NEWS OF THE WEIRD

BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ On July 18 (five days after Israel began its retaliatory assault on Hezbollah), swimmer Hilary Bramwill, 30, was picked up by rescuers a mile off a New York beach, despite her insistence that she needed to get to Israel. (2) A veteran Scotland Yard anti-terror detective was arrested in Trafalgar Square in London in July, where he said he was videoing al-Qaida suspects, but according to police, he was merely shooting “upskirt” video of women.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is the 240th day of 2006. There are 125 days left in the year.

1963 200,000 people participated in a peaceful civil rights rally in Washington, where Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his “I Have a Dream” speech in front of the Lincoln Memorial.

1609 Henry Hudson discovered Delaware Bay.

1774 Mother Elizabeth Ann Seton, the first American-born saint, was born in New York City.

Rabbi Neil Comess-Daniels fights for justice and peace

Rabbi Neil Comess-Daniels

BY EMILIE PHELPS
Special to the Daily Press

NORTH OF WILSHIRE — Rabbi Neil Comess-Daniels was destined to be a doctor but divine intervention turned him into a rabbi and an activist in the local community.

As a rabbi at Beth Shir Shalom for the past 15 years, Comess-Daniels, 55, has thrown himself into the Santa Monica community — tackling such weighty issues as finding solutions to homelessness and pushing for worker’s rights.

He has been involved with Clergy United for Economic Justice (CLUE), Americans for Peace Now, Santa Monicans Allied for Responsible Tourism (SMART), People Assisting the Homeless (PATH), Santa Monica Bay Interfaith Council and Rabbis for Human Rights. He is a member of the Board of Rabbis of Southern California and works toward peace in the Middle East. His involvement in Muslim-Jewish dialogue will land him a peacemakers award from the Islamic Center of Southern California in a few weeks.

When asked why he gets involved with social issues, he said, “That’s another one of my privileges as rabbi — that I get to spend my whole day involved in these things and to do it on behalf of this incredible community that I’m part of.”

A resident of Mar Vista, Comess-Daniels has a son who recently graduated from Brandeis and a daughter

Retreat brings focus for SMC

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Daily Press Staff Writer

SMC BUNDY CAMPUS — With nearly seven hours of serious discussion ahead of them, Santa Monica College trustees and staff decided to kick-off Saturday’s annual retreat with a game as an icebreaker.

Each was handed a purple piece of paper. Using a pen, they were instructed to close their eyes and draw an island. With their eyes still closed, they were then asked to draw a boat somewhere off-shore. Next came fish, a sailor, some birds, a palm tree (with coconuts), a hula dancer, and, to top it off, a sun.

Each figure drawn was assessed a point value for its location on the page. If the sailor was aboard his ship, 15 points; sun in the right top corner, 10 points; portholes on the ship, 20 points.

Chair Nancy Greenstein came out on top, with SMC President Chui Tsang, coming in at a close second. Greenstein’s prize, a hat and other SMC gear from the Main Campus’ bookstore.

“Just what I needed,” she said as she held up her new blue baseball cap and banner.

The exercise seemed to fit in perfectly with the themes of the retreat, providing an opportunity to let loose, be creative and have some fun, while also foreshadowing some of the difficult challenges facing the trustees as the college enters its 77th year of existence.

“Since coming here, there has been a lot of talk about land-use issues, parking facilities and how we can better work with the community surrounding the college,” said Tsang, who began in February after serving as president at San Jose City College for nearly nine years. “Today,

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS The stars show the kind of day you'll have:

★★★★DYNAMIC ★★★★★ POSITIVE ★★★ AVERAGE ★★SO-SO ★DIFFICULT

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ Deferring to others isn't always the easiest method for the Ram, but it's the only way to go. Others need to claim their power but also see the end results of their actions. Use the afternoon to relate on a close level. Tonight: Take time to talk.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★ Get into a project, using your abilities and insight. Others admire your conviction and determination. You will toss a situation or problem around until a solution appears. Defer interpersonal relating till the late afternoon. Tonight: Say yes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★★ Use your creativity and imagination to find solutions. Sometimes you are easily overwhelmed, but not right now. You can see the forest from the trees. Apply intuitive knowledge to real-life problems. Tonight: Run errands on the way home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★★ Making the right choice with a personal matter could easily determine how you feel when dealing with those close to you. Investigate alternatives, but follow your instincts. Your creativity flourishes. Tonight: Ever playful.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★★ The right words and actions come easily for you. If you feel the need to pick up the phone or have a spontaneous conversation, do just that. Your perspective and creativity merge to help you finalize plans. Yes, complete current projects rather than initiate new ones. Tonight: Homeward bound.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★ How much you can spend could be determined by your willingness to splurge. You might even leave good sense by the wayside because you want what you want. How wise is this approach? Only you can decide. Tonight: Talk through a wild idea.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★★ You have what it takes. Others have solutions, ideas and unusual suggestions. You manifest the drive and ability to integrate different aspects of a situation. Let your personality melt any barriers that might have emerged as of late. Tonight: Your treat - yourself, others or both.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★★ Take your time understanding what is going on with others. Your take-charge attitude generally works, but being a little less forward or domineering will work better. Your sixth sense plays out with your budget. Tonight: Smile and do exactly what you want.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★★ The early hours work. Apply your energy to what is critical or very important to you. Honoring these issues will allow you to flourish and handle what is important. Slow down and observe in the late afternoon. Tonight: What is wrong with getting some extra sleep?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★ Your stately manner draws many, though you need to understand subtlety. Not everyone is out in front like you. Withdraw at times to read between the lines. Emphasize people and success. Tonight: Accept others' applause.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Establish what is fact and fiction before you make a decision. Do your best to confirm information. Also, notice what isn't being said. Use your ability to read between the lines. Take your time before you act. Tonight: Out and about.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★★ Listen to someone who really believes he or she understands the dimensions of a situation or issue. You still might decide you need more information. Take a needed leap of faith. Follow your instincts - they work. Tonight: Find an expert. Surf the Internet if need be.

EVs, environmental films, and more

By Daily Press staff

SMC is hosting a fall "Environmental Issues Lecture Series" featuring a wide range of topics from electric vehicles to environmental films. The series begins Wednesday, Sept. 6 with the lecture, "Sustainable Works for You Again!" The lecture will show audience members how to be more resource efficient at home, school and work. The series is sponsored by SMC's Center for Environmental and Urban Studies. The center, which is open to the public, features displays, a library and information center, video collection, native garden, and other services and activities related to environmental and urban studies. SMC has been offering courses in environmental and urban studies since fall 2001. The lineup for the remainder of the fall semester is:

- * Sept. 20: "Media that Matters: Can Environmental Films Help Save the World?"
- * Oct. 11: "The Case for Electric Vehicles"
- * Oct. 18: "Water Quality Monitoring: Testing Our Way to Cleaner Water"
- * Nov. 8: "Making Santa Monica Bay Beaches Safe for Swimming and Surfing"
- * Nov. 29: "Smart Cities are Efficient Cities"

All lectures are at 6:30 p.m. in room 123 of SMC's Bundy Campus, 3171 S. Bundy Dr., adjacent to Santa Monica Airport. They are free and seating is on a first-arrival basis. For information, call (310) 434-4743 or go to <http://events.smc.edu/environmental.html>.

City Council candidates blow election smoke

MY WRITE
BY BILL BAUER

Santa Monicans will vote for three persons out of 10 candidates for Santa Monica City Council on Election Day, Nov. 7.

City Councilman Ken Genser said the reason why there are fewer candidates running this year is, "... more people are speaking out and they feel their voices are being heard and that's why they've chosen not to run." (SMDP, Aug. 25, page 5). Genser uttered what may well be the most self-serving statement of the campaign and he's not even up for re-election.

No, Ken. It has nothing to do with being heard, we know you're not listening. The real reason why is that deals were made behind closed doors. Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights (SMRR) and the business coalition led by members of the Chamber of Commerce and hotel interests knew who they're supporting long before candidate petitions were pulled. Without backing by either SMRR or big money business interests, candidates can't raise enough campaign funds and are wasting their time.

While the 2006 campaign has barely begun, candidate's positions — or non-positions — on the issues are posted on the city Web site, santa-monica.org, under "Qualified City Council Ballot Statements." They also are available in news articles.

Incumbents Kevin McKeown, Pam O'Connor and Bob Holbrook, eloquently state how hard they've worked to find solutions for community problems, including homelessness and development issues. They claim they've been protecting the environment, controlling development and supporting strong police and fire services, better schools, parks and recreational opportunities, and preserving "all that's good about Santa Monica."

Two incumbents boast about fostering new approaches to fighting homelessness, including housing the unhoused and working regionally — all while experiencing a 60 percent increase in vagrants on our streets between 1999 and 2005. In all, seven candidates make vague promises to "decrease the numbers of homeless," however, there's no clue as to how this will be done beyond the hoariest of clichés: "Give them a hand up not a hand out."

Traffic and parking were mentioned by a couple candidates but nobody suggested reversing years of traffic "calming" that's resulted in gridlock and degradation of the environment. They didn't recommend relieving parking shortages in both residential and commercial areas either.

Nine candidates mentioned public school governance, which is really the purview of the board of education. If schools are your big issue, you're running for the wrong office. However, despite plugging "strong schools" and "education," no one acknowledged the school district's ongoing fiscal perils or offered a strategy for its long-term financial solvency.

Four council hopefuls support "strong police, fire" or "neighborhood law enforcement." Wow.

Three candidates mention "protecting neighborhoods" or "sustainable neighborhoods," but stopped short of recommending curtailing overdevelopment in multi-family neighborhoods by downzoning. Not one candidate promises to do something about the many, long-time, lower-income Santa Monicans who are being forced out of their homes.

And nobody is upset that city-sponsored affordable housing isn't going to Santa Monicans in need or that the city recruits prospective tenants in Watts, East Los Angeles and elsewhere across LA County. Not one candidate supported affordable or middle income housing policies that promote home ownership as opposed to rental.

Nobody mentioned rolling back recent double-digit garbage and water fee increases.

Three candidates are out to unify the community by "bridging the political divide" and "to reach out ... and move beyond the polarization that has dominated city discourse." Political divide? Who cares? It's a non-issue. In their ballot statements, three hopefuls mentioned working for "clean beaches," "clean water" or "the environment," which is just another yawner.

I read a lot of promises that absolutely won't be kept. One candidate is even going to "Keep young people away from gangs and drugs." If she can do this, she'll win a Nobel Prize.

Another candidate presents "unique and compelling solutions to the homeless issue, quality of life and livability concerns." Putting more police in the parks, enforcing (unconstitutional) vagrancy laws and providing — get ready — "a hand up and not a hand out" is hardly unique and even less compelling.

Statements such as "protecting neediest residents and offering education, employment opportunities, and a place for children to play... in a clean, safe, nurturing community" may sound impressive but also is feel-good fluff.

In the weeks ahead, City Council candidates better go for the meat and potatoes instead of shoveling soufflé.

BUZZ'IN SANTA MONICA

Buzz (b'z) v. buzzed, buzz-ing, buzz-es

1. confusion of activity and gossip, 2. to be noisy with activity, 3. to talk, often excitedly, in low tones.

Slang

1. Excited interest or attention. 2. To move quickly and busily; bustle.

...Buzz apparently created some by mentioning last week the so-called chemtrails that hover over Santa Monica in the form of jet exhaust. Several readers wrote in, pointing Buzz to a haze of conspiracy theories. Perhaps it's not lithium "they" are spraying upon us but paranoia juice. From a few readers, here are their theories behind those mystery lines in the sky: "Actually Barium and Aluminum mostly, with a few varieties of polymer fibers thrown in for good measure. A perfect subject for a breezy, cheerful editorial, great choice. There is much you could learn about this subject if you are interested. The link below is a good place to start. <http://www.carnicom.com/conright.htm>..."

...And another one with some denial allegations mixed in ... "Have you 'buzzed by' the NRDC 'green' building on Second Street in Santa Monica? I did, on a day that the chemtrails were real heavily in progress overhead. What I wanted to do is present a free copy of AEROSOLCRIMES, a DVD documentary that investigates the chemtrail phenomena, to the person in charge there. I actually pointed out the spraying in progress that could be observed right through the window. She REFUSED to accept the DVD, and referred me to the main office back east, a bureaucracy that summarily dismisses all but the corporate party line. You made silly fun of the chemtrails — are you Generation Y? You might not remember the blue skies and natural clouds that all but disappeared since 1999 when the aerosol spray program began. Below are some important links: <http://groups.yahoo.com/group/ricksgardeningtips/message/12353> and <http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-2815320198655156407&q=aerosol+crimes.>" OK, Buzz will get right on it...

...Speaking of getting buzzed, Buzz was riding his beach cruiser down Broadway as he usually does during his early-morning cardio seshes when he noticed a vagrant climbing a streetlight. Curious and feeling a bit like a vigilante, Buzz stopped and asked the guy what was up. More than a little amped up, the vagrant jumped down, jumped in Buzz's face and told him to get out of his business. Of course, Buzz didn't and informed the residentially-challenged Santa Monica "citizen" that his antics were not appreciated in those parts of town. After successfully running the guy off, Buzz did his own climbing of the light and found the guy's stash shoved in the streetlight canister. Some of us have drawers for that...

...But there are some street people who do have more than the average Joe. Take the guy at the food court in Santa Monica Place the other day ... sitting at a table surrounded by dirty bags, the Mexican cowboy enjoyed a "shoot 'em up" movie on his portable DVD player. And a few days later, Buzz went to his favorite local Internet cafe to get his morning jolt, and he saw a homeless gent sitting on the curb behind the cafe with an orange apple ibook on his lap. The man appeared to be "borrowing" the cafe's wireless Internet connection. Buzz could only wonder what he was surfing for. Maybe he was doing a little adding of friends to his Myspace page ...

Whatever they're up to, life appears to be good in this city by the sea, otherwise known as "home of the homeless." It sure appears to have all of the amenities...

...Buzz hates to dwell on the negative but believes pointing out bad service is a community service worthy of some space. At a certain crepe place on the Promenade, Buzz couldn't help but get "creeped" out at the cafe. The waiter just couldn't get it together to save any of his tips last Wednesday night. Table after table commented on the slow-as-molasses service, with almost a complete unanimous consent from everyone dining al fresco that he would get a dollar so he'd get the message that he shouldn't give up his day job. He also pointed out to Buzz immediately after sitting down and ordering a beer that city ordinance prohibits him from just drinking. That was before Buzz even got a menu. Can't get no buzz on there...

...The week's anger-management-gone-bad victim comes from the alley behind the SMDP's office on the Promenade. Routinely clogged with delivery trucks, garbage haulers, construction workers and illegal parkers, getting into a traffic jam in a block-long alley is just another day at the office for Buzz. But it didn't sit too well with who we will call "Hey Guy." Stuck behind a delivery driver, the Beamer owner got out of his dime-a-dozen vehicle to yell at the driver who was stalled behind another delivery driver. "Hey Guy," dressed in his over-the-top suit threatened to kick delivery driver's you-know-what if he didn't move. In very broken English, the driver tried to tell him he can't go anywhere. That does not please "Hey Guy," and he somehow coaxed the poor delivery driver out so he "could teach him a lesson." The driver remained calm and tried to rationalize with "Hey Guy," "Sir, can't move sorry. Truck in front. LOOK! Truck in front." "Hey Guy" wanted action ... so he threatened him some more. "Hey Guy" jumps on delivery truck and screams "GET OUT! GET OUT! I'M GONNA KICK YOUR ASS IF YOU DON'T MOVE ..." Delivery guy finally got fed up, and emerged from the truck with a HUGE SLEDGEHAMMER. "What now! What now! You move now!" "Hey Guy" gets back in his car, tail tucked between his legs. You know the difference between a porcupine and a BMW ... the porcupine's pricks are on the outside.

Federal Consumer Protection has confirmed the fuel saving described in this advertisement.

Device may increase gas mileage by 22%

As described on ABC's 20/20 with John Stossel

BOSTON - National Fuelsaver Corp. has developed a low cost automotive accessory called the Platinum Gas Saver which is guaranteed to increase gas mileage by 22% while meeting all emission standards.

With a simple connection to a vacuum line, the Platinum Gas Saver adds microscopic amounts of platinum to the air and fuel entering the engine.

Since platinum allows non-burning fuel to burn, the Gas Saver's platinum increases the percentage of fuel burning inside the engine from 68% of each gallon to 90% of each gallon, a 22% increase.

Since unburnt fuel leaving an engine is pollution, this 22% of each gallon normally burns when it reaches the platinum of the catalytic converter.

Unfortunately, the converter's platinum burns this fuel in the tail-pipe, where the heat and energy produced from this fuel cannot be harnessed to drive your vehicle.

But when the Gas Saver allows the air and fuel to carry the platinum into the engine, 22% more of each gallon burns inside the engine so that 22% fewer gallons are needed to drive the same distance.

After a five year study, the government concluded: "Independent testing shows greater fuel savings with the Gas Saver than the 22% claimed by the developer."

In addition to the fuel savings, the Gas Saver has received patents for cleaning out the abrasive carbon and raising octane, making high octane fuel unnecessary for most vehicles.

Joe Robinson, the developer, commented: "Since the government concluded its study, we have sold a half million Gas Savers. To our surprise, more people buy the Gas Saver because it extends engine life by cleaning out the carbon than buy it to increase gas mileage or to raise octane."

entering UC Davis in the fall. He is looking forward to spending a month sabbatical with his wife.

He helped start Temple Shir Shalom in the basement of St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Mar Vista and was the rabbi there from 1980 until 1991 when it merged with Beth Shalom Temple to create Beth Shir Sholom in Santa Monica, where he has been rabbi ever since.

Comess-Daniels moved a lot growing up starting in New York, moving to Denver at age 11 for two years and then to Southern California. He attended Valley college in Van Nuys before transferring to UCLA and then attended rabbinical school at Hebrew Union College. Despite all the moving, or perhaps because of it, Comess-Daniels has helped create a cohesive community in Beth Shir Sholom that bridges city lines, and soon may bridge religious lines through a new interfaith youth group.

Comess-Daniels recently sat down with the Daily Press to discuss his role as a rabbi in the community and his perspective on some current events.

At what moment did you decide to become a rabbi?

"I don't know if it was an exact moment. I think there were several things that happened that began to reroute what I wanted to do in the world. I'd been told since I was 5-years-old that I was going to be a doctor, just like my cousin and that was the route I was on. When I was about 16-years-old, I had a friend who was about two years older than I, and he was the president of our youth group, and a regional officer as well. And I'm an only child, so he was sort of like a big brother in some ways — at least I saw him that way and I admired him. He was smart, he was a good leader, he was a great musician — a great jazz pianist. He was so good, actually, that his four-person jazz combo was asked to go to Vietnam and entertain the troops and they did, and he was ambushed ... and he was killed.

"He was a great, important part of my life and it just really changed things. People were trying to give me answers about what had happened and I knew there weren't any pat answers to what had happened. I remember one rabbi asked me what my problem was and I didn't think I had a problem. I thought the world had a problem. So I pretty well shut down from active Jewish involvement at that point for at least a couple of years.

"My first year at college, Kent State happened and it was a tense time in my life. I didn't know exactly (what I would do), but I knew that I wasn't going to be a doctor anymore, I just knew that. That summer, some friends of mine got me a job — as it turned out — at a Jewish summer camp. I took the job because I needed the job and I figured I could do it because I was Jewish. But what I ended up with was an opportunity to help kids find their answers about the same things that were bothering me, without me giving them the answer — which is what people were trying to do to me — and I loved the process.

"So I went back to school. I remember I walked into the office and I dropped chemistry and physics and calculus in the same moment, and started taking some Judaic classes and other things, and ended up studying that at UCLA and getting my BA in it. And then I had to figure out if I was going to go to conservative seminary or reform seminary, because you know a rabbi is a teacher and I wanted to keep doing this teaching, so it was the perfect continuation for me. But I realized that within the reform movement I could be both as traditional as I wanted to be and as liberal as I really needed to be and it's been true ever since."

What do you think of Mel Gibson's recent antics?

"I'll be speaking about him at the high holy days. Anti-Semitism is something within Western culture that will ebb and flow, but never ever go away because whether people realize it or not, it is at the basis of some of the fundamentals of Western society, and unfortunately some of the Christian bases of Western society.

"That being said, what's frightening about Mel Gibson is that in his apology ... he couldn't come out and say, 'I guess I really am an anti-Semite.' Judaism concentrates much more on apology than it does on forgiveness, which is why I thought it was admirable in his statement that he said, 'I'm not asking for forgiveness,' but he didn't say, 'I really am an anti-Semite ... I really have something horrible to work on.' That is as vicious, as poisonous, as much of a disease, and as dangerous as his alcoholism.

"What's scary for the Jewish community is knowing why he said it, when he said it, under the world circumstances that are now existing, how many others are out there who are also harboring such thoughts. For us, that's a sobering moment, more than fearful. But you know, it's something that we've dealt with before and we'll deal with again, but it would be terrific if those who are spewing this venom could admit what it is and not call it something else."

What are your thoughts on Israel and Lebanon?

"It's a tragedy in the classic sense. The more

I read about it and the more I understand about it, the more tragic it becomes. I begin my perspective about this quagmire we're in with my love of Israel and my support of Israel. And I love Israel and support Israel so much that I think that part of the tragedy is that Israel's choice in its response to clear aggressive activities on the part of both Hezbollah and Hamas was this kind of a military response ... That has moral and ethical consequences that we, as Jews, can't ignore, and Israel, as a Jewish state, can't ignore.

"And I'll be talking about this at our high holy days as well — the only possibilities for peace are negotiated ones and not military ones. Israel has demonstrated that to itself time and time again, and I want better for Israel and her neighbors. All children scream the same, all children bleed the same, and the death of any innocents is wrong and is a horror.

"Hezbollah, in terms of indiscriminately firing missiles into clearly civilian areas and only apologizing when Israeli Arabs are killed and seeing that as a tragedy is an obscenity that Hezbollah and its supporters are going to have to deal with. And Jews and Israel can't walk away from the reality that civilian infrastructure was severely compromised both in Lebanon and in Palestine as a result of recent events, and that innocents, for whatever reasons, were killed. I don't think that we can talk in terms of moral equivalencies or inequivalencies at this point. What we need to do is think differently. This didn't work, this doesn't bring anybody a better time."

How does your congregation cope with the issue?

"By talking about it. A couple of weeks ago we had a big communal meeting and aired some things. People are very emotional, and our way of doing these things has always been to respect the emotions and try and sift through what we know to be fact and what we know not to be fact and so on, but then also to say, 'What are we going to do about it?' I haven't quite announced to the congregation that we're forming a interfaith youth organization, but I think that it will be a very Beth Shir Sholom kind of outgrowth that will resonate with people who have various opinions (about) what just happened and what is still happening and what has the potential for happening. So I think we'll be in good stead that way — rather than just saying slogans, or complaining or whatever it is, or anywhere in between, we'll do something."

Can you explain what it means to be a reform congregation, as opposed to being a conservative or other denomination?

"(My recent Torah portion interpretation) was all about keeping kosher, which I think actually serves as a good example. Because the Torah, you know, the first five books of the Bible, are very precise in the sense of what you can eat and what you can't eat but with reform eyes, we give ourselves an opportunity to take a step back and say to ourselves once again, 'What is this all about?'

"Ultimately, if you take the messages about keeping kosher, they're a way of understanding that the world is a holy entity and the way in which we choose to consume from it is a holy activity, and therefore we need to look closely at the details of what it is we do with the world ... Reform Jews need to know as much about what we're not doing as what we are doing.' In other words, those who do keep kosher have developed reasons why. Those who don't keep kosher need to have an articulation of why they have decided not to. It's definitely part of who we are, and you can't just reject it out of hand. You need to do it from a knowledgeable stance."

What are the keys to running a successful synagogue?

"I think the other thing is to be extremely organic and real. The way I do things here is the way that I find my own authenticity and I am really blessed that other people resonate to that. I hardly do anything around here without a guitar around my neck. Many years ago we formed a synagogue band because I wanted to do it with others and I heard more music happening, and all these people are members of the synagogue. I mean we don't hire any outside musicians to come in and do this. I think the best of what we do is organic that way."

Can you talk about the Santa Monica Bay Interfaith Council's youth group?

"Well, we have good models around. What used to be the National Conference of Christians and Jews — which is now the National Conference for Community and Justice using the same initials — especially before they changed their name, (they) had a track record of being the people that you would go to who were experts in dialogue, experts in communication, experts in inter-group work.

"Because I've been so frustrated in my head about what just happened in the Middle East and knowing that there are various groups that work to try and bridge the misunderstanding and create understanding, I approached my colleagues from the Santa Monica Bay Interfaith Council and I said, 'I want to do a Muslim-Jewish youth group,' and my colleagues said, 'Well let's do more than just Muslim-Jewish — let's do everybody because the prejudices are everywhere, the misunderstandings are everywhere and we need to create different kinds of spiritual citizens in the world.' So we have a lot of work to do. You are at the germination of the idea, because this was actually our first meeting about it."

SMC aims to stabilize deficit and budget

I want to give you a review of our inventory and our efforts in several key areas ... and to hear from you if we are moving in the right direction."

MOVING FORWARD

The discussion began with a review of the college's nearly 61 acres — valued at $351 million — as well as its 37 buildings, 3,496 parking spaces and 234 classrooms and labs.

The new Theatre Arts Complex and the new Liberal Arts Building (North Wing) open today, the first day of the fall semester. The theatre complex — a $17.2 million investment in the arts — contains 300 seats, a lobby, gift shop, dressing rooms, classrooms and offices. The project was funded under Measure U, passed in 2002 that allows the college to issue up to $160 million in bonds for capital improvement projects.

The Humanities and Social Sciences building, when fully completed in April 2007, will house the history, social science and psychology departments. The $28.6 million project was also funded through Measure U, earthquake redevelopment and FEMA funds, as well as money from the state.

In the near future, improvements will be made to landscaping at the Main Campus' quad; Drescher Hall; John Adams Middle School to repair and maintain heavily-used grass fields; and the new Bundy Campus to add additional parking, a student services center and a stop light at the north entrance to improve traffic flow. There was some discussion about adding some retail and restaurant space to the front of the Bundy property to offer students and residents more opportunities to shop.

In addition, a feasibility study for Corsair Field renovation will be conducted to see if between 500 and 800 additional, underground parking spaces can be added. The college has an historic parking deficit of more than 1,000 spaces, according to figures provided at the retreat.

Trustees discussed moving forward with a joint SMC-City Hall day care center, career opportunities center and partial completion of a new facility in Malibu, where the district has made an offer to purchase a 6.8-acre site for $8 million.

"So far, initial reports (and soil samples) have found nothing of concern," said Greg Brown, director of facilities planning. "We are checking for fault lines, but everything looks good. We will be doing further studies in the next 30 days."

MORE CASH NEEDED

With double-digit increases in construction costs, college staff recommended that the SMC board think about another bond measure to complete some of the projects that are deemed necessary, such as the future Malibu campus and additional classrooms in Santa Monica to meet demand.

Currently the college's five campuses do not offer enough classrooms to handle the nearly 25,000 students enrolled, particularly on the Main Campus during peak periods — 10 a.m. to 11 a.m. — when there are an estimated 4,500 students on campus, college officials said.

Staff is trying to move more general education classes to satellite campuses such as the Bundy and Academy campuses. SMC is offering incentives, such as free parking, for those students who choose to attend those classes and others offered during the evening and on weekends.

There was concern expressed about the signs on campus, with students complaining about the lack of them on Pico Boulevard, the Main Campus' most visible entrance. There have been complaints about confusion as to parking, shuttles and campus programs/services at remote sites.

Trustees instructed staff to come up with a presentation program to include more visible signage. Trustees also requested a review of the public transportation network and the availability of student housing.

BALANCING THE CHECKBOOK

If that wasn't enough, the college is facing a $2.9 million operating deficit, which will most certainly mean budget cuts when the board adopts a new spending plan in September.

"The district faces a number of issues which warrant careful planning to avoid serious financial hardship," said Mike Hill, a former community college president and financial advisor for the SMC. "Starting the planning with a structural operating deficit of $2.9 million is in of itself a challenge."

Trustees also face labor negotiations with two unions at the campus, classified employees and faculty, which may further complicated the budget process, Hill said.

To prepare, there has already been a 3 percent cut in discretionary funding for the coming school year. With increased, one-time funding from the state — a 5 percent cost of living adjustment and $4.8 in stabilization money — "now is a critical time for the district to stabilize its financial situation," Hill said.

Trustees need to keep on-going expenditures in check, Hill said, as well as develop a long-term strategy for restoring enrollment instead of continually "borrowing" summer enrollment numbers for additional state funding.

"SMC has done a remarkable job in recovering most of its enrollment from the severe cuts of 2003-04, particularly given that in 2005-06, most California two-year colleges experienced flat or declining enrollments," Tsang said in a yearly report to the trustees. "SMC's ongoing enrollment recovery plan includes such measures as early registration, aggressive enrollment management, increased online and high school dual-enrollment classes and, for the first time, the "VIP Welcome Day," held last August that attracted about 800 new students and family members."

The 2006-07 budget will include a 5 percent contingency reserve, the highest reserve level in recent years, and one that is recommended by the state Chancellor's Office. With the "rainy-day" fund, Hill said the college can better prepare in case of a drop in enrollment or loss of funding.

"We are all in this together and we must do our best to separate the essential from the non-essential," Greenstein told her colleagues, college staff and union representatives. "All of us have to see where we can make some sacrifices for the greater good of the college and our students."

Vegas needs water from rural areas

BY LAUNCE RAKE

Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS — Las Vegas has run out of options for water and will see growth pinched off in seven to 10 years unless plans are approved to pump groundwater 200 miles south from rural White Pine County, a water agency official said.

The assessment by Pat Mulroy, general manager of the Southern Nevada Water Authority, is the strongest warning to date about a looming water shortage.

In recent years, drought in the West and a failure to find other water sources have left the agency with just one option, Mulroy said: The water must come from groundwater in White Pine and other rural parts of the state.

White Pine rancher Dean Baker and county Commissioner Gary Perea said they don't believe the water authority's analysis of the amount of water underground in their county nor the predicted effect the groundwater plan will have on their ranches, farms and the environment.

They said they do not trust the agency's promises to stop pumping if the environment is hurt.

"It's not about politics or money or whatever. It's about water," Baker said.

Mulroy acknowledged that her sharp warning was, in part, due to her anxiety about how the state will rule on the plan.

The state's top water official, State Engineer Tracy Taylor, has scheduled hearings in September before deciding whether to approve the agency's proposal to pump the water more than 200 miles.

Mulroy said the economic effect of a denial would be immediate. Even before the agency could appeal the decision in court, lenders who bankroll construction and business expansion in Las Vegas would begin turning down loans, she said.

"There's a whole market collapse that would happen," Mulroy said. "The whole economic confidence of southern Nevada would start eroding."

The argument ups the ante in a fight over the Southern Nevada Water Authority's plan to pipe 200,000 acre-feet of water a year from rural Nevada to Las Vegas.

Mulroy and her staff have argued consistently that the agency must find new sources of water to complement the 300,000 acre-feet drawn annually from the Colorado River, which supplies 90 percent of the local demand. An acre-foot of water can supply up to two homes per year.

Six years ago, Mulroy said river water surpluses could supply the growing needs of the region for decades. But drought coupled with growing demand from other states have effectively killed expectations for surplus water.

Drought and demand cause water shortage

WATER OPTIONS, from page 8

Mulroy has lined up union, business and political leadership to testify on behalf of the Water Authority at September's hearings, which will cover applications to take 91,000 acre-feet annually from the Spring Valley in White Pine County.

Witnesses expected to testify against the plan include ranchers and environmentalists. Representatives of the National Park Service, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Geological Survey are scheduled to speak, but could withdraw their opposition.

Although the region has stopgap sources, such as water banked here and in neighboring states, Mulroy said, southern Nevada could run out of water for growth as early as 2013.

In 2004, the agency commissioned a study on the economie effect of stopping growth.

The study by financial analysts Guy Hobbs and Jeremy Aguero found a sudden end to growth in Clark County could lead to hundreds of thousands of unemployed people in Las Vegas and more than $200 billion lost in state tax collections over 14 years.

The effect would extend beyond Clark County. Two-thirds of all state tax revenue comes from southern Nevada's cities, and 15 percent of state revenue comes from construction, Aguero said. If the construction industry started to shrink, tax revenues would fall.

Billy Vassiliadis is head of the marketing firm R&R Partners in Las Vegas and has clients including the Water Authority, the Nevada Resort Association, and the Southern Nevada Home Builders Association.

He said growth is a mixed blessing for the region, but growth is here to stay. The water authority has to serve the growing demand, he said.

"On the one hand, clearly, growth creates service demands, and not just water demands. At the same time, growth has also become government's cash flow in a state where we don't have things like income tax, other sources of stable revenue," he said. "We have become somewhat dependent on growth because of the construction industry."

Clark County's economic well-being supports and sustains schools, roads and health care all over the state, he added.

Arguments about growth in Las Vegas do little to reassure environmentalists and White Pine ranchers opposed to the project.

For them, the question is also about survival. They don't trust the agency's promises that it will not harm the water supply in White Pine County. They also fear that once pipelines are built to Las Vegas and the water turned on, the state engineer would never turn it off, even if the water table falls in their county.

Baker said water tables already are dropping in White Pine County from area agricultural uses that don't come close to the amount the water authority wants to take.

"What we're doing is a drop in the bucket compared to what southern Nevada is doing," he said.

Baker, one of a couple of dozen Nevada ranchers in the region, questioned the wisdom of new water supplies fueling continued growth.

"By definition, something that has to survive on growth is going to die sometime," Baker said.

Perea said he wants to see the water stay in his county for economic development — more homes and people, perhaps a ski resort.

"Who's to say that it's not White Pine County that is the future of Nevada?" he said. "The future of Nevada is not necessarily in Clark County."

Jim Deacon, a professor emeritus of environmental studies at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas has argued on behalf of environmentalists against the groundwater plan.

"The fundamental flaw is the idea that you must maintain constant growth in Las Vegas," he said. "There is some point in time where we will reach a resource limitation. We have neither infinite resources nor infinite space in which we can expand."

Deacon, the White Pine critics and some hydrologists argue that the water authority has overestimated the amount of water it can take from Nevada's rural valleys.

The water authority has argued that it won't know how much water is there for the taking until it starts pumping and gauging the effect.

Both sides could continue to fight over the issue well past the September hearings. If Taylor, who took over the office two months ago, follows precedents established in previous contentious water issues, he will let the water authority take only a portion of its request, ramping up the amount the agency can take over a period of years.

If one side or the other believes the state engineer's decision is unfair, they can appeal to state courts. The water authority also is keeping the option open to take the issue to the Legislature.

Small towns get high-tech edge over big cities

BY SARAH SKIDMORE

Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — When John Scott and his wife moved to the small town of Monroe in rural west-central Oregon, they thought they'd have to give up some urban amenities — like their high-speed Internet service.

Instead, they found themselves on the cutting edge.

They could still get high-speed Internet and telephone service that they enjoyed in Corvallis, a university town. And now they also could get Internet Protocol Television, the latest in interactive television — and a service not available in most major U.S. cities.

IPTV uses Internet technology to deliver television to people's homes. Depending on the provider, it can include a number of bonuses — faster channel-changing, a robust selection of videos on-demand and the ability to switch camera angles to get the best view of a game.

It also can be interactive with other services, such as showing telephone caller identification on the television screen.

Some small-town companies are offering the new technology before their larger competitors because the bigger companies are hindered by their size — making it logistically difficult to roll out a new service to their large markets.

Smaller rural companies, however, can reach a smaller number of people more quickly. This is particularly important with IPTV because it requires significant wiring, something that is easier to execute on a small scale.

Of an estimated 350,000 IPTV subscribers in the country, 95 percent signed up through rural telephone companies, says Jeff Heynen, an analyst at Infonetics

ON THE NET

National Telecommunications Cooperative Association

Rural Utilities Service
<http://www.usda.gov/rus/>

Research, a California firm.

Smaller companies "can be the test beds for these technologies," Heynen said. "It's kind of a win-win situation: They get to be at the forefront of these new technologies, and the citizens already benefit."

Canby Telcom Co., a cooperative of more than 8,000 customers, was the first to offer IPTV in Oregon in 2005. Monroe Telephone Co., a family owned business in the town of roughly 600, followed a few weeks later. And Gervais Telephone Co., with its nine employees, plans to launch IPTV in the first quarter of 2007.

It's not just in Oregon, but in rural communities across the country, telecom experts say. People in Newington, Ga.; Raymondville, Texas and Mayfield, Ky., all recently got access to IPTV.

Meanwhile, efforts by communications giants to bring the service to larger cities are in earlier stages. AT&T has its version of IPTV in place in San Antonio, plans to have it in 19 million homes by 2008 and will consider expansion after that. Verizon has a hybrid version of IPTV that it offers in parts of seven states.

Along with being able to move quickly, smaller rural companies can get financial assistance from the federal Rural Utilities Service. A division of the Agriculture Department, the program lends small telecoms money to pay for upgrades to prevent the companies and communities from falling behind.

The agency has given out more than $800 million since 2002, including part of the $3 million spent by Monroe to revamp its telecommunications system.

The program enabled many rural companies to begin offering broadband, and services have grown from there.

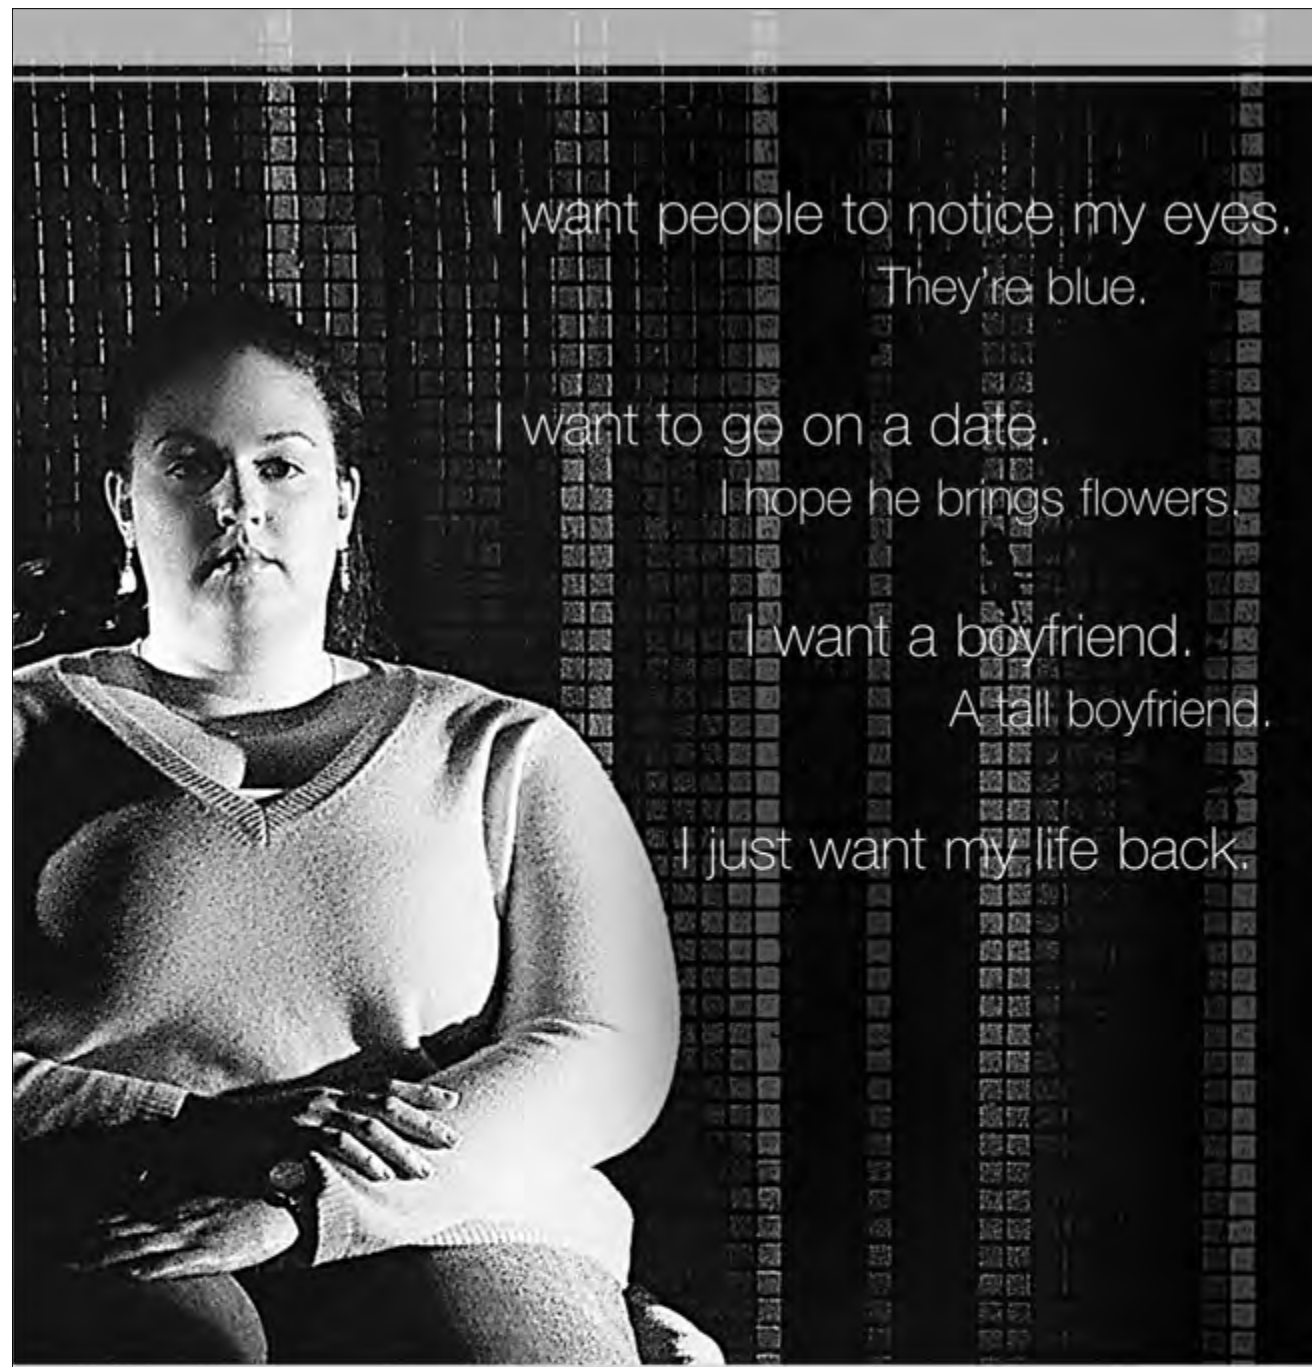

"We're bordered by a lot of people who could compete with us," said Keith Galitz, president and general manager of Canby Telcom. "They are bombarded by Portland TV and radio ads. We have to stay price- and product-competitive."

Some customers, like Scott, also prefer to stick with the local company out of loyalty and because of quick service response.

"The rural telco are in a really enviable position," said Heynen, the expert at Infonetics Research. "They are viewed as the home team. They can also provide content and advertising that outsiders might not be able to."

The National Telecommunications Cooperative Association, an association representing small and rural telephone companies and cooperatives, said loyalty is a definite market advantage, but staying ahead of the big guys is just good business.

"It's a survival thing," said Caitlin Colligan, a spokeswoman for the organization. "They have to compete with the big guys. They have to."

The View is not so good for Vieira

Meredith Vieira says she doesn't watch The View now that she's poised to become the co-anchor of NBC's Today show on Sept. 13.

"I needed to think ahead," she said in an interview published in Time magazine on Sunday. "But I have to admit, the day after Star made her announcement, I watched. I feel very sad for everything that's happened and for everybody involved."

announcement that Rosie O'Donnell will take over the moderator chair of the program.

Vieira, who was The View moderator for nine years, said she was proud of her work at the popular daytime talk show and feels it has taken a turn for the worse.

"It's hard to watch. It sort of became a joke," she told the magazine.

Though she turned down a job on CBS's Early Show in 2002, Vieira said, she couldn't turn her back on the opportunity to co-host the Today show.

"It's an institution," she said. "I'm not somebody who loves getting up at four in the morning, so this might kill me, but we'll see."

A new addition to the Fiat family

John Elkann, vice chairman of Fiat, is the father of a boy.

Elkann's wife, Lavina Borromeo, gave birth early Sunday at a hospital in Turin, said John Elkann's father, the writer and journalist Alain Elkann.

"I got the call this morning. It's beautiful news, I'm very happy," said Alain Elkann, who was rushing to Turin to see his grandson from the mountain resort of Cortina.

It is the first child of John Elkann, who is the great-great-grandson of Fiat founder Giovanni Agnelli.

The Agnelli family has fascinated Italians for decades and has often been compared to the royal family in Britain and the Kennedys in the United States.

Giovanni Agnelli founded Fiat in 1899. His grandson, Giovanni "Gianni" Agnelli, was chairman from 1966 until his death in January 2003, and was credited with transforming the Turin automaker into a conglomerate with interests from steel to chemicals to newspapers.

John Elkann is being groomed to take over the auto giant, Italy's largest non-state company.

Sunday's announcement marked a respite from the bad news that has dogged the family in recent years.

John Elkann's younger brother Lapo was hospitalized in October after he suffered an overdose in the apartment of a transvestite where investigators said they later found traces of cocaine. He has since recovered.

Edoardo Agnelli, Elkann's uncle, died in 2000 in an apparent suicide. An elder cousin, Giovannino, who had been preparing to take over Fiat, died of cancer at age 33 in 1997.
