Clinic that cares for all, cared for by Hollywood legend

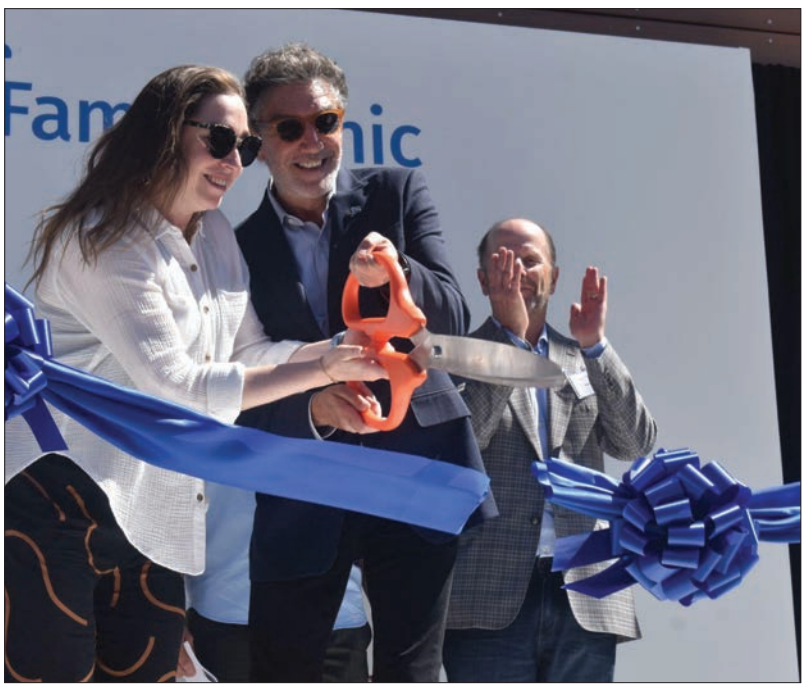

THOMAS LEFFLER
SMDP Staff Writer

Every resident needs quality health care, regardless of age or financial situation. Without local clinics that can take any patient, any time, would-be superstars of their respective fields may not be able to live long enough to see their talents shine.

Television mastermind Chuck Lorre was able to see his breakthrough, creating some of the medium's most successful programs such as 'The Big Bang Theory,' but may not have gotten there without the support of local health clinics. Inspired by his personal journey, Lorre's contributions to Venice Family Clinic led to extensive renovations at its Rose Avenue location, newly renamed as the Chuck Lorre Rose Avenue Health and Wellness Center.

BRAVING THE HEAT: People were out on the beach and Santa Monica Pier Monday despite a heat wave taking up the first part of the week.

THOMAS LEFFLER
SMDP Staff Writer

Though the calendar is about to change to September, summer conditions remain in Santa Monica, with temperatures set to peak in the area during the final week of August.

Monday's high of 82 degrees Fahrenheit, recorded by a National Weather Service observation station at Santa Monica Municipal Airport, was the first 80-degree day in the city since July 31 and just the fifth day to reach 80 in 2023. Previous instances of Santa Monica reaching the 80-degree mark occurred on

Toothpaste now under lock and key at local retailers

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

As stores across the region and state battle growing trends of retail theft, Santa Monica shoppers can now see first hand how businesses are protecting their goods with newly installed locked cabinets inside the city's two Target stores.

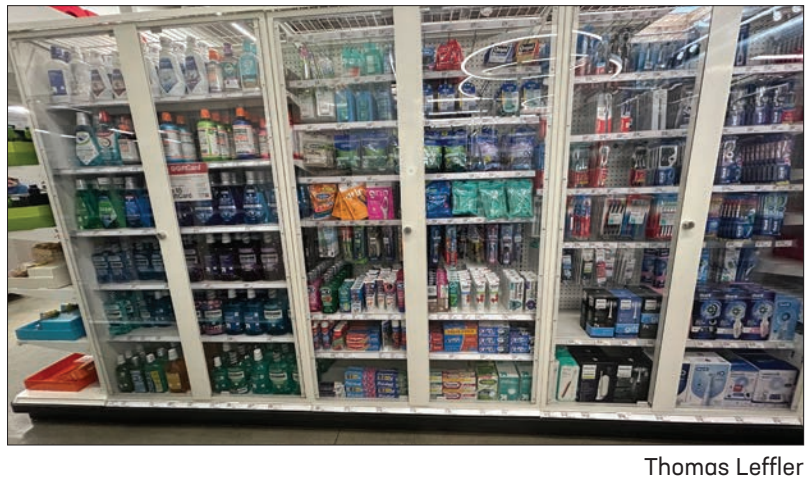

To purchase toiletries and electronic, shoppers must find an employee to unlock the clear plastic cases. In the case of some high value items, employees will take the merchandise to the register and leave it with a cashier until customers check out.

Target has been among the most vocal of retailers in talking about the impact organized theft is having on their business.

Organized theft differs from traditional shoplifting. While stores have always contended with individuals taking a few items, the growing organized versions use crews to scout and plan large scale theft of specific items. While some individuals do the stealing, others convert the goods into cash, often through reselling items on eBay or Amazon.

Target said earlier this year that theft, including organized retail crime cost the company $650 million in losses last year and while they said theft levels were leveling, it would likely cost

Trump trial set for March 4, 2024, in federal case charging him with plotting to overturn election

ERIC TUCKER, LINDSAY WHITEHURST AND MICHAEL KUNZELMAN
Associated Press

A judge on Monday set a March 4, 2024, trial date for Donald Trump in the federal case in Washington charging the former president with trying to overturn the results of the 2020 election, rejecting a defense request to push back the case by years.

U.S. District Judge Tanya Chutkan rebuffed claims by Trump's attorneys that an April 2026 trial date was necessary to account for the huge volume of evidence they say they are reviewing and to prepare for what they contend is a novel and unprecedented prosecution. But she agreed to postpone the trial slightly beyond the January 2024 date proposed by special counsel Jack Smith's prosecution team.

"The public has a right to a prompt and efficient resolution of this matter," Chutkan said.

If the current date holds, it would represent a setback to Trump's efforts to push the case back until well after the 2024 presidential election, a contest in which he's the early front-runner for the Republican nomination. The March 2024 date would also guarantee a blockbuster trial in the nation's capitol in the heat of the GOP presidential nominating calendar, likely forcing Trump to juggle campaign and courtroom appearances, and it would come the day before Super Tuesday — a crucial voting day when the largest number of delegates are up for grabs.

> "I want to note here that setting a trial date does not depend and should not depend on the defendant's personal or professional obligations"
> - Tanya Chutkan U.S. District Judge

"I want to note here that setting a trial date does not depend and should not depend on the defendant's personal or professional obligations," Chutkan said.

The setting of the trial date came despite strong objections from Trump lawyer John Lauro. He said defense lawyers had received an enormous trove of records from Smith's team — a prosecutor put the total at more than 12 million pages — and that the case concerned novel legal issues that would require significant time to sort out.

"This is one of the most unique cases from a legal perspective ever brought in the history of the United States. Ever," Lauro said.

Prosecutor Molly Gaston countered that the public had an unquestionable interest in moving the case forward and said that the general evidence in the case has long been well known to the defense.

"What is the balance of the defendant's right and need to prepare for trial and, on the other hand, the public's exceedingly and unprecedentedly strong interest in a speedy trial?" Gaston said. Trump, she said, is accused of "attempting to overturn an election and disenfranchise millions."

"There is an incredibly strong public interest in a jury's full consideration of those claims in open court," Gaston said.

Trump, a Republican, was charged earlier this month in a four-count indictment with scheming to undo his loss to Joe Biden, a Democrat, in the 2020 election.

The federal election subversion prosecution is one of four criminal cases against Trump. Smith's team has brought a separate federal case accusing him of illegally retaining classified documents at his Palm Beach, Florida, property, Mar-a-Lago, and refusing to give them back. That case is currently set for trial next May 20.

Trump also faces state cases in New York and Georgia. Manhattan prosecutors have charged him with falsifying business records in connection with a hush money payment to a porn actor who has said she had an extramarital affair with Trump, while prosecutors in Fulton County, Georgia, have charged Trump and 18 others in a racketeering conspiracy aimed at undoing that state's 2020 election.

Trump, the early front-runner for the 2024 Republican presidential nomination, surrendered Thursday in that case, posing with a scowling face for the first mug shot in American history of a former U.S. president. He has claimed the investigations of him are politically motivated and are an attempt to damage his chances of winning back the White House.

Reigning Olympic champion Sunisa Lee overcomes health issue to compete at US Championships

JANIE MCCAULEY
AP Sports Writer

Strictly going by standings, reigning Olympic all-around gold medalist Sunisa Lee finished last at the U.S. Championships — yet ask anybody who knows her and they will view those results in a completely different light.

"I'm beyond proud of her that she was able to come out here and show what she did," Jordan Chiles said.

> It is exciting to see her overcome everything that she has and come back out here stronger, because I think it does send a good message to the younger ones
> - Simone Biles

"It is exciting to see her overcome everything that she has and come back out here stronger, because I think it does send a good message to the younger ones," said Simone Biles, who won her eighth championship.

The score sheet with Biles on top and Lee at the very bottom hardly told the story of Lee's tumultuous year dealing with a kidney-related health issue and just how much it took to even get to San Jose this past week.

In and out of the hospital because of the kidney issue, the 20-year-old Lee was forced to end her sophomore collegiate season early at Auburn. On April 3, she posted on social media: "My focus at this time is my health and recovery."

So the fact she competed at U.S. Championships mattered so much more than the tie for 27th place. Oh, and Lee still got to stand on the podium with a bronze finish on beam. She didn't compete at all on uneven bars — her signature event — or floor exercise, causing the lowest score.

Capping an emotional weekend at the SAP Center, Lee smiled and waved in her sparkling white leotard while accepting her medal for beam with a two-day score of 27.850.

Lee's eyes are still clearly set on the Paris Olympics next summer, seemingly determined as ever to overcome the latest challenges in her young life.

If anyone knows how to persevere, it's Lee.

She captured gold at the 2020 Tokyo Games while far from full strength from a broken foot, and still heartbroken from losing two family members to COVID-19 — all while her father recovered from an accident that paralyzed him when he fell off a ladder.

Biles, who has made her own remarkable comeback to capture a record eighth national title, praised Lee for discovering her limits to balance the push to win with the need to step back.

"We know that we have to take care of our bodies, whether that's mentally or physically, so take that break and come back stronger because at the end of the day gymnastics is just what we do," Biles said. "And we also have to remember that and we're not going to be doing this forever, so at the end of the day it's really nice to show those young kids that but I also think it's our story to write, our ending to tell."

Next up, Lee will quickly get back to work hoping for an invitation to the U.S. selection camp where a team will be named ahead of world championships that begin late next month in Antwerp, Belgium.

U.S. Olympic medalist Chellsie Memmel, the technical lead for USA Gymnastics, admires Lee's courage to keep fighting through each tough day. Nobody is counting her out to make the Americans' five-woman squad.

"I'm proud of what she's able to do dealing with everything that she is going through," Memmel said. "So to be able to come out here each day and perform very nice on beam and vault, she's not just doing those events, we've gotten to see her train on bars. It's inspiring."

Lee could be chosen to compete in just a couple of events for the Americans. Whatever happens, Lee has a huge cheering section as she goes forward.

"The difficulties she is going through with her health and everything, it's really hard to know that you've been through an Olympic cycle and you're trying to do it again but knowing it's in a different condition, you need people there to support," Chiles said, "and I'm going to do everything that I can to make sure that I'm there for her because she is remarkable and an amazing human being."

In March 2022, Lee shared a handwritten journal entry on social media with several messages to herself.

"GIVE YOURSELF GRACE," she wrote.

"Be nice to yourself, you're not always going to be perfect. This isn't the end, just the beginning."

Perhaps, now, that beginning is the path of recovery to be full strength for Paris 2024.

California unions make major push with strikes and legislative action

DAN WALTERS
Special to the Daily Press

This has been a year of labor unrest in California, a state in which unions represent a relatively small faction of the state's workforce but wield great political power.

The most obvious example is the protracted strikes of actors and writers in Southern California's iconic entertainment industry, but Tinseltown's picketers are just a fraction of the workers who have been demanding more in wages and benefits and are willing to walk off the job to get them.

There have been 53 labor strikes in California so far this year, involving 276,340 participants, or about 10% of total union membership in the state, according to Cornell University's Labor Action Tracker. That doesn't include strikes that began in 2022, either.

What's happening in California mirrors trends in other states, leading to much speculation about underlying factors, such as post-pandemic angst and inflation.

As the California Legislature enters the last days of its 2023 session, the growing unrest in workplaces is manifesting itself in high-stakes drives by union officials to gain new members and more benefits for those members.

The final agendas for legislative action are studded with union-sponsored bills that, in some cases, would make major alterations in the relationships between California employers and their workers.

One of the biggest is Assembly Bill 1228, which would make fast food franchising companies such as McDonald's liable, along with their franchise holders, for labor law violations.

It's the latest move by the Service Employees International Union in its drive to organize fast food workers, and responds to – or retaliates for – the fast food industry's referendum, due to appear on the 2024 ballot, aimed at overturning previous legislation. The law in question sought to create a state commission to oversee fast food wages and working conditions.

PROTEST: Marchers hold signs as Ty Kovacs, a teacher for California School of the Deaf, signs to the crowd in front of the Governor's Mansion on Sacramento on June 8, 2023.

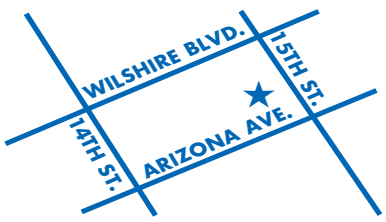

The Hollywood strikes have spawned a late-session effort to make strikers eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

"Striking workers have earned their unemployment insurance benefits. They deserve to use them when they are unable to work," said Lorena Gonzalez Fletcher, head of the California Labor Federation. "We can't have workers economically insecure because they're forced to go out on strike, it harms them and their families and has rippling effects on the entire community."

Business groups oppose the measure, of course, arguing that since employers finance unemployment insurance benefits, they would be unfairly underwriting strikes.

Still another hard-fought measure, Senate Bill 525, would raise the minimum wage for health care workers to $21 an hour and later to $25. It's needed, health care unions say, to allow workers in a vital industry to meet their rising living costs. Hospitals and other health care providers Angeles, I was really sick, I was really physically extremely ill," Lorre said at an Aug. 26 ceremony celebrating the completion of renovations at the center. "I was 110 pounds, and (my) prospects weren't good. And I had no insurance. So this is important to me. The opportunity to see a doctor when you need to see a doctor, no matter what's in your wallet, is really personal to me."

The center is part of the Venice Family Clinic network of sites, which provides comprehensive care to more than 45,000 people annually, regardless of income or insurance status. Merging with South Bay Family Health Care in late 2021, Venice Family Clinic has 17 sites ranging from Venice and Santa Monica to Inglewood and Redondo Beach.

As the first permanent site of the clinic's network, the Rose Avenue location remains special to Venice Family Clinic CEO Dr. Mitesh Popat, who hopes the changes at the center can serve as a "blueprint" to carry forward in other communities.

Popat commended the on-site improvements for their functionality as well as their aesthetic quality, pointing to the brighter atmosphere and increased natural light in the center's offices as valuable. Also adding some color to the center is a new mural gifted from Venice-based artist Christina Angelina, also known as Starfighter. The custom art piece features photo realistic depictions of hands from actual clinic patients, including those who have been receiving care for over 45 years.

"To have a place that's here, that's beautiful, modern, welcoming, that anyone would be happy to get care in … (we're) providing care in a dignified space in a dignified way is huge," Popat said. "We're not the clinics of 50 years ago … we're here to serve the community, we're open for everyone. Whether you're housed or not housed, we're here to serve you in a comprehensive fashion."

Comprehensive care comes down to efficient communication between staff and patient, which has improved due to refurbished "team rooms." The exam rooms allow patients to stay in one place, while health care providers such as mental health specialists, case managers and care coordinators can visit them. This ease of access for the patient is also evident with the center's new pharmacy, moved to the ground floor for a seamless medication pickup process.

"By redesigning our clinic flow, it supports our care for our patients in the community," Popat said.

New to the center is a community room that can be used for group sessions showcasing the wide range of services available, such as fitness classes and potentially cooking and nutritional demonstrations down the line. The center also provides services from dental and vision to substance use and diabetes counseling.

A separate pediatric waiting room and dedicated pediatric exam rooms were added, as were two showers available for unhoused patients to use before their appointments, or just to keep clean.

The renovations took years to complete, adding a constant evolution of the center onto the team's already hectic workload, with Venice Family Clinic Deputy Director and Chief Operations Office Anita Zamora commending her fellow employees for taking on the strain.

"I'm grateful for everyone who has made this renovation possible … a lot of change, it wasn't easy, but the team came together to make sure patients had the quality care they needed during that time, in spite of the transformation and frankly, sometimes chaos, that was in place," Zamora said.

Besides 'Two and a Half Men' creator Lorre, others helping to make the transformation complete were the S. Mark Taper Foundation (who gave a $500,000 gift for the project) and U.S. Representative Ted Lieu, who secured a $500,000 appropriation for furnishings and new technology at the site. Lorre will also be matching gifts up to $2 million to the 604 Fund, which supports ongoing care at the center.

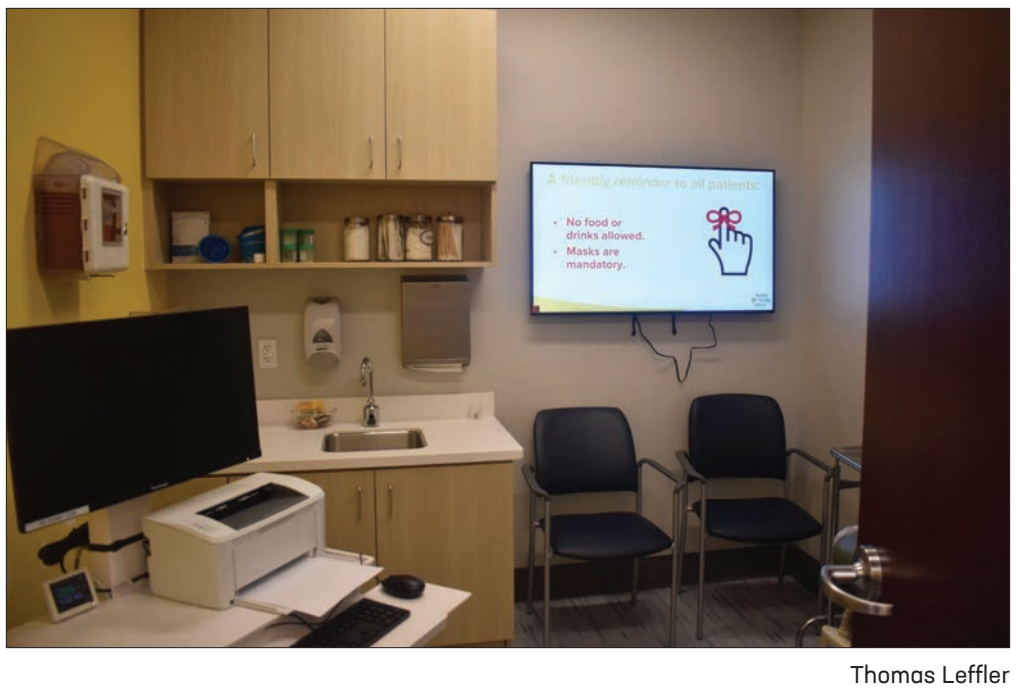

While he was emotional before cutting the ribbon on the newly-renovated site, Lorre quickly shifted back into the humorous persona that made him an entertainment legend.

"Very much like Los Angeles and Hollywood, this building has undergone a lot of cosmetic surgery … it will be welcoming."

California sues district that requires parents be notified if their kids change pronouns

AMY TAXIN
Associated Press

California's attorney general sued a Southern California school district Monday over its recently adopted policy that requires schools to notify parents if their children change their gender identification or pronouns.

Attorney General Rob Bonta said he filed a lawsuit against the Chino Valley Unified School District over the policy that mandated this notification, calling it a "forced outing" of transgender students that violates their civil rights.

"It tramples on students' rights," Bonta told reporters. He said he is seeking a court order to immediately halt the policy from taking effect.

The move comes after Chino Valley Unified, about 35 miles (56 kilometers) east of Los Angeles, adopted the policy following a shift in leadership on the school board. Other Southern California districts have adopted similar policies and Bonta said he believes they will also be affected by this litigation, though they are not named in the suit.

The suit argues the policy discriminates against transgender and gender non-conforming students and violates the state constitution which requires equal protect for all students regardless of their gender expression, identity or sexual orientation. It also argues the policy violates students' privacy rights.

The policies have sparked divisions in communities between those who say parents have a right to know the decisions their children are making at school and those who say that such policies would forcibly out transgender students to their parents and threaten the well-being of some of the most vulnerable students.

Andi Johnston, a spokesperson for Chino Valley Unified, said the district is working with its attorneys to review the lawsuit. Before the filing, district officials had been working to provide Bonta's office with requested documents and records in response to a subpoena served earlier this month, Johnston said.

The fight over the proposed school district policies in Southern California come as states across the country are battling over transgender rights through efforts to impose bans on gender-affirming care, bar trans athletes from girls and women's sports, and require schools to "out" trans and nonbinary students to their parents.

another $500 million this year.

The problem is a national phenomenon. According to the National Retail Federation (NRF), retailers saw a 26.5% increase in theft incidents in 2021 with eight in 10 of the retailers surveyed reporting that the violence and aggression associated with crime incidents increased in the past year. NRF said the problem cost retailers nearly $100 billion in 2021.

According to the Los Angeles Police Department, the City of Los Angeles alone has experienced a 14.2% increase in retail theft for 2023 compared to 2022.

Much of the blame in California has been leveled at Prop. 47. The rule has often been misstated to say there are no penalties for low-level crimes, however the 2014 law didn't legalize theft. Rather, it reduced the penalty for shoplifting less than $950 to a misdemeanor.

Proponents of the law say it was necessary to comply with a court order to address overcrowded prisons and that most retail theft is below $400 regardless of the law's cap.

Critics say it has emboldened thieves who know misdemeanors may not be pursued by courts and even if they are, they carry light penalties.

Lawmakers have proposed revisions nonetheless with laws in the works to allow for felony charges against repeat thieves and to bring the felony threshold back down to $400.

Locally, law enforcement agencies are working on a new retail theft task force to address the issue.

The California Highway Patrol (CHP) has had a dedicated retail theft effort for years and recently Governor Gavin Newsom announced an expansion of that program specifically in Los Angeles.

As part of the agency's expanded effort, the CHP will triple its resources in the Los Angeles region devoted to tackling retail crime and allocate additional investigators specifically for the new regional law enforcement task force that Mayor Karen Bass announced.

The Santa Monica Police Department is part of the effort with a dedicated detective working on the interagency team.

"Currently, our Property Crimes Unit works with regional and state partners to share information about incidents of organized retail theft, but this will be the first time we have had the opportunity to participate in something close to home and this well-represented," said Lt. Erika Aklufi.

Los Angeles Councilwoman Traci Park praised the effort.

"The rise in smash-and-grab incidents are devastating our businesses, driving up consumer costs, and eroding public safety," she said in a statement. "As an elected official, ensuring public safety is my primary responsibility and commitment. The task force's round-the-clock availability, seven days a week, highlights our steadfast approach to combating these crimes. Their mandate is straightforward: such acts will not be tolerated in Los Angeles, and criminals will be held accountable."

HEAT

April 21 (high of 81), and a three-day heat wave during the final week of July. July 26 and 27 had highs of 82 and 80 degrees, respectively, followed by a year-high of 83 degrees on July 31.

The late-August heat wave will similarly strain Santa Monica residents with three days of temperatures in the 80s. According to AccuWeather forecasting, Tuesday's high will also be 82 degrees, and another 80-degree day is forecast for Wednesday.

In 2022, the final stretch of August heading into September was also a hot period, cresting at a scorching 100 degrees on Sept. 9. While this period may not reach triple digits, it provides its own problems for locals.

One of those issues is air quality, with Davis Instruments explaining that high temperatures worsen existing air quality issues. "During a heat wave, air is often stagnant, so polluted air is not dispersed," a Davis Instruments article from October of 2020 said. "Sunlight and high temps also encourage chemical reaction in pollutants and increase smog." According to Plume Labs, the air quality in Santa Monica Monday rated as "poor" due to increased levels of nitrogen dioxide and other pollutant particles in the air.

Another peril to consider within a heat wave is dehydration, which can exacerbate both minor illnesses such as heat exhaustion, to life-threatening conditions like a heat stroke.

"By staying hydrated, it reduces the rate of things like cramps, it reduces the rate of getting profoundly dehydrated ... it's somewhat of a vicious cycle, once you start getting dehydrated, you're more predisposed to illness," said Dr. Michael Levine, associate professor of emergency medicine at UCLA Health.

Levine noted that those in the heat wave should remain hydrated as well as stay inside in air conditioning if possible. Caring for those with enhanced risk, including elderly and disabled residents, is also a priority, as is refraining from strenuous outdoor movement.

"Certainly limit rigorous outdoor activities to a minimum, and if you're going to do outdoor activities, don't try to do it during the middle of the day," Levine said. "Do it more in the morning or more in the evening."

see it as too costly. Los Angeles County says its system would take a $200 million hit.

SB 525 is one of several union-backed measures to make the California Chamber of Commerce's "job killer" list, meaning it's a high-priority target for the influential business organization.

Senate Bill 616 is another chamber target and another one on the Labor Federation's priority list. It would increase the number of mandated paid sick leave days off from three to seven.

"We knew when we passed the first paid sick days law that three days wouldn't be enough," Fletcher said.

The bill "imposes new costs and leave requirements on employers of all sizes ... in addition to all other enacted leave mandates that small employers throughout the state are already struggling with to implement and comply," the chamber responded.

This is only a small sample of the union-sponsored bills pending in the session's final days. The stakes are high in both the state's many strikes and what happens in the Capitol over the next few weeks.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Aug. 29)

It'll be a year when your finger is on the pulse and your feet move before you think too much to stop them. Fantastic timing brings you money and magical personal connections. You're there for people when they most need you, and it pays you back. More highlights: a secret talent for following the good weather, and the call of auspicious muses. Sagittarius and Libra adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 16, 40, 4, 21 and 22.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your focus is a valuable resource that will give you what you want on a platter. Think ahead to what might steal your attention, then prevent the intrusion. With minimal disruptions, you're unstoppable.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). It's typical for you to give more than you take. But it does no good to give to those inclined to hoard the bounty instead of spreading it. It's not necessary to avoid the selfish altogether, but do be wary of them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). While it's natural to worry that others may be having more fun than you, it's also a silly thing to get too hung up on. Assume everyone is having about the same amount, give or take a smile, and then focus on yours.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You'll have the chance to imperfectly connect with someone interesting. There won't be a chance to perfectly connect, so don't wait up for that. Even your bumbles are charming now, so you really can't go wrong.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Maybe you're even feeling a little shy. It works for you. You attract outgoing people who enjoy the challenge of helping you open up and enjoy yourself. Your laugh makes someone's heart sing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). It's one of those days when you begin with a clear ending in mind and plan backward — an approach that brings magic to work and play alike. Tonight features strange questions and odd encounters.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Unless you're dealing with a fire sign, today will be like a vending machine in which the dollars go in and the treats come out predictably. With the fire sign, all bets are off. Unpredictability will be part of the charm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You're a deep thinker. Some people think about things for a minute that you think about for years. Profound insights come to you at different mile markers of life. You'll be newly illuminated on one of your favorite topics.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You're undaunted by a challenge that few others would take on. The stakes are so high, and it requires more work than most want to put in. With the endurance to tolerate the ups and downs, you'll succeed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Everything is easier when you get the approach right. The energy of yearning, trying or chasing will be repellent. Instead, you'll cultivate a welcoming kind of curiosity and let the world come to you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You catch subtle expressions as they flicker across faces in a fraction of a second. Your talent for reading emotions so well gives you many other abilities, such as knowing what someone might need to hear to feel better.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Accept life as it is. This will dissolve the problem. Would you believe that life wants to flow to a state of resolution? When no one is invested in forcing outcomes to go a certain way, things will take care of themselves.
