Recent traffic incidents include a fatality, train accident and motorcycle arrest

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

Santa Monica's public safety employees have had a tragic and busy week including a deadly crash on the Pacific Coast Highway (PCH), a train vs. car accident on Colorado and the arrest of an individual connected to a year-old fatality also on the PCH.

The most severe incident occurred on Wednesday morning. A pedestrian entered the PCH for unknown reasons at about 5 a.m. on August 23 where he was hit by a vehicle at about the 1100 block. The pedestrian died at the scene and the driver was not injured.

Officers said the driver was fully cooperating and the accident is still under investigation. Traffic throughout the city came to a grinding halt for most of the morning as cars were diverted away from the PCH.

Later that day, police officers and firefighters responded to an unrelated accident at 11th and Colorado.

According to SMPD a Prius made an illegal left turn from Colorado onto 11th at about 7:10 p.m. The car turned in front of a moving Expo train and triggered the collision. Firefighters, paramedics and police officers responded to the scene resulting in the closure of the intersection for more than an hour. No-one was injured in the accident and the scene was cleared at about 8:45 p.m.

In the third case, officers arrested Scott Miller on Aug. 21 for

City wins extended restrictions in tenant harassment case

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

City Hall has obtained an injunction against a local property manager accused of harassing a disabled tenant.

The City Attorney's Office filed the tenant harassment suit in 2016 against the owners of a local property and their property manager Kathy Golshani.

The lawsuit alleges that landlords Cecil McNabb and Golshani tried to disrupt the already-challenging daily routine of a mother taking care of her severely developmentally disabled daughter.

"The daughter is quadriplegic with cerebral palsy and epilepsy, and requires special care in the transfer of herself and her wheelchair in a ramp-equipped van,"

said the City Attorney's Office. "The lawsuit claims the owners tried to force the mother and daughter out of their longtime rent-controlled home by stopping them from using the carport to transfer the daughter to the accessible van. The complaint also alleges that the owner caused the tenant's hot water to be shut off for four days."

The City received a temporary restraining order (TRO) in January of this year that limited Golshani's actions and the TRO was extended this week based on allegations Golshani has continued to harass the tenants.

"As the City showed in its January 27, 2017 Application for Temporary Restraining Order,

SACRAMENTO
California Democrats OK bill to help senator facing recall

California Democrats approved a second bill Thursday that could help protect one of their own lawmakers facing a recall and preserve their Senate supermajority after a court put their first attempt on hold.

Republicans hope to recall freshman Sen. Josh Newman, D-Fullerton, over his vote to increase the gas tax. County election officials say they've turned in the more than 63,000 signatures needed for the recall to proceed. The changes would likely allow the recall to coincide with next year's statewide primary, when voter turnout will be higher and Newman will have an easier time motivating Democrats.

If Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown signs the measure as expected, voters would get a change to remove their signatures. Newman and his allies say voters who signed the petition were tricked by signs and signature gatherers urging them to repeal the gas tax, not recall a lawmaker. Newman said he already has 2,257 declarations from voters who want their names removed.

Still, he acknowledged it will be difficult to remove enough names to halt the process. Republicans can continue collecting new signatures, and the names of people who signed petitions are not public, so Democrats can't target supporters and urge them to remove their name.

The bill would also delay the recall while the Department of Finance and the Legislature review the costs of holding a special election.

Newman said he plans to canvass the district and set up outside grocery stores and other areas where people signed the petition to seek out more voters who claim they were deceived.

Cynthia Bryant, executive director of the California Republican Party, said the GOP will "do everything we can" to ensure the recall proceeds but declined to discuss specifics.

"There are over 66,000 valid signatures for the recall and there's absolutely no reason it shouldn't go forward right now," Bryant said.

The perception that Democrats are trying to tilt the election landscape in their favor has angered Republicans, who want Newman to stand for election later this year, shortly after the gas tax increases on Nov. 1.

"It is beneath the dignity of this body to change the general election code in an effort to influence the outcome of a single election," said Assemblyman Jay Obernolte, R-Hesperia.

Democrats approved the same changes in June as part of the state budget, but the California Court of Appeal put them on hold citing requirements that legislation pertain to only one subject.

"This bill is not about protecting us," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Monning, D-Carmel. "It's about protecting the fundamental Democratic right of a voter to be informed honestly and truthfully with what they sign and ensuring they have recourse in the event they find that they were deceived."

Surprise visit from my ex

JUST ABOUT EVERYBODY WHO'S EVER HAD a long-term relationship break up can attest running into an ex can be awkward. In Woody Allen's 1972 movie "Play It Again Sam," in a boutique gift shop in New York, Woody buys a romantic music box for Diane Keaton, on whom he has a deep crush. A slight problem, however, is that Keaton is married to Woody's best friend. Ouch.

Just then Woody runs into his ex-wife played by Susan Anspach. (Who, ironically, would be a neighbor of mine at the Shores!) Woody tries to conceal the music box but it inadvertently starts to play. He covertly shakes the box temporarily stopping the music, only to have it resume. All the while, Allen feigns interest in catching up on how his ex is doing since they broke up.

I mention this scene because just before my recent birthday I "ran into" my ex-wife. (Or, rather she ran into me.) I think it's "newsworthy," if only given the time period since we last saw each other... 25 years! I doubt it's Guinness World Record material but if in general running into an ex can be awkward, add a quarter century and awkward meter could register off the chart.

And yet, instead of 25 years seeing her felt more like 25 minutes. Go figure. But at this point you're probably wondering how did this encounter occur. (Or, you're about to shift your attention to the crossword puzzle.)

It was a Friday like any other except I received a phone call from security in my building that "Maria is in the lobby and would like to see you." Confused I replied I didn't know anyone named Maria when security added "She's with Katherine." That would be my ex. Yikes.

Stuck for an excuse like "I'm currently being held at gunpoint by a robber," I told security to tell them I'd be downstairs in fifteen minutes. With that I raced around my apartment like Mr. Clean on meth. I hurriedly put dirty dishes in the dishwasher, dirty clothes in the hamper, empty pizza boxes in the trash, lowered the toilet seats and ran the vacuum so frenetically it must have looked like a "Road Runner" cartoon.

Finally, I washed my face, changed my perspiration-soaked shirt and went downstairs feigning without a care in the world. Marlon Brando used to say the greatest actors in the world are regular humans keeping an affair from their spouse, or in my case, pretending I keep a neat apartment.

As for why my ex and her best friend were there, one of Maria and her husband Paul's sons is doing his medical residency at UCLA

Santa Monica Hospital. Katherine was helping Maria apartment hunt very close to the Shores where I live. They thought since they were checking out "old haunts," they'd look me up. (While I'm definitely old, I'm not sure how I feel about being an "old haunt.")

This was a Friday so Katherine and Maria were actually reading my column when I greeted them in the lobby. As we all hugged, they looked terrific. However, it quickly became obvious they wanted to come up for a short visit. I suddenly felt the noose tightening.

As we entered my apartment, where Katherine and I had lived during our 7 year marriage, I was apprehensive. I'm not a typical bachelor slob but I'm also not in Katherine's league where floors are so spotless one could eat off them. (I've actually eaten a piece of pizza that fell on my floor but I scooped it up under the well-accepted 5-second rule.)

I felt relieved, however, when Katherine asked, "Are you still using the Romero's?" They were a family of apartment cleaners at the Shores in those days and whose high quality work Katherine reveres to this day with almost religious zeal. I took the comment to indicate that, amazingly, my 15-minute speed clean had apparently done the trick. Not quite.

To my disappointment, in e-mails we shared in the following days, Katherine confessed the "Romero's reference" was polite code to encourage me to consider getting cleaning help. Yikes.

In another well-intended email, she apologized that my writing over the years never "Appealed to my funnybone." That was sweet except for the fact that in the past quarter-century, I had forgotten she didn't think my writing was very amusing. (Notice how I lowered the bar to "amusing.")

Katherine's happily remarried and living in Santa Rosa where she had dreamed of living. As for us, the genuine affection, especially after 25 years, was very touching. The truth is, as Katherine noted in front of Maria, she always appreciated how I could make her laugh when she'd be down. (Aww.)

Despite ultimately getting divorced we were terrific friends and playmates. Over the years we shared many laughs and had some great times, including vacations to Big Sur, Hawaii, New York and Europe.

Okay, now you can now turn to the crossword puzzle. As for me, I'm checking to see if I still have the Romero's phone number.

vehicular manslaughter in connection with a 2016 crash.

According to SMPD, Miller and a passenger were riding a motorcycle on the 1500 block of the PCH on Aug. 19 2016 when the bike hit a vehicle, ejecting both riders. Officers determined the crashed was caused by the motorcycle swerving into the vehicle and while Miller survived, his passenger did not.

SMPD said there can be a significant delay in some cases due to the ongoing nature of an investigation and the ultimate decision by the District Attorney to pursue a case.

Officers are still seeking witnesses to the Aug. 23 accident. Anyone with additional information is encouraged to contact Investigator Jason Olson at (310) 458-8954, Lieutenant Cobarrubias at (310) 458-8445 or the Santa Monica Police Department at (310) 458-8495.

FILM REVIEW GOOK

UR (Unrated)
94 Minutes
Released August 18th

The film Gook is set during the April 1992 Los Angeles Riots, a peripheral backdrop that sets the cultural environment of the story. The characters seem to live in an emotional microcosm in the midst of that greater panorama of racial tension and violence. Director Justin Chon plays the lead in this intimate story shot in black and white that is at once bleak and full of intense relationships amidst a background of violence that feels startlingly ordinary. The sparse surroundings of Paramount, just east of Compton, are the setting where the action revolves. The area is not directly involved in the Riots, and this allows television coverage of the event in the background to set the stage and then simply become background – craziness “going on down in South Central.” Production designers Sharon Roggio and Jena Serbu have created sets that perfectly establish the tone, from the tiny shoe store that the Korean brothers own to the wide four-lane empty street between their shop and the neighborhood grocery/ liquor store.

The style is set by Ante Cheng’s bleak and beautiful cinematography, setting up a world that becomes normal over the course of the film. The characters take on a life of their own, which is refreshing – the story is not message-driven. The beginning few minutes are beautifully shot. The choice to use black and white rather than color allows the contrasts and shadows to create a depth for the setting and characters. The time of day that each scene takes place can be understood from the way the light hits the faces of the actors. The plot has a few gaps. However, the players and the setting are haunting. The story illustrates the life of a Korean immigrant family in Los Angeles in 1992, and draws on the story of their forefathers who emigrated looking for a better life and instead found grueling hardship.

The actors endow their roles with unique and likeable personalities. Justin Chon’s “Eli” is the misguided yet well-meaning older brother trying to make a living while keeping peace among his friends. Simone Baker as teenage “Kamala” is a true force – look for more to come from this young actress. She won the Seattle International Film Festival “Golden Space Needle Award” for Best Actress for this performance – OK, don’t laugh, that’s actually the name of the award. “Mr. Kim,” the fierce neighborhood elder, who owns the liquor store and suffers no fools, is played by Sang Chon. Chon happens to be the director’s father and was himself a popular child actor in South Korean cinema during the 1960’s.

This movie depicts the violence that people in this tough neighborhood inflict upon one another, and also the kindness they bestow on their friends. This happens in any urban area. However in an affluent environment, the violence would be passive-aggressive non-communication rather than physical aggression. Justin Chon, who has built an impressive resume as an actor, has created a creative and thoughtful independent film, worth seeing.

SACRAMENTO Assembly GOP leader steps down over pressure on climate vote

The California Assembly’s top Republican said Thursday he will resign his leadership post after weeks of pressure from his party over his support for major climate change legislation.

Assemblyman Chad Mayes of Yucca Valley will be replaced as leader by Assemblyman Brian Dahle of Bieber, a tiny town in far northern California.

The 25-member Republican caucus voted unanimously to install Dahle as leader. He will take over after the Assembly leaves for its final recess of the year Sept. 15.

Dahle, a farmer elected in 2012, said he will pursue policies that “move California in a direction and make it a place where people want to buy a home and have a career, send their kids to a good school and live the California dream.”

Mayes said he realized Wednesday night that Dahle had enough support to become the next leader and decided to call a vote the next morning.

“He has proven himself to be a very strong leader,” Mayes said, adding that he will work with Dahle to ensure a smooth transition. “His heart and his character and the vision that he has is symbiotic with what I believe as well and so he’ll do a fantastic job.”

For weeks, Mayes had vowed to withstand party pressure to resign after he led a group of seven Assembly Republicans in backing an extension of California’s cap and trade program, which aims to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by charging polluters.

He said his vote in favor of the legislation was good for business and would help the party appeal to a wider swath of voters.

Many Republicans argued the program will hurt businesses and consumers, and they criticized Mayes for delivering a win to Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown.

The board of the California Republican Party called last week for Mayes to resign.

Dahle represents one of the state’s most rural areas. He voted against the cap and trade extension as well as a companion bill aimed at improving air quality monitoring.

California lawmakers to hold universal health care hearings

The leader of the California Assembly says lawmakers will hold hearings on universal health care during the Legislature's year-end recess.

Speaker Anthony Rendon announced the plans Thursday after enduring weeks of backlash from members of his own party for shelving a universal health care bill passed by the Senate.

That bill would have replaced insurance companies with a government-run health system for all Californians. Rendon says he supports universal health care but couldn't move the Senate bill forward because it lacked key details about how the system would function and how it would be funded.

Rendon says an Assembly committee will explore options for universal health care in the state. The Los Angeles-area Democrat says it will do the work supporters of the Senate bill should have done.

Ronald Reagan to be inducted in US Labor Hall of Honor

U.S. Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta has announced that former President Ronald Reagan, who was once a Hollywood union leader, will be inducted in the Labor Department's Labor Hall of Honor.

Acosta announced the honor Thursday at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library & Museum in Simi Valley, California.

Reagan, the nation's 40th president, served terms as president of the Screen Actors Guild in the 1940s and '50s.

Acosta noted that Reagan led the Screen Actors Guild during its first three strikes and negotiated residual payments and health and pension benefits for the union's members.

The Hall of Honor was established in 1988 to honor Americans who improved working conditions, wages and quality of life for families.

Reagan served as the nation's chief executive from 1981 to 1989. He died in 2004.

Defendant Kathy Golshani is a landlord who has proven since she took over the building that she simply can't help herself when it comes to harassing tenants Martha and Julia Browning," said the city's application. "Since that January 27 hearing, Golshani has proven this again but to a deeper level: Even after a court-brokered on-the-record settlement agreement that she will leave the Brownings alone, she herself has been at the building personally snapping photographs of a Browning guest, and then on a separate day, she personally blocked their parking spot — the same parking that is at the heart of the City's reasonable accommodation and harassment case. Golshani has also attempted to barrage the Brownings — including Julia who has intractable epilepsy with which stress causes seizures — with workers climbing on her balcony."

The city accused Golshani of sending workers to the Browning home without any notice and accessing the home without the tenant's knowledge, a direct violation of the January settlement. They also said blocking access to parking is especially troubling given the nature of Julia's severe disability. She is blind, nonverbal, quadriplegic and stress can trigger seizures.

The January settlement also prohibits Golshani from harassing guests of the Brownings but on at least one incident Golshani photographed a guest leaving the building.

In court documents, Deputy City Attorney Gary Rhoades said the city was compelled to file additional requests for injunctive relief against Golshani to protect the family.

"It is one of the most egregious harassment campaigns by an owner that the City Attorney's Office (CAO) has seen in years, and, given Julia's profound disabilities, the most egregious treatment of a tenant with a disability and her caregiver mother," he said in the documents.

Rhoades said the ongoing violations combined with an offer of $10,000 to vacate the unit clearly shows the defendants are attempting to force the Brownings out of a home they have lived in for 16 years.

The court notified the city this week of its decision and extended the terms of the TRO for the duration of the case. According to the order, Golshani is prohibited from entering the unit except in an emergency, cannot send workers to the unit without 24-hour notice to Browning, her attorneys and the City (except in an emergency), cannot block Browning's parking nor take photographs of Browning, her family or guests and no eviction cases may be filed while the case is pending without court approval.

According to the order, the judge made the determination after Golshani fired her attorney mid-hearing and chose to finish the oral arguments herself.

Rhoades said the merits of the case has been focused on violations of the city's fair housing rules and the defendants attempts to harass the tenants after denying reasonable accommodation for the disabled tenant. He said the most recent order will preserve the Browning's quality of life while the case progresses.

"The protections in the TROs had already brought peace back to the tenants' home and this new court order extends those protections until trial," he said.

WELL NEWS BY SCOTT LALEE

Get Me That, Stat!
■ According to Atlantic magazine, the top 5 percent of Americans who spend the most on health care account for $752 billion, or 50.3 percent, of all health care expenditures in the country. Put another way, if you had 20 Americans paying for health care, 19 would be paying for the costs of one.

CREATORS SYNDICATE © 2017 STANLEY NEWMAN STANXWORDS@AOL.COM 8/25/17

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Aug. 25)

It's like life is paying you back for all the good you put in. Love is dizzying in September. Concrete changes put you back on the ground and building something impressive. Rewards linked to your diligence come in February and you'd do well to invest immediately. May and July are lucky for your whole family. Capricorn and Scorpio adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 8, 2, 28, 44 and 15.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

Negative emotion is nothing more than a contradiction between what is and your opinion of what should be. Resolve the contradiction and the feelings become positive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

Illusion dissolution is difficult because the very nature of an illusion is that you can't tell where the fake part starts and the real part ends. Anyway, why be so discerning? That said, a little joyful nonreality goes a long way.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)

Monologues that go on and on will spring from the mouths of those with too much time and not enough awareness or interest in others. Better to keep it brief and professional today, even when you're not on the job.

CANCER (June 22-July 22)

Children don't want to go to sleep when they should. They'd rather eat candy than vegetables. With maturity, we learn to trust the intelligence of the body. Don't let childish impulses override the body's wisdom.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

You're a lifelong learner and a little worried that you won't have enough brain storage for the new stuff coming up. Luckily, today's knowledge can be applied immediately to real life in an unforgettable way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

Wisdom isn't glamorous. It's typically depicted by an old scribe on a mountain or a short green alien. Ryan Gosling wouldn't play Wisdom in the movies. And yet, "wise" is the most attractive thing you could be today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)

Your choices won't all be healthy ones and this may actually keep you healthier than if they were. A little bit of danger builds up a tolerance that will keep you safe.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21)

There's a pressure to deliver. It would be nice to think it's all in your head, but you know better. There really are people depending on you. Don't worry; you're heat-resistant. With your feet to the fire, you do amazing things.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

You want gracious people around you, but if they are too generous it makes you nervous. How will you return the favor? Seek situations that settle into a natural and easy reciprocity.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

There's so much that you're good at, but there are also areas in life in which you're still a baby learning to walk. So do like the babies do. Put one foot in front of the other, until you fall. Then get back up and try again.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

Low points are tests, not permission slips for bad behavior. Those who rise to the occasion when the chips are down are the true gems. Note: It takes an even stronger person to stay humble when the chips are up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

The smartest way is to keep your head. When you start to really want something, it becomes bigger, better, more lucrative -- blown up to unreal proportions that it can't possibly live up to. Stay cool. See what's really there.

Saturn Direct and Venus in Leo

There will be two major turns in the heavenly progression. Saturn, the planet of lessons, has been traveling backward since last April. That ends today. It's as though a long process of review has ended and all are eager to put old issues to rest and move forward. Secondly, love planet Venus will go bounding into the playful realm of Leo.
