BENUN HIGHLIGHTS HOPEFUL GIRLS XC SQUAD

Samohi boys and girls cross-country teams have already started training for their upcoming season, with practices all summer long and a varsity trip to Mammoth. While both teams are expecting positive outcomes this season, the girls specifically had an exceptionally strong season last year.

After placing 11th in state last season, the Samohi girls squad has a hopeful season ahead of them. For the first time in team history, the team made it to the California Interscholastic Federation finals and then advanced to the state meet, which was a major accomplishment.

In the Bay League, and California in general, simply just getting past the league stages is tough. Coach Tania Fischer, who has been the head cross-country coach for almost 30 years now, doesn't think people truly understand how difficult it is.

"Every time, it was almost a miracle that we made it to the next level," Coach Fischer said.

Advancing far in CIF wasn't the team's only accomplishment. Earlier in the season, the team won Woodbridge, one of the biggest cross-country meets in Southern California.

Phoebe Benun, an incoming junior and the team's top runner, placed first individually at Woodbridge. She then went on to place first individually at league finals and sixth individually at the final state meet. Benun was ranked top 15 in the entire state of California.

"In the history of Samo girls XC, she is our fastest girl ever," Fischer said. "She is a team leader and helps the other girls believe that they can run fast."

Having only lost one graduate, with many possible alternates, the squad will have an even stronger team next season. The girls varsity

Council set to submit guarantee confirming beach volleyball venue for the 2028 Olympics

SCOTT SNOWDEN
SMDP Staff Writer

In a nice reminder of how this little corner of the world will captivate the attention of the planet's population in just short of five years, in Tuesday's meeting, staff will recommend the Council authorize the City to submit a venue guarantee letter that confirms the use of the vast beach during the 2028 Summer Olympic Games.

The vast swathes of Santa Monica sand will be used to host the beach volleyball competition. The concept plan includes a temporary 12,000-seat stadium north of the Pier, plus warm-up and practice courts and operational and broadcast components in Beach Lot 1 North. The plan also outlines security measures, transportation solutions and construction schedules.

In 2016, the rental fee for the venue was estimated to be approximately $3.7 million, based on established formulas and current rates, the rental fee would be updated to 2028 market rates. The preliminary construction plan would phase the closure of Beach Lot 1 North and the beach area as follows:

Civic Auditorium feasibility plan passes Board, on to next round of discussions

THOMAS LEFFLER
SMDP Staff Writer

After nearly six months of research, the public was presented with a plan to restore the Santa Monica Civic Auditorium, a plan that will be moving forward at least for the moment.

Hearing the Samohi campus plan feasibility study for the auditorium, an ambitious project carrying a price tag of over $226 million thus far, the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District Board of Education voted 5-2 in favor of developing a communications plan to discuss the auditorium project with local stakeholders. Board members Alicia Mignano, Jennifer Smith, Laurie Lieberman, Jon Kean and board vice-president Richard Tahvildaran-Jesswein were for the motion, while member Stacy Rouse and board president Maria

Hardly anyone owns a hydrogen car. California may pay up to $300 million for fuel stations anyway

ALEJANDRO LAZO
Special to the Daily Press

PUMP: A hydrogen vehicle owner adds fuel to his vehicle at an Iwatani hydrogen fuel station in West Sacramento on July 25, 2023.

Electric cars are rolling off production lines, and one in five new cars sold in California this year is battery-powered. "California is showing the world what's possible," said Gov. Gavin Newsom, whose plan to phase out fossil fuels and gasoline-powered cars is key to his ambitions of tackling climate change.

But as California steers away from the internal combustion engine, the rapid transition is fueling a fight in the Capitol over how large a role hydrogen fuel cells will play in powering the clean cars of the future.

Democrats in the state Legislature are debating how much money to give companies to build hydrogen fueling stations. A lobbying group for hydrogen supporters and suppliers, including Chevron, Shell and Toyota, is seeking a designated 30% share of money from the state Clean Transportation Program, amounting to $300 million over the next decade.

The program is funded by annual fees paid by California drivers — $2 car registration fees and $4 smog abatement fees. Over the last decade, hydrogen has been earmarked for 20% of its funds.

So far, the California Energy Commission has spent $202 million for hydrogen fueling stations. Yet there is still low demand for the cars, with sluggish sales: Only two hydrogen models are available, the Toyota Mirai and Hyundai Nexo, and only 1,767 have been sold in California this year. Last year's sales declined 20% although sales are up this summer.

In all, Californians own only about 12,000 hydrogen-powered cars, compared to more than 760,000 powered by batteries.

Like battery-powered cars, hydrogen cars produce no emissions. But the electricity to run their motors uses compressed hydrogen gas, which is mostly derived from natural gas, a fossil fuel.

The state's funding has helped create a network of just 65 hydrogen fueling stations, 20 of them in Los Angeles County. Driving a hydrogen car outside of California is virtually impossible: One other public hydrogen fueling station exists in the U.S., and it's in Hawaii.

The energy commission staff has warned lawmakers that there won't be enough hydrogen cars on the roads to use new stations already allocated state funds. Stations will triple by 2027 — resulting in four times more than the amount needed to support even the "vehicle manufacturers' best-case expected volume," the commission said. They also warned that they haven't received enough bids from hydrogen station developers to spend all the money the Legislature already has allocated.

"Ten years ago there was a reasonable argument that hydrogen could make up a pretty significant percentage of our zero emission transportation needs," said Ethan Elkind, director of the climate program at the Center for Law, Energy & the Environment at UC Berkeley Law. "But at this point battery electric has completely dominated the light duty sector, and is looking to dominate on heavy duty, as well."

In the Legislature, the debate among Democrats is whether hydrogen suppliers should continue to get a substantial amount of money from the Clean Transportation Program — and if so, how much and for how long.

Assembly Bill 241 by Eloise Gómez Reyes, a Democrat from San Bernardino, would designate 10% of the program's funds — $10 million a year through July 1, 2030 — to pay for hydrogen fueling stations.

Reyes and Sen. Lena Gonzalez, a Democrat from Long Beach, initially tried bills that would have completely eliminated a hydrogen carveout. But they failed to get enough support from fellow Democrats so Reyes amended her bill in June to seek the 10%.

Reyes has not brought the proposal to a vote because some Assemblymembers want more money for hydrogen, while others think that's too much, so she wants "more conversations with concerned members."

Gonzalez said she opposes more than the $10 million a year because hydrogen car technology remains unpopular, inefficient and dependent on burning fossil fuels.

"It's a waste of money," she said. "They say they're hydrogen businesses, but they're really fossil fuel industry businesses."

Sen. Josh Newman, a Democrat from

Leon-Vazquez opposed.

The board directed staff, led by Chief Operations Officer Carey Upton, to conduct a feasibility study on the auditorium project in early March. The building has been closed since 2013 due to seismic and accessibility challenges.

Finally getting a chance to show their findings, Upton spearheaded the hour-long presentation that also included experts in topics such as campus construction and historic integrity.

If purchased and renovated, the auditorium would hold at least 80 days of Samohi sporting events. This includes events for volleyball, basketball and the wrestling team. Potential district uses outside of sporting events include convocation, college fairs, proms, graduation ceremonies and the Stairway of the Stars concert event.

Beyond SMMUSD events, the auditorium would be available for at least 165 days out of the year for other community uses, Upton noted. Community events such as concerts, banquets, theater shows and exhibitions were just a few of the items pointed to, something public commenter and community activist Jerry Rubin commended after attending "100s" of shows at the venue.

"We emphasize soccer and athletics, but the kids don't really understand how important it is to have cultural, musical, artistic moments in their life," Rubin said.

As far as finances, a purchase price from the City of Santa Monica is unknown at this time, and would further add to the costly project. Purchase and construction would require funding via a General Obligation Bond, with Upton stating that the bond for the auditorium project would not impact the district's next planned bond for funding elementary and middle school projects.

In the next round of research and stakeholder discussion, Upton pointed to several key questions that remain, including the task of gaining a Coastal Development Permit from the California Coastal Commission, as well as an Environmental Impact Review under the California Environmental Quality Act.

Another question, raised by several public commenters, was the matter of preserving the auditorium's landmark status. Feelings on landmark status were particularly tense due to the Los Angeles Unified School District demolishing another historical site, the Ambassador Hotel, in 2005. Board members, however, were unwavering in their support for recognizing the historical significance of the site.

"I have absolutely no interest ... in being a member of a board that would somehow contribute to the demolition of the Civic ... I have no interest in that whatsoever," Tahvildaran-Jesswein said.

Out of the 19 speakers both in person and via the Zoom platform, several were for the project, but the overall majority was against moving forward for several reasons. Besides concern over historical preservation status, some pointed to the auditorium project as a waste of money and time, as well as a less than ideal option for intended usage like gymnasium space.

"You need to be honest, this doesn't meet the needs of our sports," said Nikki Kolhoff, who noted the lack of courts and locker room space for student athletes under the plan. "If you care about our kids, you are going to work on a legitimate, plain high school gym on our campus and leave this very special historic resource to the city and the residents of Santa Monica. It's not yours."

Dissent on the council side was based on skepticism in city officials' willingness to cooperate in purchasing negotiations. The Santa Monica City Council recently voted to terminate negotiations on the auditorium property with the Community Corporation of Santa Monica, leaving the school district as the lone bidder under the current Surplus Land Act process.

Rouse said that city officials need to hear all the public feedback received by the board, and that the process may be "a little premature" with questions to be had on the city side of the deal.

"It seems like things have not gelled yet and there's still a lot in question, and I think that's where ... some anxieties and concerns are coming up ... the school district isn't the driver of this, the city is," Rouse said.

Board president Leon-Vazquez agreed that "it's not us to decide," and commented before her dissenting vote that she does not want to move forward "until we have those conversations" with city council.

Community Walk/Run for Mamas with Limited Needs

September 24, 2023 will mark the Third Annual Miles for Mamas starting at 9 a.m. with communities walking and running in Santa Monica, New Jersey, and in their own "virtual" satellite groups across the country for women with limited means. Hosting this event is The Village for Mamas, a non-for-profit 501c3 organization that offers no-strings attached one-time grants for birthing classes, doula services, lactation consultation, childcare, housecleaning, and personal care, as well as free meal kit or food delivery subscriptions, diapers and wipes, formula and laundry services for new and expecting mothers who need assistance to cover these costs. The Village believes that pre and postpartum support should be available to all new mothers, not exclusively those with means to pay.

Doulas are employed to provide guidance and continuous support to a pregnant woman during labor, and assist with prenatal or postpartum visits. Currently, insurance companies in the US do not cover doula services. This out-of-pocket expense, for care that should be covered, makes doula support and the comfortable birthing experience many women would prefer, out of reach.

In 2017, Bohren et al. published an updated Cochrane review on the use of (birth doulas) during childbirth, and found people who received continuous support were more likely to have spontaneous vaginal births and less likely to have any pain medication, epidurals, negative feelings about childbirth, vacuum or forceps-assisted births, and Cesareans. In addition, their labors were shorter by about 40 minutes and their babies were less likely to have low Apgar scores at birth. There is a smaller amount of evidence that doula support in labor can lower postpartum depression in mothers. There is no evidence for negative consequences to continuous labor support.

"Since The Village incorporated in 2020, we've given out over $20,000 to new and expecting moms to help them pay for birth and postpartum doulas, lactation consultation, pelvic floor physical therapy and more. Helping one mama can feel like slow progress but is incredibly impactful. The Miles for Mama's event is a really fun morning spent on the beach for a good cause," says Village co-founder Sarah Croce.

In Santa Monica, the walk and run will take place at the North Beach Playground from 9 a.m. - 12 p.m. Every registered attendee will receive a t-shirt, a tote bag, two tickets to enter a raffle, plus prizes and giveaways from local sponsors such as Primo Passo Coffee, Rejuice, The Pump Station, Perelel, Hey Babe Wellness, Women Making Waves, and more.

With COVID-19 Transmission Increasing, Those at Higher Risk Should Adopt Simple Strategies to Reduce Exposure, Prevent Severe Illness

With COVID-19 transmissions and hospitalizations on the rise in Los Angeles County, residents at higher risk should consider employing simple strategies to reduce their exposures and prevent severe illness. Individuals who are older, those with weakened immune systems, and those with chronic health conditions continue to experience higher rates of hospitalizations and deaths from COVID-19.

To reduce risks, especially as transmission of the virus is increasing, the Los Angeles County Department of Public Health (Public Health) asks those more vulnerable to take precautions to reduce potential exposures, identify COVID infections early, and consult with a health care provider when infected to access appropriate therapeutics. Protective measures include wearing a well-fitting, high filtration mask when traveling via public transit, when in poorly ventilated and/or crowded indoor spaces, and when at health care facilities.

Those that provide services to individuals at higher risk of severe illness from COVID are also asked to take sensible steps to prevent transmission of COVID-19; this includes staying home and away from others if sick, testing before gathering indoors, and wearing a mask if providing patient care.

Even as hospitalizations from COVID-19 remain at near-record lows, older adults continue to be hospitalized at significantly higher rates than any other age group in Los Angeles County. Public Health data shows that people 80 years old and older were more than five times as likely to be hospitalized with COVID-19 than people ages 50-79, during the 30-day period ending Aug. 5. Adults ages 50 to 79 were four times as likely to be hospitalized from COVID-19 than people 30-49 years old during the same 30-day period.

Some of the people at highest risk of complications from COVID-19 live in skilled nursing facilities, where there has been an increase in COVID-19 outbreaks in recent weeks. Public Health opened 59 new outbreak investigations at skilled nursing facilities in Los Angeles County during the 30-day period ending Aug. 16, a significant increase from the 34 outbreak investigations opened during the previous 30 days.

One way to reduce outbreaks at skilled nursing facilities is to make sure residents, staff and visitors are up to date on their vaccinations. As of Aug. 15, 76 percent of all skilled nursing facility residents and half of all staff are up to date on their COVID-19 vaccinations. Vaccines are a safe, highly effective and relatively simple to reduce the spread of COVID-19.

As fall approaches, all residents are encouraged to ask their health care provider what vaccines they should get to protect against COVID-19, flu and respiratory syncytial virus (RSV). The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) and U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) are slated to consider authorizing a new COVID-19 vaccine next month. The yearly flu vaccine also is recommended for everyone 6 months old and older. Additionally, a new RSV vaccine has been approved for people ages 60 and older and other new RSV protections are now available for infants and young children.

Anyone who tests positive for COVID-19 should talk to their health care provider about treatment options, such as Paxlovid, as soon as possible. Treatment must begin within five days of the onset of symptoms. To access free telehealth services for treatment, contact the Public Health Call Center, seven days a week from 8 a.m. to 8:30 p.m., at 1-833-540-0473.

Los Angeles County remains in the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Low Hospital Admission Level with 4.1 weekly COVID-19 hospital admissions per 100,000 people, reported on Aug. 14 for the seven-day period ending Aug. 5.

HYDROGEN

Fullerton, said hydrogen cars are not competitive yet because they haven't received the state money they need for fueling stations. "The reason it's behind is because we haven't made the appropriate investments," he said during an April hearing.

The success of the funding bill could come down to the votes of several Democrats in the Assembly who expressed concerns to Reyes. Four told CalMatters that they want money explicitly set aside for hydrogen, calling it a valuable, zero-emission technology for cars. But they didn't include specifics on how much. They are Cecilia Aguiar-Curry of Davis, Jacqui Irwin of Thousand Oaks, Blanca Rubio of West Covina and Carlos Villapudua of Stockton.

Without their votes, a funding bill for the Clean Transportation Program likely won't pass.

Other legislators say electric cars have left hydrogen vehicles in the dust so they would be misspending the fees paid by California drivers for fueling stations that few drivers will use.

The conflict in the Legislature could jeopardize the future of the program, which is a key source of money for building new charging stations as more people buy electric cars. The program will expire next year if the Legislature can't agree on a spending plan.

The Clean Transportation Program, created in 2007, has used fees paid by California drivers to invest nearly $1.6 billion in alternative fuels, charging stations and other clean vehicle technologies through March of this year. It's an essential source of funding for California's clean car transition given that it's more consistent than California's volatile budget.

"The Clean Transportation Program is — not to be too dorky about it — a beautiful market signal," said Hannon Rasool, director of the Energy Commission's fuels and transportation division. "It tells folks we're committed, we're in it for the long run and here's a steady amount of funding."

The program has explicitly set aside money for hydrogen fueling stations since 2013, when former Assemblymember Henry Perea, who now leads West Coast government affairs for Chevron, authored a 20% annual carveout for hydrogen. The goal was to build a network of 100 hydrogen-fueling stations. Gov. Jerry Brown increased that target to 200 by 2025. California Energy Commission staff told lawmakers in presentations that it will meet the 200 station goal by 2027.

The battle among Democrats in the Legislature

Reyes' original bill would have forced hydrogen developers to compete for program funds directly with those who build electric charging stations, a proposal she called "technology neutral."

"The truth is hydrogen has made less than an ideal progress in making this market competitive compared to other zero emission technologies," Reyes said. She added, "I am not anti-hydrogen, especially not in the heavy duty space" and that she was taking all of her colleagues' concerns seriously.

Since the program raises money through vehicle registration and other fees, the bill needs two-thirds of lawmakers' votes to be reauthorized. It needs 54 votes out of 80 lawmakers in the Assembly and 27 out of 40 in the Senate.

"If we're not able to reach an agreement, and it lapses or sunsets, it'll be almost impossible to get a new bill through," Reyes said. "So having it reauthorized is extremely important."

Reyes said the legislators who oppose her proposal include "both individuals who want more dedicated funding for hydrogen, and those who feel that the 10% carve out for hydrogen in the legislation has already gone too far."

Reyes declined to identify the legislators who want more hydrogen funding or those who want less.

But Melissa Romero, senior legislative manager for the environmental group California Environmental Voters, said at least seven Assemblymembers opposed reauthorization of the program even after the bill included 10% for hydrogen.

Romero's environmental group supports candidates who seek to reduce California's dependence on fossil fuels. She worries the clean transportation program might expire, leaving California in jeopardy of not funding the charging stations it needs for electric cars.

The state estimates it will need nearly 1.2 million chargers for battery-powered cars by 2030. Only about 88,000 are now installed.

"How is it that we could have a supermajority of Democrats…and not be able to extend a program that provides funding for zero-emission vehicle infrastructure?' Romero asked. "That is totally crazy to me."

Automakers opposed the bill because fees paid by car owners would be used in part to fund fueling stations for trucks.

"The state is nowhere near having the amount of necessary" electric car charging stations, so "it is unfair to place the burden" on car owners for paying for both truck and car stations, the Alliance for Automotive Innovation wrote to legislators in April.

Most large automakers have set goals to convert all of their fleets to battery-powered cars — not hydrogen — but they did not take a stance on the funding for hydrogen stations. Two of their members, Hyundai and Toyota, sell hydrogen cars.

The link between hydrogen cars and fossil fuels

Romero said the influence of the oil and gas industry, which is hoping to transition to hydrogen technology, is a major reason that the Legislature is debating whether to pay for hydrogen fuel stations.

Major oil and gas companies see hydrogen as a potential way for their industry to remain viable in a decarbonized future. Most hydrogen is now produced using natural gas. Some companies are exploring ways of making hydrogen a green energy source by splitting water using renewable-energy electrolyzers. But that technology remains much more costly than today's process using fossil fuels.

Energy companies are also experimenting with capturing emissions from the natural gas process and then storing those emissions underground. But those carbon-capture techniques are not yet widespread.

While electric cars are also reliant on energy from carbon-emitting power plants, California is greening its grid. Under a state mandate, 100% of electricity must be renewable and carbon-free by 2045, with most coming from solar and wind.

Teresa Cooke, executive director of the California Hydrogen Coalition, said she is disappointed that so few hydrogen fueling stations have been built over the last decade. She attributed the slow progress to the Energy Commission delaying approvals and difficulty with getting the stations permitted.

Cooke said only about 3.5% of all state funding for clean cars has been spent on hydrogen vehicle infrastructure, while battery electric cars have been overwhelmingly favored by state agencies and lawmakers.

She said oil and gas companies deserve the chance to make the shift away from carbon-heavy fuels.

"It blows my mind that there is such resistance to (supporting) the possibility of oil and gas companies transitioning into hydrogen," Cooke said. "They should be able to transition into a vehicle fuel that can be produced domestically, can be produced renewably and put into a zero emission vehicle and maintain all of the good labor jobs that come with it — full stop."

Hydrogen support in the Legislature

Among legislators who support a carveout for hydrogen, some have been major recipients of oil and gas industry contributions, while others have not been.

For instance, one hydrogen supporter, Rubio, a Democrat from West Covina, took more campaign money from oil and gas than any Assemblymember other than Republican Vince Fong, who represents oil-rich Kern County, according to a CalMatters analysis of campaign contributions data from The National Institute on Money in Politics.

Rubio has taken $218,399 from the oil and gas industry since 2016, including contributions from Chevron, Valero and ExxonMobil, among others, the data shows.

In a statement to CalMatters, Rubio reiterated a widely cited industry finding that the U.S. hydrogen industry has the potential to create $140 billion per year in revenue and support 700,000 jobs by 2030.

Rubio said in her district — a swath of communities east of Los Angeles — people who drive long distances will likely need more options than electric cars.

"We have a great number of 'super commuters' that drive hours a day to their jobs," Rubio said. "They can't afford to wait for their vehicles to get charged or gamble on whether they make it to their destination because of limited battery range."

Irwin, the Assemblymember from Thousand Oaks, said she wants something closer to the 20% share that hydrogen got in past years. She has not taken much money from the oil and gas industry — around $3,100, with most coming from companies representing gas stations, not oil and gas companies.

Irwin said she believes hydrogen has a role to play in transportation, particularly for trucking, and so it makes sense to build hydrogen infrastructure for cars, too.

"We know that hydrogen has to be part of the future for medium-duty vehicles," Irwin said. "So why not continue to invest in hydrogen stations that can accommodate both medium and light-duty? I think that's a really smart investment that hedges our bets."

When the proposal was heard in the Senate's Transportation Committee on April 11, several Democratic senators spoke in favor of maintaining a carveout for hydrogen.

Sen. Bob Archuleta of Norwalk said the technology was important for meeting the state's climate goals. "We will need more zero emission vehicles options than plug-in alone," he said. "We've got to combine everything. Hydrogen fuel cell vehicles are complementary."

Archuleta has accepted $63,186 in campaign contributions from the oil and gas industry. Newman, the senator from Fullerton, has taken $4,000.

Experts say that hydrogen can play other roles in clean energy, including potentially replacing diesel for large trucks and aviation fuels. Hydrogen's storage potential also is likely to be important as grids rely more on renewable energy.

California is competing to be named a regional clean hydrogen hub by the Biden administration, part of an $8 billion program. "California is all in on clean, renewable hydrogen — an essential aspect of how we'll power our future and cut pollution," Newsom said earlier this month, announcing plans for a statewide hydrogen energy strategy.

But a spokesman for the governor, Alex Stack, declined to say whether Newsom supports a carveout for hydrogen vehicle fueling stations in the Clean Transportation program.

Orville Thomas of CALSTART, a sustainable energy nonprofit, said the state money for hydrogen stations should be used for not just cars, but also medium and heavy-duty trucks.

"Let's make sure that we're being good stewards of that money, " Thomas said. "Every million dollars is important to make sure California gets to its goals."

"There has never been a more important time to enliven the culture of creativity than the times we are currently living in. In the recent past we have suffered the loss of many of our important cultural spaces and creators. This presents a crucial moment for our city and for the future of the arts in general. It seems that technological advancement in the arts is taking people further away from the one-of-a-kind experience of being exposed to quality live music. Exposure to the arts at the highest levels is paramount to the spawning of the future of culture and the arts." –Stanley Clarke team has a younger composition than most, with the bulk of runners being incoming juniors.

The varsity team is an extremely tight knit group, building off each other, Fischer said. As last season unfolded, everyone got more confident, making improvements every single week.

"Our motto is 'we love to have fun and run together.' That has been the key to their success."

Both boys and girls cross country teams will commence the fall season with the Cool Breeze Invitational on September 2.

IMPROVEMENT ON MIND OF GIRLS GOLF UNIT

The Samohi girls golf team has high hopes for the fall season after seeing improvement last year. The girls did very well, closing the loss gap by at least 60 strokes from 2021. They also really gelled as a team, said Coach Roshni Mejia.

Unfortunately, two of the top players from last year recently graduated, meaning the team will have to re-develop.

"Our goal is to develop our team and bring in new players earlier on so we are not building from scratch every year," said Coach Mejia.

At the moment, the top two players for the 2023 season are Junior Cash Henton and Sophomore Frances Aguilar. The team is hopeful about their upcoming season, and looking to have an improved season from the prior once again.

"Expect us to close our loss gap and perhaps even win a match this season," Mejia said. "We are determined."

FLANDERS' FAREWELL SEASON AT FOREFRONT OF PLAYOFF PUSH

Samohi boys water polo returns this fall with eyes set on the CIF playoffs.

Coach Matthew Flanders said last season was an "off year" for the team. The squad failed to reach the CIF playoffs, which was only the second time not going in 27 years.

Since then, the squad has had loads of improvement, with almost everyone playing club in the off season. Flanders has an extremely strong team to look out for, he said.

"All-American, All-CIF, All-League and Samohi scoring record holder Darragh Flanders returns for his last season," Coach Flanders said. "He is joined by the powerful combo of Blase Londono, Pablo Rivera-Clark, Jackson Colby, and Joaquin Auger."

This upcoming season, the team is hoping to place in the top three in the Bay League and make it to the CIF playoffs.

"We are looking to win as much as possible to send the class of '24 off in style."

VOLLEYBALL LOOKS TO AVENGE PLAYOFF DEFEAT

Samohi girls volleyball ended strong last season, finishing fourth in the Bay League and advancing to CIF. However, the squad lost in the first round of playoffs after a challenging match against Chaminade High School. The hope is that another trip to the CIF playoffs will be in store for the Vikings this upcoming season.

Vikings coach Liane Sato was unavailable for this article. The Santa Monica Daily Press will follow up with the team later in the season.

Approximately 400 spaces in Beach Lot 1 North would be occupied.

- June 2028: 800 spaces in Beach Lot 1 North would be occupied as well as the beach construction area.
- July 14 – 30, 2028: LA28 Summer Olympic Games.
- July and August 2028 (dates TBD): Entire Beach Lot 1 North and beach venue area would be fenced.
- August 2028 (dates TBD): tear down; approximately 800 parking spaces would be occupied in Beach Lot 1 North.

The closure of Beach Lot 1 North and reduced parking capacity during the Games would have significant impacts. Alternative parking and transportation options, as well as a communication plan for residents and visitors, will be developed during the negotiation of the Venue Use Agreement. There is no immediate financial impact or budget action necessary as a result of the recommended action. Staff will return to Council in the future with specific budget actions upon approval of the Venue City Games and Enhanced City Master Agreements.

"It's so exciting that the Olympics are coming to town! It's been over four decades since the Olympic torch was last in Santa Monica, back in 1984. And then we hosted the marathon, the beach wasn't even used and the volleyball was held in Long Beach," Councilmember Christine Parra said, speaking to the Daily Press. "To be able to showcase to the world how stunning our coastline, the sandy beaches and of course the city itself, is amazing and we should make the most of this opportunity."

Los Angeles had originally bid for the 2024 event. However, after multiple withdrawals that left only Los Angeles and Paris in contention, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) approved a process to concurrently award the 2024 and 2028 Summer Olympics to the two remaining candidates, with Los Angeles preferred as the 2028 host.

The city was formally awarded the Games at the 131st IOC Session in Lima, Peru, in September 2017. And this will mark the third time Los Angeles has hosted the games (1932, 1984 and 2028), putting the city in a tied first place spot with London (1908, 1948 and 2012).

In June of 2019, former mayor Eric Garcetti said that the 2028 Summer Games will generate a profit of at least $1 billion.

"We made a million dollars in 1932, we made $250 million in 1984. I think we will make at least a billion dollars in 2028. We've had cities scared to bid for the Olympics because they cost so much and because people build so much infrastructure for two and a half weeks. It wasn't a very sustainable model ... we created a different model," Garcetti said.

Speaking to the Daily Press, Mayor Gleam Davis said, ""I look forward to welcoming the world to Santa Monica when it is the venue for beach volleyball in the 2028 Olympics. I'm thrilled that the LA 28 Host Committee recognizes Santa Monica's role in the history of the sport and the amenities that Santa Monica offers to participants and spectators alike. It's going to be spectacularly fun for everyone."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Aug. 21)

Stories are a key way you make sense of the world, and this year you get so good at telling them that you will be celebrated for the talent. Projects will highlight your tenacity and you'll hit more than one unforgettable milestone. More highlights: You'll pay off a debt, start an intriguing alliance and take part in three glamorous events. Aquarius and Aries adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 1, 4, 12, 9 and 16.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your luck is improving. Can you feel it? You'll see signs of it today and more evidence sprinkled throughout the week. You could land a client entry in a new realm, or get the green light you've been waiting for.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll be racing the clock on the way to a deadline, and cosmic indications point to success. It should be noted that nothing bad will happen if you don't finish in time, except for the disappointment of not making your aim.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Don't underestimate what you can do on your own. You're very powerful in your own right. Make sure that any help you are getting really makes a difference and is not a "helpful" involvement that encumbers you.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You want to ease the burdens of others. The best way to do this is to make yourself comfortable and happy. You may actually find it more difficult, as there will be some investigation involved in knowing your own preferences.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). The obstacles are blessings, for they will make you excellent! Once you get over the first hurdle, you'll be warmed up enough to handle the challenge that makes you a leader.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You are learning a lot in a short period of time. Later you can stop and absorb it, but right now, events keep you in a constant state of readiness. Every day brings different rules and new players to the game.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). There is strong competition around you. Observe a while before jumping into the mix. When you're ready, be bold. Others may think the same thing and will appreciate your voice. If you can't be the first, be the best.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Qualities and features that are less than perfect are more than common, so you may as well feel good about it and hide nothing. Total confidence means not apologizing for anything.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Those who listen twice as much as they talk will be two times as knowledgeable at the end of the conversation, and it's a sliding scale. This is why the wise talk very little.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). New ideas are just old ideas turned upside down, sideways or spooned with other ideas. So you don't have to worry about coming up with anything. Just play with what you already have.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Standing still gives you the time and space to overthink. It's better to be in motion, then your mental energy will be just the right amount to invest in today's situation. Keep dancing toward your purpose.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). People around you are working at cross-purposes, which makes your part tricky. You don't have to choose sides. You'll be the agent of unity who can bring cohesion to this scene. You see the big picture and a common goal.

SURF REPORT

WATER TEMP: 69.6

MONDAY FAIR	SURF:	3-4ft Waist to chest	Potential for mid-size surf to continue at select spots off the Hurricane swell, although lots of uncertainty on size/conditions/quality at this point. Wind may fall apart. Stay tuned.
TUESDAY FAIR	SURF:	2-3ft Thigh to waist	We'll probably see much smaller surf as any swell from Hilary looks like it will drop off. However, we should see a little bump of new SSW Southern Hemi swell for rideable waves - even kinda fun at top breaks. Stay tuned.

Monday Night: A chance of showers and thunderstorms, mainly before 11pm.
