Airport hearing expected to dominate Council meeting

BY MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

There's a deceptively short agenda for the Aug. 23 City Council meeting but Council watchers should expect a long night because the main event for the evening is a discussion of closing the Santa Monica Airport (SMO).

Council will debate a resolution that specifies their intent to close the airport and outlines steps that can be taken in support of that goal.

The proposed resolution declares it will be Council's policy to close SMO on or before July 1, 2018 or as soon as legally permitted. It also calls for the City Manager to implement steps to prepare for closure including the city assuming control for some or all operations on the site.

The 227-acre airport was the

Teacher turnover costly for SMMUSD

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN

The faculty of the Santa Monica-Malibu school district has changed dramatically entering the 2016-17 school year, a potentially troubling trend in a system where teacher turnover is seen as an obstacle to student achievement.

SMMUSD had hired 64 new teachers and still was looking to add about six more as of last week, according to district spokeswoman Gail Pinsker. That amounts to about 10 percent of the district's approximately 700 certificated staffers, a group that includes

Youth discuss summer transit outreach programs

BY MARINA ANDALON
Daily Press Staff Writer

In surf parlance, the Endless Summer is a utopia of perfect waves and never-ending exploration. However, a real endless summer of drought and escalating temperatures is more hell-like than heaven sent and locals are doing what they can to protect the former from the latter.

Residents formed Climate Action Santa Monica (CASM) in 2013 to explore local solutions to climate change and the organization expanded this year to include a new youth focused component. The City, CASM and their new Climate Action Corps gathered recently celebrate their success so far and discuss future efforts.

California court decision keeps teacher tenure protections

SUDHIN THANAWALA
Associated Press

In a victory for teacher unions, a divided California Supreme Court decided Monday to let the state's teacher tenure law stand.

The high court decided 4-3 not to review a lower court ruling that upheld tenure and other job protections for teachers. That ruling came in a lawsuit by a group of students who claimed that incompetent teachers were almost impossible to fire because of tenure laws and that schools in poor neighborhoods were dumping grounds for bad teachers.

The case was closely watched around the country and highlighted tensions between teacher unions, school leaders, lawmakers and well-funded education reform groups over whether policies like tenure and firing teachers with the least seniority keep ineffective instructors in the classroom.

Dozens of states have moved in recent years to get rid of such protections or raise the standards for obtaining them.

Associate Justice Goodwin Liu voted for the California Supreme Court to take up the case, saying it affected millions of students statewide and presented a significant legal issue that the lower court likely got wrong.

"As the state's highest court, we owe the plaintiffs in this case, as well as schoolchildren throughout California, our transparent and reasoned judgment on whether the

Bergamot Station

Fifth Installment finished in Bergamot Station's National Endowment for the Arts Our Town Program

The City of Santa Monica, with support from the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) Our Town creative placemaking program and the Craig Krull Gallery, has announced the opening of Because It Has a Peel, a temporary sculpture installation at Bergamot Station Arts Center by New York-based artist Joy Taylor. The project is on view to the public through September 2016 and is located in the Arts Center adjacent to the east end of the Expo Line Station. This is the fifth in a series of six temporary art installations funded by the City of Santa Monica and the NEA.

Taylor said, "Because It Has a Peel is a sculpture built from traditional wooden packing crates, the interiors painted to depict an enormous banana. Shipping is the subtext of bananas—they will never be included in the 'eat local' movement, at least in this country. Shipping is also a fact of life for artists, gallerists and collectors. To move, art must be carefully crated. Having often shipped paintings myself, it was a short step to imagining the crate itself as part of a work of art. And what better image to feature than a banana? The work continues a theme in my sculptural work, in which I have often used non-traditional materials to make constructions that convert the everyday into art. The effect is surprising and often humorous, and it forces viewers to take a second look at the uses and aesthetics of mundane objects."

The NEA grant, which the City received in 2013, supports temporary public art interventions in and around the Bergamot Station Arts Center during the construction and after the opening of the new, multimodal transit hub. Previous activities for the program include Amir H. Fallah's Perfect Strangers Art and Performance Festival and Kate Johnson's Everywhere in Between, an all-encompassing installation of video and light projections with live dance and music. Both projects were curated by 18th Street Arts Center. Two additional components of the Our Town program are Ed Moses, an ongoing installation by artist John Cerney, and P2S, a projection piece by local artist Alia Malley on view nightly until August 24th.

Joy Taylor is a painter and sculptor who lives in upstate New York. Trained as a collage artist, her approach to public art is inventive and eclectic. She enjoys using unusual materials to encourage viewers to consider their world in new ways. She has received commissions for public art from the MTA Arts for Transit program in New York City, for which she fabricated both large-scale, steel sculptures and mosaic murals. She is a recipient of the New York State Painting Fellowship and the Pollock Krasner award. Ms. Taylor exhibits with Craig Krull Gallery in Santa Monica, and at Galerie Gris in Hudson, NY among others.

In 1994, Craig Krull became one of the founding galleries at the new Bergamot Station Arts Center. Since then, the gallery has expanded its scope and now represents Southern California painters and sculptors including Peter Alexander, Dennis Hopper, Llyn Foulkes, Astrid Preston, Dan McCleary, and Don Bachardy. Additional works by artist Joy Taylor may be viewed at the gallery upon request.

Crowded concerts cause concern

THE CALIFORNIA INCLINE IS SLATED TO open on Sept. 1 which is great news for the city and more importantly for the future of the Twilight Concert Series. Diverting traffic from the Pacific Coast Highway onto Ocean Ave has been putting additional pressure on an already congested bottleneck. On Thursday nights the outflow of traffic has been exacerbated by the traffic patterns and the city has responded with putting in place additional officers and traffic diversion patterns that help slightly but don't resolve the situation.

The great success of the Twilight Concerts this year is a blessing and a curse. It's great for the businesses that see an uptick in their customers like Casa Martin, Bruno's or Chez Jay and Big Deans. There's been many a Thursday this summer that I wanted to grab dinner after working out and there was not a seat available at either Casa Martin or Bruno's.

To a degree that's the point of the concerts, to bring people to the city and increase not just awareness but also business. It's great for us to be supporting our local restaurants and retailers with this type of event. I haven't been able to find out if a study has been done to track the dollars that are generated, maybe the Pier Commission has this info, or Santa Monica Travel and Tourism might. It'd be good to know but I'm pretty sure it's a big number.

Then there's the expense that must be examined. This number is also going to be a big number and given the record crowds we've had this year it's sure to be much higher than in prior years. As I watch the traffic officers set up cones and diversions to deal with the traffic I'm adding up the costs. Hourly wages and overtime mean additional staffing and admin costs that are incurred.

I noticed last week extra police from Culver City were around. I assume that we have to reimburse those costs. There must also be some insurance costs to all of this for the increased risks that go up with each increase in attendance.

Crowds of humans can make huge messes and those messes have to be cleaned up. If you have ever walked by the beach after everyone has left you see the huge amount of detritus that is left for someone else to clean up. Among the pizza boxes and beer bottles and dirty diapers and there's the ever present cigarette butts and burger wrappers that have to be cleaned out by our sanitation staff.

This of course is nothing new, it's been like that for the last 20 years I've been attending these concerts. The issue really is in scope of mess that is being created. Back when this was a small local event, most of us cleaned up after ourselves leaving a small amount of trash for the city to clean up. But what I have noticed lately is that as the crowds grow, and it becomes easier to walk away from your trash, people are less responsible because they can hide amongst the crowd.

Many people are complaining about how crowded the concerts are. They're saying the concert are no longer enjoyable. I understand that there is a sense of nostalgia for the way things used to be, but that is no reason to end, or stop enjoying, the concerts.

It's been reported that we have 30,000 to 40,000 people each week at these concerts. That's a large population that is being exposed to the city and the beach on a regular basis. Over the course of a year if 10% of those people come back and spend an additional $150 in our restaurants and movie theaters that's about 3.6 million dollars.

Now I understand that the city's revenues and the city's expenses are not offset by that privately spent $3.6 million, however expenses could be offset by additional sponsorship deals. It strikes me that in the city as connected as we are to the entertainment world, we should be able to figure out a way to have the concert series be a major revenue source, and self-supporting for all of its expenses.

I'd hate to see the concerts end because of something as easily fixable as money. I've heard that there are safety concerns ala the fireworks displays we used to have, but those too are overblown in my opinion and I don't want to live in a constant state of fear that the nervous nellies would have us live in.

The concerts are an excellent event for the city, its businesses and its residents. We should do all we can to keep the series free, open to the public and going long into the future.

Council united on airport

Editor:

At the very moment our Council and community are uniting to end the unacceptable impacts of Santa Monica Airport on neighbors, and move us toward the great park so many residents want, a few misguided individuals are playing politics and threatening the very real progress we are making together.

Mailers and fliers being distributed in some of our neighborhoods distort verifiable facts. Let's be clear: Your City Council has voted unanimously on every move toward airport closure. Check the meeting minutes; it's a matter of record. Our battle is with the Federal Aviation Administration, not among Council colleagues.

The producers of these political messages have every right to express their opinion, no matter how twisted their thinking. When they publish inaccurate facts, though, they do real damage to our Santa Monica public process.

Nothing funny about change

Editor:

I much preferred "Speed Bump," "Garfield" and "The Meaning of Lila" to the new replacement comics.

Santa Monica has suffered more buildings, more traffic, more bicyclists, Pokemon Go maniacs – and now no "Lila."

It just proves, yet again, that change is rarely for the better.

subject of dueling ballot measures in 2014. Measure LC prevailed and calls for a park on the property. In addition, City Hall has picked closing the airport as one of its five strategic goals for the city at large.

If passed, the resolution lists several actions as next steps including: begin the park planning process, investigate whether certain fractional jet operators are impermissibly operating as scheduled airlines, submit an application to FAA which would alter the Airport runway by removing a portion from aviation use, tightening noise ordinances, transition aircraft hangar uses from lease agreements to permits, eliminate lead fuel, enhance security and create a City of Santa Monica Fixed Based Operation.

While the City may choose to pass a resolution specifying its intent to close the airport, its ability to actually take action will be determined in the court system.

A Federal lawsuit is pending to settle the question of airport land ownership. The City contends the land was surrendered by the Federal Government and that the City has absolute control of the land. The Federal Government contends the City is required to operate the airport in perpetuity. The trial will likely be next year.

Santa Monica recently lost a case filed with the FAA regarding the city's obligations to continue operations at SMO. The City is expecting to appeal that decision soon.

SANTA MONICA TOURISM MARKETING DISTRICT RENEWAL

Council will be asked to verify petitions from more than 50 percent of the hotel businesses and extend the term of the marketing district.

Santa Monica Tourism and Travel markets the city to tourists. The organization is funded primarily through an assessment levied on local hotels. That assessment district is set to expire in 2017 and Council is being asked to extend the term for nine and a half years.

According to the staff report, SMTT's efforts have expanded international awareness of the city and had a measurable impact on the collection of Transit Occupancy Tax (paid by visitors staying in hotels).

"Over the last ten years, transient occupancy taxes (TOT) collected by the City have increased at a compound average annual growth rate of 7.8 percent," said the report. "The strong 3 of 6 growth rate of TOT revenue can be correlated with the success of SMTT's tourism marketing efforts and the associated funding provided by the SMTMD."

Tourism taxes support the City's General Fund and are used to pay for basic services.

Council meetings are held at City Hall, 1685 Main St. Closed session items begin at 5:30 p.m.

teachers as well as senior managers, directors, principals, assistant principals, coordinators and other administrators.

The district's hiring blitz followed significant attrition at the end of last school year, when more than 30 teachers and classified staff members retired.

The turnover is similar to that of previous years and "not unusual for a district of our size," Pinsker said.

But the district's employment dynamic carries a significant financial burden, according to education experts.

SMMUSD was unable to provide the Daily Press with an estimated cost of recruiting, hiring, processing and training all of the new teachers. Much of the expense comes in the form of the salaries of the district's human relations staff and training consultants, Pinsker said.

The National Commission on Teaching and America's Future, a nonprofit research and advocacy organization, estimates the cost of teacher turnover based on a variety of factors, including the number of new hires, the size of the district and whether or not the schools are located in urban areas.

Using the nonprofit's estimation calculator, which accounts for expenses at both the district and site levels, the Daily Press found the cost of teacher turnover in SMMUSD to top $1.73 million.

"The estimate does not include the costs of teacher turnover to student learning," the commission website reads.

The district has support systems in place for new employees, including its Beginning Teacher Support and Assessment program. Professional development and guidance are available to teachers through the district and the local Classroom Teachers Association.

"Each school site typically assigns a permanent teacher as a 'buddy' to a new teacher to help them acclimate to the culture and school community," Pinsker said.

Teacher retention is a component of the district's plan to close the achievement gap. Pedro Noguera, the UCLA professor and education reformist hired by SMMUSD to improve equity in the district, has said that changes in leadership can prevent schools from boosting student outcomes.

Noguera has urged the district to recruit a staff that reflects the diversity of the student body. He said the district must also recognize success, provide constructive feedback and work with union heads to keep keep qualified teachers.

Noguera said there's greater potential for progress when principals and other school leaders are promoted from within. The district recently hired Antonio Shelton, who has been working in Ohio, to serve as principal at Santa Monica High School.

The staffing changes go all the way to the top of the administrative ranks, where interim co-superintendents Chris King and Sylvia Rousseau are running the district as a search continues for Sandra Lyon's long-term replacement.

TENURE

challenged statutes deprive a significant subset of students of their fundamental right to education and violate the constitutional guarantee of equal protection of the laws," he said.

Associate Justice Mariano-Florentino Cuellar echoed those concerns in a separate dissent.

A Los Angeles Superior Court judge sided with the students in a 2014 ruling that threatened to shake up the state's public school system, which teaches more than 6 million students from kindergarten through 12th grade.

In striking down several laws regarding tenure, seniority and other protections, Superior Court Judge Rolf Treu said the harm inflicted on students by incompetent teachers "shocks the conscience." Gov. Jerry Brown, a Democrat, appealed the ruling, and an appeals court overturned that decision in April, saying the students had failed to show California's hiring and firing rules were unconstitutional.

Justice Roger Boren, who presided over the 2nd District Court of Appeal, wrote in the 3-0 opinion that some principals get rid of highly ineffective teachers by sending them to low-income schools, but those decisions have nothing to do with the teacher tenure law.

Teachers have long argued that tenure protects them from being fired on a whim, preserves academic freedom and helps attract talented people to a profession that doesn't pay well.

"I hope this decision closes the book on the flawed and divisive argument that links educators' workplace protections with student disadvantage," American Federation of Teachers President Randi Weingarten said in a statement. "It is now well past time that we move beyond damaging lawsuits like Vergara that demonize educators and begin to work with teachers to address the real issues caused by the massive underinvestment in public education in this country. "

The Vergara v. State of California lawsuit, including Beatriz Vergara among the public school student plaintiffs, was backed by Students Matter, a nonprofit group founded by Silicon Valley entrepreneur David Welch. Welch assembled a high-profile legal team including Theodore Boutrous, who successfully fought to overturn California's gay-marriage ban.

Boutrous said additional lawsuits in state and federal court challenging the teacher tenure law were possible. Welch said he was hopeful the legislature would take up the issue.

"While we are disappointed in the Supreme Court's decision to not grant review, we are grateful to the courts for shining a much-needed spotlight on these shameful laws and the enormous harm they inflict on thousands of children every year," Welch said in a statement.

Assemblyman Chad Mayes, R-Yucca Valley, said the court's decision was disappointing and that legislators needed to act to "stop protecting bad policies that deprive low-income and minority students of a good education."

CASM KIDS: Councilmembers Tony Vazquez, Ted Winterer and Gleam Davis were on hand to recognize the Climate Action Santa Monica Climate Corps last week.

CLIMATE

"I am excited that this event is happening especially since it is relatively new," said Cris Gutierrez, Lead Co-Facilitator of CASM Climate Corps of the reception for the Climate Corps members. "We, CASM, want people especially the youth to know there are other ways of transport. Doing this and showing our appreciation to the people who worked to help our city can also help our environment."

The idea for youth climate ambassadors grew out of a forum CASM organized in 2015. At that time, officials appreciated that youth leaders would be strong advocates for sustainability and the program received a boost this year during a meeting between CASM and City Manager Rick Cole.

According to Climate Action Santa Monica member Zac Gaidzik, CASM brought their idea of youth ambassadors and Cole suggested sending them out into the streets to gather useful data.

"We all kind of looked around at each other and said 'oh yeah, that would be kind of nice, how do we do it?' and then what followed was when a bunch of people all get an idea and all figure out how to make that idea a reality," he said.

The members of the youth program are interns of all ages, ranging from high school students to college students, all living in Santa Monica. Their goal each weekend has been to get the word out on the street to the community about different forms of transit that can benefit the environment along with information about climate change. The interns went from the Santa Monica Pier to high schools to the Farmer's Market, making sure to inform locals about the issue and asking for feedback.

Students were particularly focused on discussion transportation choices and attempted to engage people in a discussion of movement without a car.

Abderezak Azib, a local student at the Santa Monica University participated as a Climate Corps member and felt this program not only helped the community but also helped him with self-development.

"It was definitely eye opening to see how many people were unaware of how much public transportation is around us," he said. "I am looking forward to sharing my experience and eager to see what else the program will do for the city these next years."

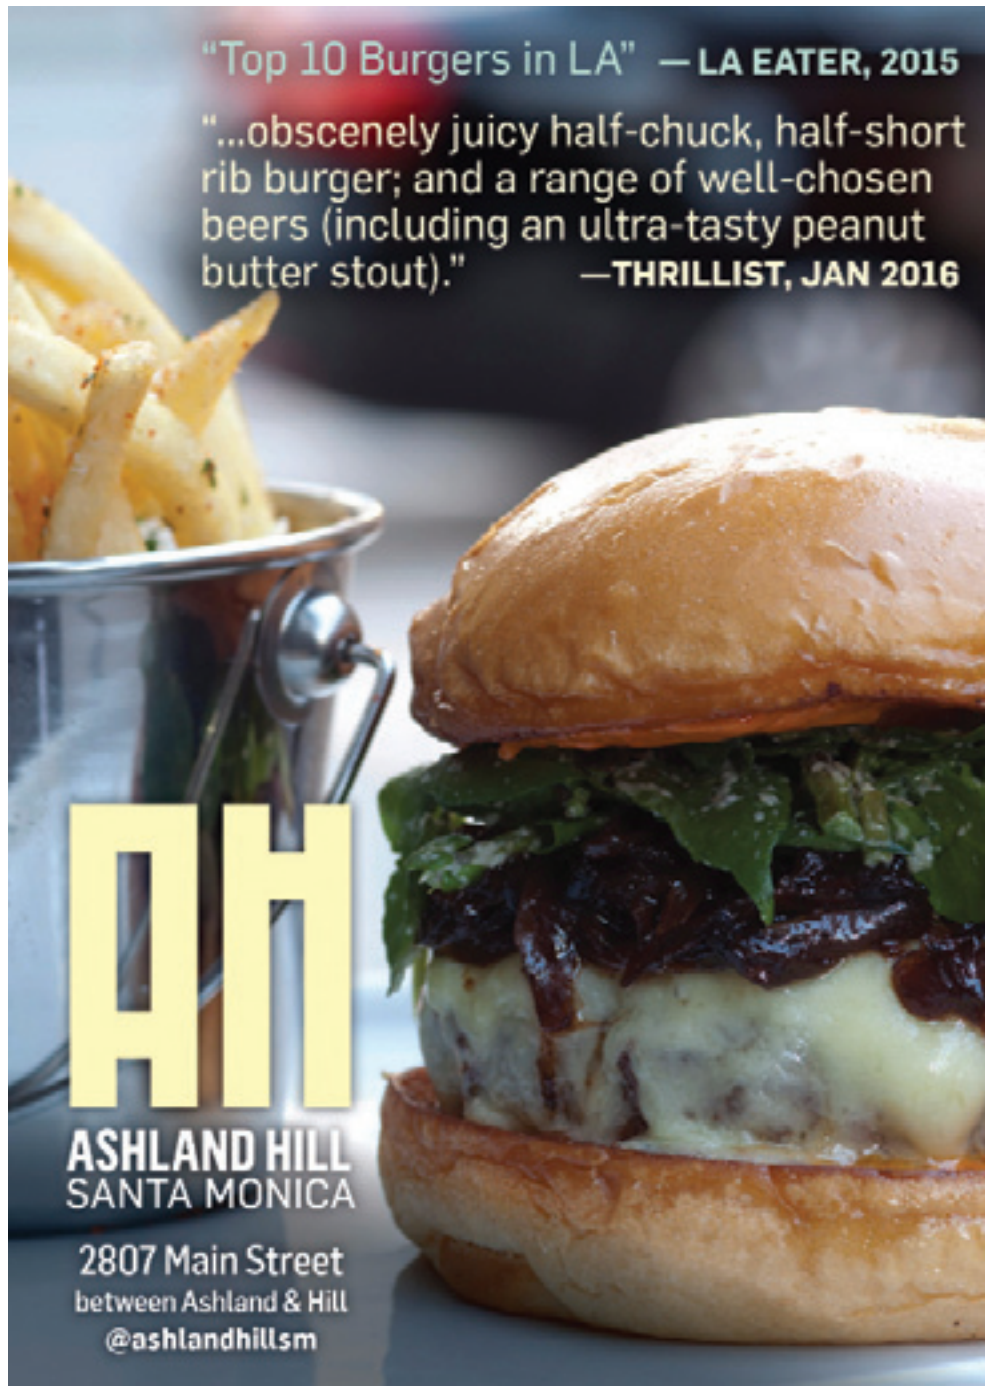

With the summer winding down, CASM members gathered at the Church in Ocean Park recently to debrief the program and discussion future outreach efforts. Members of the Corps were able to discuss their efforts and were presented with a City Council proclamation from Mayor Pro Tem Ted Winterer.

Although the youth corps is a pilot program, Gutierrez is hoping to make it an ongoing program for students who can be the next environmental leaders in the community.

CRIME WATCH

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON AUG. 11 AT APPROXIMATELY 11:55 A.M.

A man and his girlfriend were standing at a bus stop in the 1600 block of Santa Monica Boulevard and started arguing because the suspect believed his girlfriend was cheating on him. The suspect became increasingly angry and eventually struck his girlfriend's face with an open-handed palm, which knocked off her sunglasses. The suspect then picked up the sunglasses and walked away. Shortly afterward, the girlfriend walked across the street and met up with her mother at a nearby Taco Bell. As the two women started walking away from the location, the suspect walked up behind the victim and poured a cup of water over her head. The suspect ran away immediately afterward, but circled the block and then snatched the victim's cellphone out of her back pocket. When the victim demanded the suspect give her phone back, the suspect refused and again walked away from her. The victim called Santa Monica police and pointed out the suspect to the arriving officer. The suspect, Tyler Jon Sanford, 24, homeless, was then taken into custody, booked for grand theft and issued a temporary restraining order. Bail was set at $25,000.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

The Major League Eating record for slugburgers is 41 in 10 minutes, held by Joey Chestnut. Slugburgers, a delicacy invented during the Great Depression in Corinth, MS, are not made with shell-free terrestrial gastropods, but rather feature a hamburger meat patty containing soybean grits, topped with mustard, dill pickles and onions on a small, 5-inch bun.

TRANSPORTATION TUESDAYS

Safe Routes BACK to School

The new school year is here! Start it off right with a new activity. Walking, biking, skating, and scooting to school are great ways to wake up, enjoy some fresh air and boost your student's attentiveness at school. Try it once a week, or enjoy the time with your little ones every day. Form a walking or biking "school bus" where parents accompany a group of students on the trip to school. Or hop on a Big Blue Bus if you've got a farther commute or after school activities.

TO KEEP EVERYONE SAFE IN SCHOOL ZONES BE SURE TO:

1. Slow down and be extra alert – drive slowly especially during pick-up and drop-off times.
2. Come to a complete stop before entering crosswalks.
3. Watch for people on bikes and foot and give people plenty of space.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ You refuse to back down, and others count on that trait. The Moon is in your sign, bringing opportunities with it. Be responsive and return calls. Someone at a distance might let you know that he or she has had a change of heart, which will be a relief. Tonight: Confirm plans.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Take your time. How you see someone else's vision could be quite different from how the majority of people see it. You might choose to keep your opinion to yourself for now. Your perception of a work-related matter seems to be transforming. Tonight: Kick back and relax.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Zero in on what you want, and don't sell yourself short. Others will respond to your efforts. Get to the bottom of a situation, and you will see all the different pieces fall into place. Be imaginative in how you solve a hassle that emerges. Tonight: Get some extra R and R.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Examine what you need and expect from someone you care about. Open up a talk with knowledge of what is happening. You will want to discuss what interests you. Be ready for a conversation that might be contentious but noteworthy. Tonight: Visit with a favorite person.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ You might not be ready for what is coming down the pike, but your imagination and ingenuity will step right in. Your ability to adjust has increased, and you will demonstrate this skill once more. Tonight: Agreement might feel like support. Play devil's advocate.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You will need to pace yourself in order to accomplish what you want. Do not push a family member too far. Listen to news. You might be ecstatic about information that comes forward, but take what you hear with a grain of salt. Are you being realistic? Tonight: Out late.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Allow your creativity to emerge when you sense that something is off. Follow through on your priorities, but feel free to revise your thinking, if need be. You seem to say the right words at the right time. Tonight: Seek out a friend or associate for dinner and some company.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Remember that the basics count. If you're feeling out of sorts, or if you think that something is running amok, confirm what you are sensing. You could stop a problem from arising by following through on your intuitive hunches. Tonight: Happily head home.

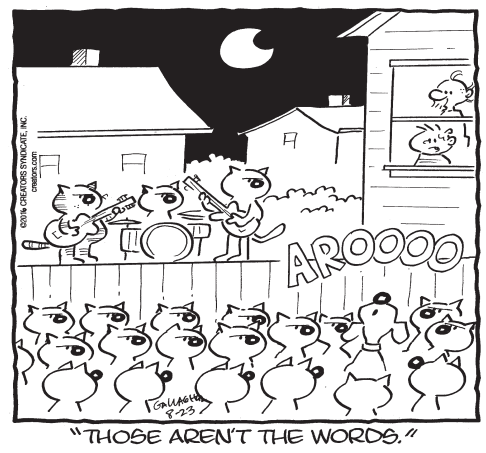

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ You might feel as if you are in a haze and not exactly sure of what is going on. A discussion with a friend will make your contentment soar. Someone around you could be two-faced. Be aware of this tendency, and keep your distance. Tonight: Where the crowds are.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year you put a great deal of emphasis on your dreams and desires. You are likely to get what you want, as long as you don't become too distracted. Focus and endurance count. Try not to put too many irons in the fire; otherwise, you could feel overwhelmed. If you are single, you are likely to meet a dreamy suitor through a friend. Don't expect to find any similarities between your friend and this person; they are likely to be very different people. If you are attached, the two of you work together to manifest a long-term dream. TAURUS knows how to express his or her affection in a meaningful way.
