehran bank during a protest.

Iran's only Jewish parliamentarian, Siamak Mereh Sedq, confirmed the detention of Shaolian and his Jewish identity to The Associated Press. He said the detention was not connected to his religion and that Shaolian is innocent.

Ahmadinejad's decision to appoint three women to his Cabinet appeared to be an attempt to mollify the opposition and some of his conservative supporters while currying favor with women.

Marzieh Vahid Dastgerdi, a 50-year-old gynecologist, will become health minister and Fatemeh Ajorlu, a 43-year-old lawmaker, will be minister of welfare and social security, Ahmadinejad said. He said he'll nominate at least one more woman to the Cabinet, but did not give a name.

Ahmadinejad's chances of using the nominations to win over the opposition seems slim as the two women he named are considered fellow hard-liners.

Women took part in large numbers in the street protests that followed the disputed election. Ahmadinejad's attempts as president to enforce a strict dress code on women and the jailing of many female activists has won him few favors with women.

Female politicians are not unheard of in Iran. Although they are barred from the presidency and religious posts, many Iranian women are in parliament and other political offices. Ahmadinejad currently has a female vice president.

But Iran has not had a female Cabinet minister since the 1979 revolution that brought the cleric-led regime to power. The last female minister, Farrokhroo Parsay, was executed on charges of corruption after the revolution.

Ahmadinejad is slated to present his new Cabinet to parliament on Wednesday. Every minister has to be approved by parliament — an uncertain prospect given that some lawmakers have criticized Ahmadinejad for not consulting with them prior to making his nominations.

Ahmadinejad also named cleric Haidar Moslehi as the new intelligence minister to replace Gholam Hossein Mohseni Ejehi, who lost his job in July in an apparent dispute over the handling of the clampdown on the unrest.

The Iranian president on Sunday also appeared to criticize President Barack Obama in a thinly veiled reference.

"The excellency who talks about change made a big mistake when he openly interfered in Iran's domestic issues," Ahmadinejad told a group of clerics Sunday, according to the semiofficial Mehr news agency.

Iran has tried to taint the unrest by asserting that it is a product of international meddling rather than internal anger.

Opposition leader Mir Hossein Mousavi, who claims he was the true election winner, is also consolidating his political forces. According to newspaper reports Sunday, he has announced he will form a new political organization.

Myanmar release of American could thaw tense relations

AMBIKA AHUJA
Associated Press Writer

BANGKOK Myanmar freed an ailing American whom it had sentenced to seven years of hard labor and handed him to an influential U.S senator on Sunday, a move that could help persuade Washington to soften its hardline policy against the military regime.

Sen. Jim Webb of Virginia, who secured John Yettaw's freedom, said he believes years of sanctions have failed to move the Southeast Asian country toward democratic reforms or talks with detained opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi.

Webb said he would discuss his conclusions and recommendations with Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton and others on his return to Washington. He declined to speculate on what the Obama administration — which is reviewing its policy toward Myanmar — would do. Webb can rally support for changes to U.S. policy in Asia as chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's East Asia and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee.

Webb flew with Yettaw to Bangkok on Sunday afternoon. Yettaw had been held at Insein Prison in Myanmar's biggest city Yangon since his arrest in early May.

The 53-year-old American was apprehended as he swam away from Suu Kyi's lakeside residence, where he had sheltered for two days after sneaking in uninvited. He was convicted last week of breaking the terms of Suu Kyi's house arrest and related charges, and sentenced to seven years in prison with hard labor.

Suu Kyi, who has been detained for 14 of the last 20 years, was herself sentenced to three years in prison with hard labor for violating her house arrest conditions through Yettaw's visit, although that was reduced to 18 months under house arrest by order of junta chief, Senior Gen. Than Shwe.

Observers widely believe Yettaw's intrusion into Suu Kyi's home gave the junta a legal pretext to keep the Nobel laureate incarcerated through next year's general election. Yettaw testified that he had a vision that Suu Kyi was at risk from assassins, and visited her to warn her.

A pale and haggard-looking Yettaw had to be assisted as he walked off the small plane on arrival in Bangkok. He smiled and flashed 'I love you' in sign language to waiting reporters. He did not respond to questions.

In the United States, Yettaw's family said he has been hospitalized in Bangkok.

His ex-wife, Yvonne, said she had spoken to his current wife, Betty Yettaw, of Camdenton, Missouri, who said she spoke with her husband in Bangkok.

"He told her he was not treated as well as everyone there and in the press had been saying," Yvonne Yettaw, of Palm Springs, California, said.

She said Betty told her they were just running tests in the Bangkok hospital, but did not know what for. "But he is not in good health," Yvonne Yettaw said.

Yvonne Yettaw also said the family has to pay for his ticket home and there have been some complications trying to schedule a flight, so it is unclear when he will be returning to the U.S.

Myanmar state television said Sunday night that Yettaw, from Falcon, Missouri, was freed on humanitarian grounds because of his health. He reportedly suffers from diabetes, epilepsy and asthma and was hospitalized for a week during the trial after suffering seizures.

The Democrat lawmaker said at a press conference in Bangkok that Yettaw's release "was a gesture from the government of Myanmar that we should be grateful for and hopefully build upon."

He said years of Western sanctions had denied Myanmar's people "the kind of access to the outside world that is essential to their economic and political growth."

Washington has been a leader in isolating the military regime, imposing political and economic sanctions because of its poor human rights record and failure to turn over power to Suu Kyi's National League for Democracy party after it won a landslide victory in 1990 elections.

Clinton, on a trip through Asia in February, said neither tough U.S. sanctions nor engagement by neighbors had persuaded the junta to embrace democracy or release Suu Kyi. The junta has been able to shrug off the sanctions in large part because of support from China.

David Steinberg, a Myanmar specialist at Georgetown University in Washington, described Webb's visit as a "very important" first step.

"Of course, to see a change in U.S. policy, the junta would have to make significant reforms," he said, adding that this would happen immediately.

He said Washington's reaching-out to the junta followed approaches by the Obama administration to several states previously considered pariahs, such as North Korea and Iran. He said he was one of several international affairs experts consulted by Obama's team to present alternative views.

During last year's presidential campaign, Obama said he would be willing to talk to anybody without preconditions, referring to nations with whom the Bush administration had refused to hold discussions. Bush ceased previous U.S. efforts to engage Pyongyang to win its agreement to stop developing nuclear weapons, and likewise gave Tehran, also seeking nuclear strike capacity, the cold shoulder.

Obama has sought to engage Tehran after a nearly three-decade estrangement, declaring a willingness to talk with its theocratic regime.

He has also allowed former President Bill Clinton to reopen lines of communications to North Korea with a high profile visit to obtain the release of two American journalists jailed for illegally entering the country.

Aung Din of the U.S. Campaign for Burma, a Washington-based pro-democracy group, said Yettaw's release was a gift to Webb from Than Shwe for opposing sanctions, and promoting engagement and increased U.S. business activities there.

"This will surely make a negative impression among the people of Burma," he wrote in an e-mail "They will think that Americans are easy to satisfy with the dictators when they get their citizens back."

Webb was allowed a rare meeting with Suu Kyi, and said he had asked the junta to release her — a long-standing demand of the United States and much of the international community.

Money-saving lifestyle for neighborhood group matriarch

ion," Emmalie said. "But once that vote comes down, we come together with one voice."

The original founding group has swollen to about 600 members today. The organization often collaborates with other neighborhoods and shows the ropes to individuals or new groups.

Though she remains on the board, Emmalie has been inactive in the field for 10 years. Her symbolic presence still packs a punch, however.

"There's nobody in City Hall that doesn't know me," she said.

In an untraditional move, Emmalie legally separated from her first husband after just a few years of marriage.

"My family had never known a divorce until I was a grown girl," she said.

The pair had married when Emmalie — whose unusual name comes from a combination of her grandmothers' — graduated from Catholic high school. She said her husband just wasn't ready to settle down, so she took her kids to California and set off to do it all on her own.

The upheaval triggered a religious transformation in Emmalie's life. She left the Catholic Church in favor of Baptism, and today attends an independent church.

"Moses gave divorces," she said. "I know my bible upside-down and backwards."

Her faith in bedrock American values remains unshaken, however.

"The founding fathers gave us damn good rules," she said. "It's amazing that they still work."

Emmalie and Chuck were not romantically involved at first — and she thinks that's the way to go.

"Become best friends first," she said. "Then you know you can spend the rest of your lives together."

The Hodgin's house could be called a little cluttered — brightly colored stuffed pillows sit atop numerous chairs and a couch, glass trinkets adorn a table near the front window underneath which potted plants bloom and dozens of framed pictures crowd the mantle.

On the wall next to the front door hangs a plaque for "The Emmalie" award — presented annually since 1992 by the Friends of Sunset Park to the member who has done the most important or greatest amount of work for the organization.

Emmalie revealed that many items in the house — which Chuck has expertly remodeled and repaired over the years, Emmalie explained, gesturing proudly to the tiled shower and Formica cabinets — were purchased from the Salvation Army. She's certainly no stranger to pinching her pennies. She was brought up around her father's store, where she learned the basics of economics in the years during and following the Great Depression.

"We never buy now and pay later," she said proudly. "We save now and buy later. Whatever meat is on sale, that's what we'll have for dinner."

Chuck and Emmalie added two kids of their own to her two sons from the previous marriage. Together, the family took many camping trips, especially enjoying Tahoe and the High Sierras.

Emmalie lost two family members — a sister and a nephew — in the last month alone, but she has faith that they've gone to a better place.

"I have no fear whatsoever of dying," Emmalie said. "We've had a good life. We've never been rich, and we've never been poor."

Angeles area, prompting an unusual weather forecast of "scattered smoke."

Bonnie Bartling with the National Weather Service said that forecast was expected for the Santa Monica Mountains, San Fernando Valley, and other areas of northern Los Angeles County.

The Yuba fire, which was ignited by burning feathers from a red-tailed hawk that flew into a power line, destroyed two homes Friday, forced the evacuation of about 120 residences and knocked out power in the Sierra foothills town of Dobbins, said Cartoscelli. Residents of about 40 homes were allowed to return after evacuation orders were lifted.

She added that the number of firefighters was more than doubled to 1,300 from around the state to battle the blaze.

Teams were trying to prevent the fire from spreading to the Colgate Powerhouse, the oldest powerhouse in the state and which provides electricity to the Dobbins area.

She said the area around the Yuba River was creating "difficult" problems, describing it as "very rough terrain. It's steep. You can't drive to it."

Farther north, the Santa Barbara County Sheriff's Department said Saturday that a week-old wildfire burning in the Los Padres National Forest was started by a campfire set by marijuana growers, part of a drug operation run by Mexican nationals.

More than 230 homes and ranches remained under evacuation orders as more than 2,000 firefighters took on that blaze, which has burned 131 square miles of timber and brush in the forest about 140 miles northwest of Los Angeles. It was 25 percent contained.

In Alameda County, which includes part of the Bay area, more than 400 firefighters were struggling to control a wind-driven grass fire burning an area of about 23 square miles near Tracy, according to a CalFire report. The Corral Fire was 60 percent contained, and Alameda County Fire department spokeswoman Aisha Knowles said Saturday that there was no threat to the nearby interstates 5 and 580.

In far northern California, 60-year-old Brenda Eitzen of Los Molinos has been accused of sparking a blaze by throwing away a lit cigarette Wednesday. She faces a maximum of four years in prison if convicted of starting the Coffin Fire, which had scorched nearly 19 square miles before full containment Saturday evening.

To the east, residents of 10 rural homes were allowed to return Saturday after a wind-whipped fire near Burney forced evacuations. Firefighters contained about 85 percent of the nearly 11-square-mile blaze about 200 miles north of Sacramento.

"They are making very good progress" said James Stewart, a CalFire spokesman.

Corruption cases on the rise

The number of foreign corrupt practices cases the U.S. government has prosecuted has risen in the past several years. In 2003, there were only three; last year there were 17, according to the Department of Justice. So far, this year there have been nine cases.

Prosecutors contend the Greens paid Juthamas Siriwan, the former governor of the Tourism Authority of Thailand, about $1.8 million to help secure the Bangkok International Film Festival and tourism-related deals, beginning in 2002. The payments, often disguised as sales commissions, were transferred into accounts of Juthamas' daughter and a friend or paid in cash to Juthamas directly, according to court documents.

The Greens' lawyers said they never paid to get the contracts.

"They got the contracts because they did good work," said Jerome Mooney, Gerald Green's lawyer. "They entered into consulting agreements with those who had connections with powerful people."

One of the agreements allowed them to sell a "Thai privilege card" giving wealthy foreigners special perks in Thailand such as being escorted through customs and some discounts at hotels and restaurants. Other contracts were to design calendars, a book and a Web site. The couple inflated their budgets so Juthamas could be paid off, prosecutors said.

Patricia Green, 54, is accused of making false statements on tax returns and conspiring with her husband to cover up the payments by using different business entities, some with phony addresses and telephone numbers. Once Gerald Green, 77, learned about the federal investigation, he altered company documents, prosecutors allege.

Mooney said the couple have lost several development deals in China, Vietnam and Thailand because of the government's investigation into their business practices. One of the projects was a home shopping network show in Thailand, he said.

"It's been stressful and difficult because any time the federal government starts an investigation, it's extremely disruptive and extensive," said Marilyn Bednarski, Patricia Green's lawyer. "It's been a two-year investigation that hasn't turned up any evidence of bribery. The allegations are ridiculous."

Some legal experts believe the main challenge facing prosecutors is proving that the Greens received the deals because they bribed foreign leaders.

"If this money ended up in the hands of (Thai) government officials, it's going to come down to showing what was the purpose and intent for these payments," said Jonathan Drimmer, a former federal prosecutor who focuses on foreign corruption violations and other U.S. laws.

Juthamas no longer is Thailand's tourism governor and has denied wrongdoing. She ran for a parliamentary seat in 2007 but pulled out of the race after the allegations surfaced. She has not been charged with any crime in Thailand, but Maj. Gen. Piyawat Kingket, chief of the Department of Special Investigation's Special Unit, said the police have found evidence against her.

"We have forwarded the case to the National Anti-Corruption Commission which is expected to decide soon whether to file charges against her to the prosecutors' office," he said.

Gerald Green's career in Hollywood spans more than 30 years, producing "Man Friday" with Peter O'Toole in 1975; serving as technical adviser on the 1984 sci-fi flick "Dune;" and striking up a friendship with Stone when they paired up on "Salvador" two years later, which was nominated for two Academy Awards.

Green ran a handful of companies that negotiated deals in foreign countries. For several years, Green worked with Mexican officials to allow filming at certain sites. He also arranged to provide online marketing and development services to a private Chinese company in 1999.

Most recently, Green was executive producer on "Rescue Dawn," starring Bale in the 2006 real-life tale of U.S. fighter pilot shot down and captured in Laos during the Vietnam War. The movie directed by Werner Herzog was made in Thailand.

Hard, Sell Hard," opening at No. 6 with $5.4 million; Disney's animated adventure "Ponyo" from animation master Hayao Miyazaki ("Spirited Away"), coming in at No. 9 with $3.5 million; and Summit Entertainment's teen rock 'n' roll tale "Bandslam," which tanked at No. 13 with just $2.3 million despite a cast that includes Vanessa Hudgens of "High School Musical."

It was Hollywood's second weekend in a row of rising revenues after a monthlong slide compared with summer 2008, when the Batman blockbuster "The Dark Knight" was smashing box-office records.

Overall receipts came in at $142 million, up 14 percent from the same weekend a year ago, when "Tropic Thunder" debuted at No. 1 with $25.8 million.

Revenues since the summer season opened the first weekend of May are at $3.77 billion, just a fraction below where Hollywood was last summer, according to Hollywood.com.

Factoring in higher ticket prices, admissions are off 4 percent compared to summer 2008, though movie attendance remains strong given how "The Dark Knight" dominated a year ago. The biggest blockbuster since "Titanic," "The Dark Knight" topped out with a domestic haul of $531 million.

"Considering we had a movie of that magnitude in the mix, I think this summer has held up very well for itself," said Dan Fellman, head of distribution for Warner Bros., which released "The Dark Knight."

1. "District 9," $37 million.
2. "G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra," $22.5 million.
3. "The Time Traveler's Wife," $19.2 million.
4. "Julie & Julia," $12.4 million.
5. "G-Force," $6.9 million.
6. "The Goods: Live Hard, Sell Hard," $5.4 million.
7. "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince," $5.2 million.
8. "The Ugly Truth," $4.5 million.
9. "Ponyo," $3.5 million.
10. "500 Days of Summer," $3 million.

Hawaii's anniversary stirs bad memories

MARK NIESSE
Associated Press Writer

HONOLULU Hawaii turns 50 years old as the 50th state Friday, but there will be no grand parades, no dazzling fireworks, no lavish displays of native culture.

Organizers of the observation are not even willing to call it a party. It is simply a "commemoration," one that is sensitive to a painful history of the Hawaiian monarchy's overthrow and unresolved claims of Native Hawaiians.

The main event is a low-key daylong conference reflecting on Hawaii's place in the world. Behind the tourist-friendly tropical images of beaches and sunshine, many remain uncomfortable with the U.S. takeover of the islands and the idea that businesses have exploited Hawaiians' culture.

"Instead of state government having huge parties and fireworks, we're having a convention," said Manu Boyd, cultural director for the Royal Hawaiian Center, a shopping and entertainment area in Waikiki. "That shows the strength and spiritual power of the Hawaiian people, whose shattered world has not yet been addressed."

When statehood came calling in 1959, it ushered in an era of economic prosperity through tourism and the side effects that came with it: resort high rises, more than 500,000 monthly tourists and an emphasis on hokey luaus rather than the authentic host culture.

Sovereignty groups advocating independence from the United States make up a minority, but many residents recognize the long-standing issues associated with the 1893 overthrow of the monarchy, the islands' annexation and past harms to the Native Hawaiian people.

Dodie Brown was a smiling 6-year-old when her father took a picture of her holding a newspaper proclaiming "Statehood!" — an image that traveled around the world.

"It's good that the commemoration is quiet," said Brown, who now works for the city of Honolulu. "Something like this should be done with taste and finesse, in respect to everyone's feelings."

Besides the statehood conference, the Hawaii Statehood Commission has been airing TV and radio ads with "50 Voices of Statehood" interviews, inviting schools to place commemorative items in time capsules, displaying artwork on the meaning of statehood in the Hawaii Convention Center and showing exhibits in state airports. State lawmakers allocated $600,000 for statehood events.

"Out of respect, we decided not to do the parade and the big party," said Kippen de Alba Chu, chairman of the Statehoood Commission. Those kinds of events "would have been a waste of state funds, especially given the economy."

Alaska, by contrast, which joined the union in January, 1959, embraced the 50th anniversary of statehood with concerts, fireworks displays, a prize-winning float in California's Rose Parade and observances throughout the state during the past 12 months. Among the festivities celebrated in a downtown Anchorage festival was the reenactment of placing the 49th star on the American flag.

Here, even the low-key conference is drawing complaints. Hawaiian sovereignty groups are planning protests outside the convention center Friday, and some say the conference's topics are too focused on tourism, economic development and business opportunities.

One panelist, University of Hawaii Center for Hawaiian Studies professor Jonathan Osorio, said the conference should focus more on Hawaiian culture and history.

"It's a political cop-out because the state doesn't really want to address the legal or political nature of its claim to authority in Hawaii," Osorio said. "It's one of the reasons they have really muted its commemoration."

Nearly 18 years after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor pulled the United States into World War II, Hawaii was admitted into the United States on Aug. 21, 1959.

About 94 percent of island chain's voters supported statehood. Opponents argue that the vote was tainted because the only choice on the ballot was to become a state or remain a territory — independence was not an option.

The Hawaiian kingdom was overthrown in 1893 when a group of white businessmen forced Queen Liliuokalani to abdicate while U.S. Marines came ashore. Hawaii was considered a republic until it became a U.S. territory by a resolution approved by Congress in 1898.

"This newfangled idea of celebrating statehood shows that people don't understand Hawaii's history, or if they do understand, then they're celebrating a lie, a theft, that essentially stole a people's right of self-determination," said Poka Laenui, a Hawaiian and attorney who has worked for independence for more than 30 years.

Along with statehood came striking changes to the islands, as the first commercial jetliner's arrival in Honolulu just a few weeks earlier began the dawn of the tourism era. Today, Hawaii's economy depends on tourism as its primary industry, with nearly 7 million visiting the islands in 2008.

Hawaii's image as a beach paradise captured the imagination of the rest of the world, aided by sometimes irreverent marketing of hula girls, leis or tiki torch-lit hotels.

In recent years, the tourism industry has made strides in ensuring the Hawaiian culture is respected rather than exploited, said Kelii Wilson, Hawaiian cultural coordinator for the Hawaii Tourism Authority.

For example, businesses should ensure that Tahitian dancers aren't called Hawaiian hula dancers, and that Hawaiian words are pronounced and spelled correctly, Wilson said.

"Growing up as a child here in Hawaii, I did see misrepresentations of the culture," she said. "Now we're getting closer to the right place."

One way Hawaiians are moving toward having a voice in their self-determination is through legislation pending in Congress that would treat them similarly to Native American tribes and Alaskan natives.

After a decade of efforts, the measure could pass into law as soon as this year with the support of Hawaii-born President Barack Obama.

'Public option' may be dropped from Obama's heath care plan

PHILIP ELLIOTT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON Bowing to Republican pressure and an uneasy public, President Barack Obama's administration signaled Sunday it is ready to abandon the idea of giving Americans the option of government-run insurance as part of a new health care system.

Facing mounting opposition to the overhaul, administration officials left open the chance for a compromise with Republicans that would include health insurance cooperatives instead of a government-run plan. Such a concession probably would enrage Obama's liberal supporters but could deliver a much-needed victory on a top domestic priority opposed by GOP lawmakers.

Officials from both political parties reached across the aisle in an effort to find compromises on proposals they left behind when they returned to their districts for an August recess. Obama had wanted the government to run a health insurance organization to help cover the nation's almost 50 million uninsured, but didn't include it as one of his core principles of reform.

Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius said that government alternative to private health insurance is "not the essential element" of the administration's health care overhaul. The White House would be open to co-ops, she said, a sign that Democrats want a compromise so they can declare a victory.

Under a proposal by Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., consumer-owned nonprofit cooperatives would sell insurance in competition with private industry, not unlike the way electric and agriculture co-ops operate, especially in rural states such as his own.

With $3 billion to $4 billion in initial support from the government, the co-ops would operate under a national structure with state affiliates, but independent of the government.

They would be required to maintain the type of financial reserves that private companies are required to keep in case of unexpectedly high claims.

"I think there will be a competitor to private insurers," Sebelius said. "That's really the essential part, is you don't turn over the whole new marketplace to private insurance companies and trust them to do the right thing."

Obama's spokesman refused to say a public option was a make-or-break choice.

"What I am saying is the bottom line for this for the president is, what we have to have is choice and competition in the insurance market," White House press secretary Robert Gibbs said Sunday.

A day before, Obama appeared to hedge his bets.

"All I'm saying is, though, that the public option, whether we have it or we don't have it, is not the entirety of health care reform," Obama said at a town hall meeting in Grand Junction, Colo. "This is just one sliver of it, one aspect of it."

It's hardly the same rhetoric Obama employed during a constant, personal campaign for legislation.

"I am pleased by the progress we're making on health care reform and still believe, as I've said before, that one of the best ways to bring down costs, provide more choices and assure quality is a public option that will force the insurance companies to compete and keep them honest," Obama said in July.

Lawmakers have discussed the co-op model for months although the Democratic leadership and the White House have said they prefer a government-run option.

Conrad, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, called the argument for a government-run public plan little more than a "wasted effort." He added there are enough votes in the Senate for a cooperative plan.

"It's not government-run and government-controlled," he said. "It's membership-run and membership-controlled. But it does provide a nonprofit competitor for the for-profit insurance companies, and that's why it has appeal on both sides."

Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., said Obama's team is making a political calculation and embracing the co-op alternative as "a step away from the government takeover of the health care system" that the GOP has pummeled.

"I don't know if it will do everything people want, but we ought to look at it. I think it's a far cry from the original proposals," he said.

Republicans say a public option would have unfair advantages that would drive private insurers out of business. Critics say co-ops would not be genuine public options for health insurance.

Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Texas, said it would be difficult to pass any legislation through the Democratic-controlled Congress without the promised public plan.

"We'll have the same number of people uninsured," she said. "If the insurance companies wanted to insure these people now, they'd be insured."

Rep. Tom Price, R-Ga., said the Democrats' option would force individuals from their private plans to a government-run plan as some employers may choose not to provide health insurance.

A shift to a cooperative plan would certainly give some cover to fiscally conservative Blue Dog Democrats who are hardly cheering for the government-run plan.

"The reality is that it takes 60 percent to get this done in the Senate. It's probably going to have to be bipartisan in the Senate, which I think it should be," said Rep. Mike Ross, D-Ark., who added that the proposals still need changes before he can support them.

Milwaukee mayor hospitalized after pipe attack

DINESH RAMDE
Associated Press Writer

MILWAUKEE Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett was hospitalized Sunday after a man attacked him with a metal pipe as the mayor tried to assist a grandmother screaming for help near the Wisconsin State Fair.

Barrett, 55, was in stable condition at a local hospital with a fractured hand and other head and hand wounds, official said.

The mayor had gone to the fair outside Milwaukee on Saturday night with his sister, two daughters and a niece. As the group left and walked to Barrett's car, they heard a woman screaming for someone to call 911, police said.

Police said the woman was a grandmother who was trying to protect her 1-year-old granddaughter from a 20-year-old man, an assault authorities characterized as a domestic dispute.

"The mayor stopped and said something (to the man) like, 'Let's all cool down here, I'm going to call 911,'" the mayor's spokesman Patrick Curley said. "He said it one or two times according to him. When he took out his phone, that's when the suspect attacked him."

The suspect hit Barrett in the head and torso with a metal pipe. Barrett apparently fought back, fracturing his hand when he punched the suspect.

"I think he hit the guy," Curley said. "I don't know where, but it was hard enough, whatever he hit, to fracture his hand."

The suspect then fled the area when he heard sirens. He was arrested on Sunday at a Milwaukee home, and police recovered the alleged weapon. The woman and baby were uninjured.

The mayor, who did not ask for security to accompany him to the fair because he wasn't on official duty, underwent successful surgery Sunday on his fractured right hand and also had cuts on his head and lip stitched up, Curley said. The mayor likely will remain in the hospital through Monday, he said.

The mayor's brother, John Barrett, said the family was optimistic about the mayor's recovery.

"We're extremely proud of Tom's selflessness and his courage," John Barrett said, fighting back tears at a news conference.

Gov. Jim Doyle said he also visited Barrett at the hospital Sunday morning and found him in "good spirits and looking good considering what happened."

Obama enjoys the great outdoors

LIZ SIDOTI
Associated Press Writer

GRAND CANYON NATIONAL PARK, Ariz. President Barack Obama is hardly the consummate Western outdoorsman.

The Marlboro Man he's not.

He's spent his adult life in big cities — New York, Chicago and, now, Washington. Basketball, golf, and bodysurfing are how this jock rolls. Indoor daily gym workouts are the norm. Hunting, climbing, rafting — not so much.

Yet there he was on a summer weekend, enthusiastically soaking in America's vast wilderness. He toured Yellowstone National Park, checking out Old Faithful. He strolled trails along the Grand Canyon's rim. He cast a fly while fishing in a Montana river and spent a night in a mountainside lodge.

"Pretty nice, eh," Obama said Sunday as the family took in the breathtaking view from the Grand Canyon's Hopi Point under a magnificent blue sky and overlooking a 5,000-foot drop to the Colorado River. "Last time I was here was when I was 11 years old." Asked by a ranger if it looked the same, he said, "It does!"

A day earlier at Yellowstone, the first family watched the world's most famous geyser erupt. "Oh, that's pretty good. Cool! Look at that. That's a geyser there," Obama said. His entourage also traipsed across wooden walkways in the steamy Black Sand Basin, a brilliant-hued hydrothermal spot in the park dotted with hot springs, geysers, mudpots and fumaroles.

With the wonders of his country at his disposal, Obama did things that might seem a little out of his comfort zone. It's safe to say that this Hawaiian-born president has spent more time on beaches and in cities than he has in the mountains of the West.

But this is also a guy who clearly has a zest for recreation and a curiosity about the diverse nation he governs. He seems game for trying just about any sport or activity. And he appears intent on broadening his kids' interests and, perhaps, his own.

So it was of little wonder then that he brought his wife, Michelle, and daughters Malia and Sasha, as well as other relatives, including half-sister Maya Soetoro-Ng and her young family, on a trip that was part family vacation, part policy promotion.

He held a couple of town hall style events to plug his efforts to overhaul health care. In Belgrade, Mont., he opened with this comment: "Here in Montana you've got bears and moose and elk. In Washington, you have mostly bull. So this is a nice change of pace!"

Obama chuckled at the line. But he clearly was at his happiest when he shed his typical dark business-suit for casual wear — a light jacket for Yellowstone, a golf shirt for the Grand Canyon and hiking sneakers for both — and some quality time with his family.

The president was in jovial spirits from the moment he bounded up the Air Force One stairs at the start of his trip, mock-racing his youngest daughter to the top. He appeared to relish his role as a father as he treated the girls to ice cream at a Yellowstone general store and talked with them about different kinds of rocks above the Grand Canyon.

He showed them sites he saw as a child when he visited national parks, including Yellowstone and the Grand Canyon, with his mother, grandmother and half-sister. At both parks, he peppered rangers with questions and seemed engrossed in the answers.

> "HE WANTS VERY MUCH TO SEE AND SHARE THE OUTDOORS AND SOME OF THE BEAUTIFUL PLACES IN THE COUNTRY WITH HIS DAUGHTERS."
> Robert Gibbs
> Press secretary

Obama, aides say, had pressed them for a while to schedule a parks trip. The last Democratic president, Bill Clinton, often vacationed in the West; his pollster used surveys to decide the best place for him to spend his leisure time, politically.

As Obama tended to presidential duties this weekend, his wife and daughters spent 90 minutes whitewater rafting in rain and, at times, hail in Montana and went peach-picking in Colorado, bringing some back for travelers on Air Force One.

"He wants very much to see and share the outdoors and some of the beautiful places in the country with his daughters," press secretary Robert Gibbs said. "He's always tremendously enjoyed being outside with his family."

Since taking office in January, the first family has spent as much time as possible at Camp David, the presidential retreat near Thurmont, Md. Obama also has reminisced about riding bikes along the lakeshore in Chicago with his children before the presidential campaign made such private moments impossible.

For decades, politicians, and particularly Democrats, have staged events — think Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry in duck-hunting camouflage in 2004 — to show the public they're on the side of outdoorsmen, who tend to be more conservative because of support for gun rights and wariness of the federal government's reach.

Obama refrained from such moments during the campaign. He was known to shun attempts by his advisers to make him to do things that appeared overtly political and were intended to win over specific constituencies such as hunters and anglers.

Things didn't turn out so well, for example, when he bowled in blue-collar Pennsylvania only to be dogged by his dismal score.

Reporters and photographers were shielded from some of Obama's weekend recreational activities, including his Montana fly fishing experience that advisers called a private event.

TRACK AND FIELD

Bolt sets world record in 100 at championships

PAT GRAHAM
AP Sports Writer

BERLIN Usain Bolt crossed the finish line, saw his record-setting time on the clock and spread his arms as if he were soaring like a bird.

About all this guy can't do is fly. And by saving his celebration until after the finish line this time, he showed how fast a man really can go on two feet.

The Jamaican shattered the world record again Sunday, running 100 meters in 9.58 seconds at the world championships to turn his much-anticipated race against Tyson Gay into a one-man show.

That was 0.11 seconds faster than the mark he set last year at the Beijing Olympics — the biggest improvement in the 100-meter record since electronic timing began in 1968.

Gay, his closest rival, broke the American mark with his 9.71 performance and still looked like he was jogging — finishing a few big strides behind Bolt in second place.

Bolt's only competition these days is the clock.

And when he's really trying, not hot-dogging it over the line the way he did in China, even time itself doesn't stand a chance.

"I don't run for world records," said Bolt, who crossed the line with a slight breeze at his back.

Yet those records always seem to find him.

He thinks he can go even lower.

"I know I said 9.4," Bolt said, grinning. "You never know. I'll just keep on working."

Last summer at Beijing, Bolt shut his race down early, waving his arms and celebrating about 10 meters before he got to the line. Some, like Jacques Rogge of the International Olympic Committee, viewed it as a sign of bad sportsmanship. Most saw it as a welcome sigh of relief for a sport that needed some good news after years of doping and scandal.

Even this week, the Jamaican track team was making headlines for the wrong reasons — a complicated doping case. Then a group of athletes who were uninvited to the worlds by the country's track officials because they didn't participate in team training camp got reinvited at the request of international officials.

Bolt made everyone forget about that and showed, once again, what a great sport track can be when the focus is on the track, not doping control and the meeting rooms.

Bolt ran his latest unforgettable race at Olympic Stadium in Berlin, the history-filled home of the 1936 Olympics where Jesse Owens became the world's biggest track star. Bolt lives in Owens' stratosphere now, having set the 100 world record three times and also owning the 200-meter record thanks to the 19.30 he ran in Beijing to break Michael Johnson's 12-year-old mark.

Now he has added the world championship, last won by Gay in 2007, to his Olympic title.

A Stanford professor estimated he could've gone 9.55 if he'd run full out through the line in Beijing. Bolt almost made that guy look like a genius.

"He's like a created game person," American Darvis Patton said. "I can't imagine going 9.71 and not winning. That will win every race in history except for today (and at the Olympics)."

It's easy to see why Bolt is such a crowd favorite. He's a colorful character who loves to entertain. The track is his stage and he didn't disappoint Sunday.

Before climbing into the blocks, Bolt gave spectators a quick wave and did his trademark bow-and-arrow pose.

That drew big applause.

Then the real show started.

Unlike the Olympics, when he skidded from the blocks, Bolt burst out this time in his yam-colored Pumas, opening a sizable lead on the field after 20 meters.

From there, it could have been a stroll in the park. But there was no letting up this time. Before crossing the line, he glanced to his right to check on Gay once — not in the picture — and then back at the clock. His face lit up as he spotted the digits "9.58" appear on the screen next to the track.

The party was on. He grabbed a flag and did a victory lap with countryman Asafa Powell, who finished with the bronze (9.84).

They even stopped midway down the track and did a little dance number. Too bad the song wasn't from rapper Akon, who wrote about the sprinter in a song, the lyric going, "Quicker than Usain Bolt, the fastest thing runnin'."

Next came pictures — lots of flashes popping — and hugs as Bolt greeted everyone who called his name — and they were numerous. The entire victory lap took about 20 minutes.

Or about 19:50.42 longer than it took to run his 100.

Standing back at the finish line, waiting for him to finish up, was Gay. He paced around, clearly agitated.

Not in anger at losing, though.

No, he wanted off the track, but wasn't allowed by an official. Gay was quite complimentary of his rival in a race that lived up to the hype.

"I've been telling you someone could run 9.5," Gay said. "I'm happy he did it, it showed a human can take it to another level. Unfortunately, I wasn't the one to do it, but I still have confidence I can do it one day."

Gay didn't have much of a chance. Not against Bolt. And certainly not with a groin injury that he admitted to Saturday. He said it was worse than he let on, but refused to use it as a convenient excuse.

"I showed a lot of heart," Gay said. "I put it together the best I could."

Powell was right beside Bolt his entire journey around the track, then through the mixed zone.

For Powell, Bolt is a blessing. It takes all the pressure off his shoulders. He doesn't have to carry the weight of a country by himself.

"He really knows how to perform under pressure," Powell said. "I need to take a page out of his book."

That might not be a bad idea for all the sprinters. British sprinter Dwain Chambers, who tested positive for the steroid THG in 2003 and served a two-year suspension, got to see Bolt's spectacle from the back of the field.

It was rather enjoyable.

"As you get older, you start to realize when you're put into these situations that you can't be upset," said Chambers, who wound up sixth. "You can't put that into words. Many guys said to me that it's demoralizing to be apart of a world-record race. For me, it was exciting."

Swell Forecast

Today looks smaller, perhaps just knee to waist high most everywhere. West facing breaks may see a slight increase in NW wind swell, but nothing above waist high is expected at this point. Winds should be light and variable in the AM.

Long Range Synopsis

This weekend we could see an increase in NW wind swell, perhaps waist to chest for west facing breaks.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Burn the candle at both ends, Libra

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You want to be nurturing, but you simply might be too clear and direct for another person's taste. He or she might "choose" to be confused. Tonight: Home is where the heart is.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Communication could be a bit overwhelming. You hear many different opinions about the same matter. Some people are stern, while others are confused. Still others might be overly affectionate or caring. Support your own actions. Tonight: Swap news.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Be aware of your budget. You might not always have the right solution, but more times than not, you'll find the answer. Lady Luck is a strong player in events. You could be confused about someone's real intentions. Observe, and the right answer will appear. Tonight: Pay bills first.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ You might be one of the most chipper signs, but still you find a talk to be heavy. A boss or authority figure is confusing. Slow down and don't push anyone too hard. What you see could change your mind about a key person in your life. Tonight: Clear the air.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Much is swirling behind the scenes. You could have difficulty deciding what to do and when. All your efforts seem to backfire. Recognize your limitations. Nevertheless, being vulnerable adds a lot of zip and caring to an existing bond. Tonight: A personal night.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Zero in on a key goal. A meeting provides a platform for an overdue discussion. Through talking and playing devil's advocate, many people gain a better understanding of your ideas. Tonight: Where people are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Many turn to you for answers. Pressure from a group or some friends might add turbulence to an already seemingly fragile connection. It seems as if you are putting someone on a pedestal, leaving this person with one option – to fall off. Tonight: Burning the candle at both ends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Learn to take an overview, no matter how uncomfortable you might be. It is through detachment that answers appear. Some confusion surrounds an older relative or another key person. You could feel unduly pushed. Tonight: Take in new vistas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Deal with others directly. Your ideas are more readily accepted when people get that one-on-one attention. You could be stunned by what comes up out of the blue. Be willing to get to the bottom of an issue, even if the going could be a bit rough. Tonight: How about dinner for two?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Defer to others who might be difficult to convince that they are anything but right. Your best bet is to relax and let them figure out what works and what doesn't. Tonight: Listen to someone's suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ You might want to do something quite different in the near future involving your day-to-day life. Lighten up and remain sure of yourself. Tonight: Put your feet up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Your creativity bubbles forth when you least expect it. Honor strong feelings involving an associate or someone in your day-to-day life. You also might be somewhat confused by what you are feeling. Tonight: So what if it is Monday?

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year, your projects move forward because of a willingness to assume a low profile. Take frequent timeouts, whether you just walk or do yoga. These periods prove to be vital. Often, you don't see partners clearly. If you are attached, you wear rose-colored glasses when it comes to your significant other. When reality hits, you could be disappointed. If you are single, check out potential suitors, as they could be emotionally unavailable. CANCER sees right through you.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

■ World-Class Adolescent Endeavors: Japanese engineer Takuo Toda's paper airplane was certified in May as the Guinness Book record-holder for the longest flight from a single folded sheet of paper: 27.9 seconds. And in Witcham, England, in July, Jim Collins won the World Peashooting Championship, using a "traditional" instrument blowing at a target 12 yards away, but noncompeting ex-champion George Hollis once again drew the most attention with his homemade, gyroscopic-balancing, laser-guided peashooter, with which he won three previous championships.

■ When motorist Timothy Pereira, 19, rammed Christine Speliotis' car head-on in Salem, Mass., in March, there was no doubt in police officers' minds what the cause was: Pereira was driving 85 mph in a 35 mph zone and had swerved into Speliotis' lane. However, in July, Brandon Pereira, 17, an injured passenger in his cousin's car, filed a lawsuit against Speliotis for negligence, claiming that if she had been quicker to get out of the way, the collision would not have occurred.

NOTICE OF SUMMONS

CASE NUMBER LC 085337
NOTICE TO DEFENDANT: JOHN VARNELL AND DOES 1 THROUGH 25
YOU ARE BEING SUED BY PLAINTIFF: MICHAEL SENN
You have 30 CALENDAR DAYS after this summons and legal papers are served on you to file a written response at this court and have a copy served on the plaintiff. A letter or phone call will not protect you. Your written response must be in proper legal form if you want the court to hear your case. There may be a court form that you can use for your response. You can find these court forms and more information at the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), your county law library, or the courthouse nearest you. If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the court clerk for a fee waiver form. If you do not file your response on time, you may lose the case by default, and your wages, money, and property may be taken without further warning from the court.
There are other legal requirements. You may want to call an attorney right away. If you do not know an attorney, you may want to call an attorney referral service. If you cannot afford an attorney, you may be eligible for free legal services from a nonprofit legal services program. You can locate these nonprofit groups at the California Legal Services Web site (www.lawhelpcalifornia.org) the California Courts Online self-help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), or by contacting your local court or county bar association.
