BARNARD WAY In what a bicycle blogger called a clear case of road rage, a driver was arrested last week for allegedly driving his car into a cyclist riding on the 2600 block of Barnard Way.

Santa Monica police said Jeffrey Ray Adams, 41, of Los Angeles, was arrested for felony assault with a deadly weapon on Thursday, Aug. 26 at approximately 6:24 p.m. He was later released on $30,000 bail. He is expected to be arraigned Sept. 26.

Adams was driving south on Barnard Way alongside the cyclist when the two began arguing. Allegedly Adams cut off the cyclist, making a hard left from the right lane

Plane crashes into home

Craft was trying to land at SMO; pilot suffers possible broken leg

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

SUNSET PARK A small airplane crashed into an unoccupied home in the Sunset Park neighborhood Monday afternoon, injuring the pilot and a painter who was working on the house at the time of the accident.

Osbaldo Audatat was one of four men painting the home located on the 3100 block of 21st Street when the plane struck at approximately 2:45 p.m.

The men turned when they heard a noise, and saw a plane coming straight for them, clipping the tree in front of a nearby house before crashing.

They jumped out of the way, and the plane crashed just where they'd been standing, Audatat said.

"We were very lucky," he said.

The plane then hit a cinderblock wall in the back of the house, which took most of the impact, authorities said.

A fourth man, whose first name is Luis, was in the back of the house at the time of the incident. He sustained minor injuries, possibly from being hit by debris that resulted from the impact, said Capt. Judah Mitchell of the Santa Monica Fire Department.

The crash caused a small fire. One of the painters grabbed a garden hose and put out the flames, and they helped the pilot out of the plane.

The pilot suffered moderate injuries, possibly a broken ankle or leg, according to Santa Monica Airport Director Robert Trimborn.

Both the pilot, who has not been identified, and the injured painter were taken to local hospitals. The painter went to Saint John's Medical Center. It's currently unclear where the pilot was taken.

The plane was a Cessna 172 that belonged to Justice Aviation, a flight school that has been based at Santa Monica Airport for the last 20 years.

Joe Justice, the owner of the school, confirmed that the plane belonged to the company, but had no further comment pending the results of investigations by the Federal

COMMUNITY BRIEFS

PICO BLVD

Bringing in big bucks

Public radio station KCRW-Santa Monica (89.9 FM) raised more money on Friday, Aug. 19 — the final day of its 2011 summer membership drive — than on any other day in the history of the station's on-air fundraising efforts.

KCRW is a community service of Santa Monica College.

On average, between Aug. 11 and 18, the station was raising about $100,000 from about 900 contributors per day.

But on that final Friday of the drive, a record-shattering total of $350,000 came in from 2,531 members. "Morning Becomes Eclectic," hosted by Jason Bentley, which airs weekdays from 9 a.m. to noon, raised $111,000. And aided by a $50,000 challenge grant from the Wertheimer Family Foundation during the station's local broadcast of NPR's "All Things Considered" from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m., another $97,000 was donated.

Additional challenge grants from actor Will Ferrell ($10,000) and Tom Hanks and Rita Wilson ($20,000) helped the station raise matching funds throughout the drive. Daily drawings for the new Apple iPad II, and sweepstakes vacations to Barcelona and Costa Rica add to the allure of the station's fundraising efforts, in addition to hundreds of incentives donated by local businesses in the form of premiums, including dinners, gift certificates, concerts, museum memberships and more.

"Aug. 19 was the greatest single day in KCRW's fundraising history," said pledge drive manager Laura Shumate. "An extraordinary feat like this only happens because of the community we are so devoted to — I'm speaking of all of our supporting members, as well as the more than 1,000 phone volunteers and drive staffers who help us put on our membership drives."

Having reduced the number of pledge drive days from 11 to nine in the past year, the station announced that more than 10,120 people donated approximately $1.35 million during the on-air summer drive. The station still limits the number of pledge drives to two per year but donations are accepted all year round at www.kcrw.com/join. Contributors are still eligible for the Costa Rica sweepstakes, which ends on Sep. 13.

ON THE MARKET: A for sale sign sits in front of a home on 14th Street in the North of Montana neighborhood last week.

Home sellers, buyers play caution card

BY DANIEL ARCHULETA
Managing Editor

CITYWIDE Home prices may be relatively holding steady in Santa Monica, but it appears more buyers — and particularly sellers — are letting caution rule.

Prices in the city by the sea are actually up in most areas, with the North of Montana 90402 zip code showing the most strength, boasting a 15 percent jump in prices in July 2011 compared to the same period last year, according to stats by Realtor.com. But, it's the inventory of available homes and condos that tells the real story.

"There's not much to sell," said realtor Gabriela Manakova with Keller Williams Realty, who is based on Ocean Park Boulevard. "People still want to buy, [mortgage] rates are really low."

Listings are down as much as 58 percent in Santa Monica, according to the latest statistics.

Manakova believes the local market is still showing strength despite the lack of available properties, mostly due to the demand to live in Santa Monica, a locale known for its quality of life, good public schools and proximity to the beach. But, she said the willingness of buyers to pay high prices only goes so far and is stymied by the lack of available listings.

These beliefs are illustrated by the raw numbers. For instance, there are just 78 listings in the 90405 zip code, a steep 42 percent drop from July 2010. With few homes available, Manakova and other local realtors believe that prices are staying afloat

SMC WOMEN'S SOCCER

Corsairs eye return to playoffs, perhaps a championship

BY WAYNE NEAL
Special to the Daily Press

SMC Santa Monica College began its fall semester this week, but the women's soccer team has already been hard at work for the past four months preparing for their season opener.

Last season's disappointing 1-0 first round playoff loss to El Camino College has been well forgotten for the Corsairs as they are focusing all of their attention on getting back to the playoffs.

Last season, the Corsairs finished with a record of 12-4-5 and 11-2 in the Western Conference, earning second place in the South Division. The Corsairs where led by freshman Olivia Patterson who paced the team with 12 goals. Also contributing to the team's success were Mercy Tejada, who had 10 goals, Samantha Lee and Alisha Sheldon, who led the team in saves with 93.

The Corsairs come into this season with more motivation and experience then last year as they are returning nine players who can make an immediate impact.

"This year we are already ready with a high fitness level and higher competitive spirit," Sheldon said.

Knowing when to say no

Editor:

Six members of the Santa Monica City Council have turned a deaf ear to the citizens of this city by voting to go forward with development agreement negotiations for the Bergamot Transit Village ("Papermate project gets past council," page 1, Aug. 25).

Santa Monica is already over-developed and congested. No more large developments should be allowed in our city! Once again, I have to wonder why, and what is in it for our council members? Do they profit from this? They obviously don't live in this area.

Jeanne Payne
Santa Monica

A massive intrusion

Editor:

Thanks for the article about traffic and the opening of SMC ("Back-to-school traffic returns," page 1, Aug. 29). It's time to remind residents about the traffic that will merge with the Santa Monica College traffic due to the proposed Hines project at Olympic Boulevard and 26th Street.

If the City Council goes through with its plans to allow 750,000 square feet of construction on property previously zoned for 300,000 square feet, this increase in density and height will increase traffic and congestion all over our tiny city in ways it is hard to fathom. Hines, the out-of-state developer, is pushing through this project, the largest ever in our city, with the support of our City Council, except for Kevin McKeown.

It is up to us to inform our neighbors and let the City Council know that we do not want this massive intrusion. There are alternatives for this gateway to Santa Monica that can enhance our community far better than this massive commercial project.

Samohi pride

Editor:

My heart was filled with admiration and Samohi Viking pride as I read your story about the new generation of student athletes who have graduated from Samohi and are now enrolled as students and football players at SMC ("SMC's Samohi connection," page 3, Aug. 29). I was honored to have the opportunity to be their freshman football line coach at Samohi. Their ongoing commitment to their education and carrying on the tradition of personal excellence is, in a word, "outstanding!"

Learning how to fly

WHEN I WAS IN THE FIFTH GRADE I HAD A teacher who was a private pilot. He was a gruff, cranky old guy, at least to my 11-year-old brain. He was probably 45 and overworked with a classroom of kids, but those were the days when kids were durable. There was little to no coddling of the children. I think paddling had only been outlawed but a few years before I started grammar school, and I distinctly remember one teacher having a paddle in his classroom with the implied threat of its use.

Punishments were meted out regularly and fairly. Parents were involved and generally gave teachers the benefit of the doubt when it was a question between the child and the teacher as to who was telling the truth. It was not uncommon for teachers to actually hug their students. Parents didn't presume that every teacher was a child molester. On the contrary, they pretty much believed that teachers were champions, and a misbehaving child was dealt with swiftly.

I was reminded of all of this over the past weekend when a friend asked me to accompany him on a flight to Palm Springs. He's a pilot and we would be flying a little four-seater that he rents. I've known him long enough that I trusted he knew what he was doing. He has flown with several of our friends and they all survived, so I felt safe.

It helped when he informed me that he obtained his license originally at 17 and had recently completed his commercial pilot's license. That meant he had a solid decade and a half of flying experience, and the commercial license is not an easy thing to do, which definitely made me feel more comfortable with him.

We were at Santa Monica Airport on Saturday and he asked me when was the last time I was in a four-seater prop plane. I told him of the time my fifth grade teacher took a group of us kids flying. I recall the excitement of takeoff, and being allowed to "fly" the plane. Being at the controls as a child gave me such a rush and sense of empowerment that I've never forgotten.

Today he would probably not be allowed to do that and I can only imagine the types of allegations that some overly paranoid parent would make, but in those days people understood that adults were to be respected and children tolerated, at best.

The experiences of flying as a kid, both as a "pilot" and as a passenger, were some of the many events that helped make me an independent child and taught me how to act in an adult's world.

When my parents divorced, my father moved to Los Angeles from Northern California and as a boy I was regularly put on a plane and consequently I developed a sense of independence. It was a great learning experience and helped me learn how to navigate the world.

I mention this because on Sept. 10 the Friends of Santa Monica Airport are presenting a day at the airport from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on the observation deck. There will be pilots to talk to, air traffic controllers to ask questions of, and I'm sure there will be food and educational activities. It could be a great way for kids to be introduced to the joys of flying. There's more information available at www.fosmo.org.

My parents didn't shield me from the world, they pushed me out into it; granted they were in the wings if something were to go wrong, but that would usually be me not behaving correctly rather than someone attempting to kidnap me.

The goal then was to teach kids how to fly solo in this world. Parents and teachers worked hard to give kids wings, rather than to shield them from an endless parade of fears and entitlements. I am grateful today to them and that teacher who helped me learn that taking flight and being independent were good things.

How to listen to a politician

AS SUMMER DRAWS TO A CLOSE AND next year's political campaigns get down to brass tacks, you're going to be hearing a lot more from politicians seeking your vote. Given the widespread anxiety about our nation's course, you'll no doubt want to know what these candidates actually think.

So here's one word of advice on how to listen to what they tell you: Carefully.

Most successful politicians are smart, articulate, and highly skilled at parsing their words. Above all, they want to win your vote. So you can be sure they won't tell you what you don't want to hear. But this is not the same thing as telling you what you do want to hear.

I still remember, toward the end of Bill Clinton's presidency, how often Republican friends and colleagues swore to me that he had lied to them and reneged on what they remembered as ironclad promises. As it happens, I had sat in on several of those meetings, and I respectfully had to disagree. If my colleagues had really listened carefully, they'd have understood that he was not agreeing with them — he'd left himself outs and plenty of ambiguity in what he'd said. Then he'd skillfully rely on their inclination to hear what they wanted to hear.

An experienced politician is expert at reading the mood of an individual or a crowd, at asking questions that tell him something about how they feel on a given issue, and at gauging how much his listeners know about the issues and policies they're discussing. Simply by the nature of the job, politicians will often — though not always — know a great deal about the matter you're interested in, and usually they've thought through their position on it. They may sound homespun, folksy — remember, self-deprecation is an art-form among politicians — and no more sophisticated than the average person on the street, but don't be fooled. They usually know what they're talking about, are cautious when they don't know, and are adept at wording their sentences for maximum appeal. After all, they want you to agree with them.

Which means that as a voter, it's really up to you to be an attentive listener. And the more you know about the issues you care about, the better you'll be. You want to be able to understand a politician's positions and be able to sort out where you agree and disagree. Never jump to conclusions. You shouldn't hesitate to ask questions in order to gain clarity, or to push for clear, concise answers that reveal where a candidate or lawmaker really stands.

You also want to get a sense of what kind of listener he or she is. Is his mind made up? Is she prepared to listen to what you have to say, or does she just want to talk at you? Is he flexible on the issues you care about, and if so, how flexible? The issues that our political leaders confront every day are so complex that sometimes they're searching for an answer and are prepared to listen to what you think — especially if it's clear you know what you're talking about.

YOU WANT TO BE ABLE TO UNDERSTAND A POLITICIAN'S POSITIONS AND BE ABLE TO SORT OUT WHERE YOU AGREE AND DISAGREE. NEVER JUMP TO CONCLUSIONS.

On the other hand, sometimes a politician's position is already settled, whether through conviction, analysis, orders from political leaders, or political expediency. If that's the case, try to get a sense of how he or she arrived at that position — it will tell you something about the kind of effort he or she will make as a lawmaker.

The point is that as a voter, you should never suspend your critical judgment when dealing with politicians. Give them a fair hearing, but bone up on the issues, know what you'd like to hear and what you don't want to hear … and then listen with your mind as well as your ears. It's the only way I know to judge what a politician has to say — and to avoid being disappointed when it turns out that you didn't actually hear what you thought you did.

Preparing for the bag ban

The city's ban on single-use plastic bags, which find their way into oceans and streams, goes into effect Sept. 1. People who do not bring reusable bags to grocery stores and other markets will have to pay 10 cents for a paper bag.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Are you prepared for the bag ban? If so, where did you get your bags and how much did you pay for them? If not, why not?

Los Angeles disaster plan to be audited after Irene

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES In the wake of the devastation wrought by Hurricane Irene, City Controller Wendy Greuel announced she would like to review how prepared Los Angeles is for natural disasters.

Greuel said she will audit the city's emergency disaster plans to ensure the millions of people who work and live in Los Angeles are safe.

Hundreds of thousands of people remained without power this week following the Category 1 hurricane that washed over parts of the Mid-Atlantic region.

"The destruction and wreckage along the East Coast reminds us that natural disasters, including earthquakes, flash floods and fires can hit at any time and ravage communities," Greuel said in a statement.

In 2008 the city controller's office found the city lacks an overall strategic plan to respond to natural disasters including earthquakes. Greuel said her audit will look at the progress the city has made since then.

While the area's response to wildfires has been recognized as a model of cooperation, that audit found many of its other emergency plans were outdated. Auditors reviewed 26 department plans and found that 60 percent had not been updated in three years.

At the time, Jim Featherstone, general manager for the Emergency Management Department, agreed with many of the audit's findings and said he was working to improve citywide coordination.

Former L.A. prosecutor backs ending death penalty

DON THOMPSON
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO A former Los Angeles County district attorney joined an effort to end California's death penalty Monday, backing an initiative proposed for the November 2012 ballot that would replace capital punishment with life prison terms.

"The death penalty in California is broken and it is unfixable," Gil Garcetti said at a news conference held to release details of the proposed ballot measure. "It is more likely that the convicted murderer will die in prison before execution is imposed."

A recent study estimated the state spends $184 million annually on death penalty cases and incarceration above what it would cost to convert the terms to life behind bars. The former prosecutor said the ballot measure would devote $100 million over three years to law enforcement from money the state could save by ending capital punishment.

The ballot measure would also require murderers to work in prison, with their earnings going into a victim compensation fund, said Jeanne Woodford, a former San Quentin State Prison warden.

Woodford, also a former California corrections secretary, now is executive director of Death Penalty Focus, which works to eliminate executions.

Garcetti is one of 104 law enforcement officials who signed a support letter after lawmakers last week shelved a bill by Sen. Loni Hancock, D-Berkeley, that would have put a similar initiative on next year's ballot. Hancock's bill failed to get enough votes to clear the Assembly Appropriations Committee.

Garcetti served two terms as top prosecutor in the state's most populous county before he was defeated in 2000.

Opponents say California's capital punishment system should be maintained but can be made more efficient and less costly.

Proponents must get approval from the attorney general and secretary of state before they can begin gathering signatures.

Campaign consultant Steve Smith said organizers began soliciting financial support only last week, after Hancock's bill was shelved. He said he is confident proponents can raise the $1.5 million or so they would need to get enough signatures to put the measure on the ballot.

into the median lane. The cyclist, who was reportedly traveling at 25 mph, crashed into the hood of the car and went flying into the northbound traffic lane.

The cyclist was transported to a local hospital, where he was treated for minor injuries and released.

"My back is killing me, my leg is killing me," the 46-year-old cyclist can be heard saying in a video he posted on YouTube and is available at bikesidela.org, a bicycle blog. On the biker blog, the author of a post said the incident is a "clear cut case of Dr. Christopher Thompson road rage."

Thompson was sentenced in January to five years in prison for assaulting two cyclists by slamming on his car brakes after a confrontation on a narrow Brentwood road.

In the video, Adams is heard saying, "You're lucky you're alive right now," and "He ran into me."

The video, which shows Adams' grey car parked in a center turn lane at an angle with the victim's bicycle lying next to it, lasts for roughly 9 minutes and features the driver and several bystanders, some of whom confront Adams and challenge him to a fight.

"You can't attack somebody and go over a double yellow line," one bystander shouts.

Adams tells the injured bicyclist, who is sitting on the adjacent sidewalk, "Don't you come after me ever again. You're lucky you're alive right now."

Barnard Way, a designated bike route, is a relatively low-speed stretch of road that winds along the scenic coastline.

As of last month, there have been 70 bicycle accidents in Santa Monica so far this year, 29 of which were the fault of the motorist, police said.

The City Council last week endorsed a draft Bicycle Action Plan which includes more designated bike lanes and education programs to encourage biking while also making it safer for all those on the road.

Lee, the only defensive specialist returning this season, is taking it upon herself to push the defense.

"I have to step up my game," she said. "Be more of a leader."

Coach Aaron Benditson will look to her to set the tone for the defensive unit.

As the start of the season nears, all of the returners say they are up to the task of a return visit to the postseason.

"Our goal is to win a conference championship," Benditson said.

Benditson is going into his seventh year as women's soccer head coach. He and his staff have laid a solid foundation for his team, now it's just a matter of getting the job done.

Benditson has high expectations for his squad, seeing that they are more experienced this year and already have a good fitness regimen going.

"It took us a quarter of a season for the girls to get physically fit," said Benditson "Were starting from a lot higher standard this year."

because of the weak supply versus the high demand to live in Santa Monica.

"A lot of buyers are still on the fence," Manakova said. "They are asking themselves if they should wait longer."

She said that complacency may bite perspective buyers twice. First, if they wait, prices may continue to rise forcing them to pay a higher price to buy in Santa Monica. Second, when the current historically low mortgage rates go up they may end up paying more in the long run. Her advice to buyers is to look for something that suits their needs and take the plunge.

"If we haven't hit the bottom, we're very close," she said.

Realtor Lidia Simon, who has a number of listings in Santa Monica, agrees with Manakova's assessment, adding that the problem is exacerbated by the fact that buyers are looking for deals while many sellers are unrealistic about what their properties are worth. Couple that with the uncertainty on Wall Street and the economy in general and it makes the market a bit more complicated.

Despite the low inventory in Santa Monica, the local market is faring much better than nearby Los Angeles, where home prices are down 11 percent from this time last year. Hopes that the recession was coming to an end in the early part of the year have given way to the reality that the economy has a ways to go before returning to the salad days of 2006-07.

A recent Associated Press survey revealed that another recession is not likely over the next 12 months, but meaningful improvement will continue to be fleeting. Economists say that high unemployment and weak consumer spending will continue to hold back any real growth well into 2012.

"There's lots of hysteria about what's going on in the stock market right now," said Simon, who is based in Malibu and Brentwood. "People are nervous."

That fear has made its way into the local market, but Simon said that she's confident Santa Monica will withstand the current worries and hopefully rebound in the coming months.

One of the few groups undeterred by the lingering economic slump are investors.

According to Realtor.com statistics, investors outnumber home buyers 3 to 1.

"While some might be reluctant to buy real estate right now, others are taking advantage of the historically low mortgage rates and home prices," said Candice Cerro, a spokesperson for Realtor.com.

A CLOSER LOOK: Safety personnel inspect the scene of a small plane crash on Monday.

Aviation Administration and the National Transportation Safety Board.

Trimborn said the plane had first attempted to land on the runway at SMO, but "something went wrong."

"We saw him attempt to land, and then try to go around," Trimborn said. "There is no cause. The NTSB and FAA have been notified and they are on their way to the scene. They will determine a probable cause, but we won't know that for many months."

That no one, including the pilot, had died in the crash was, Trimborn said, "a miracle."

The last time a plane crashed into a neighborhood in the area was approximately seven to eight years ago, Trimborn added.

The crash will likely stoke the flames of the debate surrounding the fate of the airport and the flight schools that operate there.

Santa Monica's airport has been the center of a game of tug-of-war between the FAA and City Hall, which has expressed an interest in closing down the airport in 2015.

The federal agency contends that the airport is part of a vital network of airports that would be critical in any major emergency, and cannot be shut down.

Santa Monica officials say that the FAA has no ability to dictate what happens with the airport past 2015, when a 20-year agreement with the FAA expires.

With that in mind, city officials have begun a "visioning process" for the airport, examining all options from keeping the airport as-is to shutting it down completely.

There is agitation on both sides of the issue.

A newly-formed coalition of pilots, flight instructors and mechanics called Friends of the Santa Monica Airport, or FOSMO, say that the airport brings a great deal of economic vitality to the area, and is working to change its reputation.

Residents of Sunset Park, Venice and Mar Vista protest the airport, saying that it represents a hazard not only from the possibility of a crash, but also from the noise and pollution that the planes emit.

Monday's incident has surely given the airport's opponents more ammunition.

"I'm relieved to hear that no one died in the accident," said Zina Josephs, a representative of the neighborhood group Friends of Sunset Park. "Unfortunately, when a runway is surrounded by homes, as the Santa Monica Airport's runway is, there is no safe emergency landing if a plane loses power."

SAFE: RN Rubina Andonian administers a vaccination at the Santa Monica UCLA Medical Center. According to the school district, hundreds of students have not received the Tdap vaccine.

VACCINE

prompting lawmakers to pass Senate Bill 354, which made it law for every student entering grades seven through 12 to prove that they've received the Tdap vaccine since they turned 7.

That shot covers tetanus, diphtheria and pertussis. The last is more commonly known as whooping cough.

According to district Nurse Coordinator Lora Morn, approximately 400 students at Santa Monica High School and 20 at Lincoln Middle School have not yet received their shots.

Malibu High had 500 uncovered students as of last week, but that number may have gone down as a result of a mobile van from Westside Family Clinic that rolled into the school to administer shots for the two days of registration.

It's unclear how many students that attend John Adams Middle School or Olympic High School have not yet gotten the vaccine.

The Venice Family Clinic, which serves much of the Westside, reported a major increase in the number of vaccines given out compared to previous years.

"We haven't seen as outrageously busy a rush as we thought we might, but we've definitely increased numbers," said Nursing Supervisor Darcy Miller.

Between Aug. 1 and Aug. 29, 2011, the clinic immunized 544 kids. That's compared to 82 in the same time period in 2010.

The school district encouraged students to get the shot by threatening to withhold the schedules for students who could not produce documentation of having received the vaccine, or did not get a medical or "personal belief" exemption.

That policy has been suspended because the district decided to give students a 30-day extension, Morn said.

Legislators passed a second law, SB 614, that allowed school districts to give students that extra flexibility to get the shots.

"We're still requesting that all kids get the vaccine before the first day of school," Morn said.

According to Dr. Michelle T. Parra, the director of Los Angeles County's immunization program, whooping cough is a cyclical disease, which saw a major upswing last year with 2,309 reported cases in the county alone.

Of those, 672 were confirmed as pertussis.

"The past year, in 2010, there were more cases than have been seen since the 1940s," Parra said.

The outbreak resulted in four fatalities, all under the age of 3 months.

The age of the victims is the main reason that the state pushed to have older students immunized, Parra said.

"That's a perfect example of an age group that are around a lot of younger kids not able to be vaccinated," Parra said. "They might have younger siblings, who are too young to be vaccinated. If the disease is going around, and there are young kids that are vulnerable, the more people vaccinated around them, the better."

Doctors call it the "cocooning" effect, she said.

As of Aug. 26, there were 1,017 reported cases of whooping cough, 192 of which have been confirmed.

At this point, it's unclear how many students opted out using either a medical or personal belief exemption.

According to figures from the county Department of Health, while less than 1 percent of Los Angeles County students exercised the personal belief exemption in 2009, those numbers are much higher in one of the eight "service planning areas" — Santa Monica's.

Service Planning Area 5, which includes Santa Monica and Malibu, reported a 6.01 percent exemption rate for pre-school age students and 8.62 percent exemption rate for kindergartners.

The next highest rate of 2.85 percent for kindergartners is in Service Planning Area 2, which lies north of Santa Monica and Malibu and includes Agoura Hills to the southwest, La Canada Flintridge to the east and the San Fernando Valley to the north.

Parents should know that they have the ability to opt their child out of the vaccine, said Kim Kovalchik-Ii, the California State director for the National Vaccine Information Center.

Kovalchik-Ii does not describe herself as against vaccines, although she would not choose to vaccinate her child again. What she wants is for parents to be fully informed.

"There are more risks to some people," Kovalchik-Ii said. "You can't just shoot everyone up and expect the same outcome."

Kovalchik-Ii tells parents that they have to take the initiative and educate themselves about the potential dangers, and benefits, of vaccines and make a decision that's right for their family.

For more information about the potential ramifications of vaccines, parents can visit www.nvic.org.

Millions of court documents heading to shredder

MICHAEL TARM
Associated Press

Wrestling with the challenges of documents in the digital age, U.S. officials are destroying millions of paper federal court records to save storage costs — and raising the ire of some historians, private detectives and others who heavily rely on the files.

The U.S. National Archives and Records Administration says at least 10 million bankruptcy case files and several million district court files from 1970 through 1995 will be shredded, pounded to pulp and recycled. Files designated as historically valuable, however, will be kept in storage.

Federal archivists spent years consulting legal scholars, historians and others about which files to purge after realizing that sorting and digitizing just the bankruptcy cases would cost tens of millions of dollars. None of the civil or criminal cases up for destruction went to trial, and docket sheets that list basic information such as names of defendants and plaintiffs will be saved from each case.

Such reassurances haven't allayed concerns of some of those whose work relies on the paper documents.

Cornell Law School professor Theodore Eisenberg said it's precisely the mundane, every day records with no clear historical significance that, when looked at as a whole, are critical to establishing legal trends upon which court policy is often based.

"Something really important will be lost here," said Eisenberg, a former clerk at the U.S. Supreme Court for the late Justice Earl Warren. "We would lose any ability to assess trends over time. This is not just a matter of history, it is a matter of influencing basic policy today."

Christina Boyd, who teaches public law at the University at Buffalo, said only about 2 percent of federal court cases ever make it to trial and little research has been done to explain why that percentage dropped from about 12 percent in the 1960s. One question, she said, is whether federal judges began pushing settlements in the 1970s and 1980s as public aide to indigents dramatically increased, possibly to the advantage of corporations or other institutions being sued by the individuals.

"This was a crucial period in legal history," she said. "We need to understand the trends — and that means looking at files that could be going away."

Marvin Kabakoff, a senior analyst with the NARA who himself holds a Ph.D. in history, told The Associated Press on Thursday that he sympathizes and ideally would want all the records digitized, "but keeping everything is just not realistic." He said it would be "outrageously expensive" and since some documents are mashed or stapled together, merely sorting through the millions of papers would be a gargantuan, labor-intensive task.

By the end of the year, 140,000 boxes of civil case files — out of a total of around 270,000 from the 25-year period — are expected to be destroyed, Kabakoff said. Starting next year, about 390,000 of the 400,000 total boxes of bankruptcy case files from the same period will be destroyed and a far smaller number of criminal case files — about 40,000 boxes — would be destroyed later.

Preparing for this first-of-its-kind destruction, federal archivists decided to keep thousands of records deemed historically relevant or that fell into other categories. With the civil files, for instance, authorities decided to save about 110,000 boxes, including all civil rights or government corruption files regardless of whether those cases went to trial.

Federal documents meticulously detail which files should be saved, including those related to the shooting down of Korean Air Lines Flight 007 by a Soviet jet fighters in 1983 and files on young men accused of trying to evade the Vietnam War draft.

"We tried to be very careful about what we are destroying," Kabakoff said

The issue came to the fore as the federal court system, like other government entities, struggled to cut costs. The pre-1995 files posed a particular challenge because they were created before nearly all court documents were kept electronically. Comparatively, few paper-only documents were created after 1995.

Also, 1970 to 1995 was a period of explosive growth in litigation, creating mountains of paperwork that could only be stored in boxes at courthouses or federal archive centers with dwindling space.

Historians argue that it is impossible to say what records will be historically significant in 10, 50 or 100 years, since a file deemed inconsequential today might one day shed light on someone who emerges to prominence, from a presidential candidate to a murder suspect.

LEGEND

DRY -- each location is graded on an A – F scale based on bacterial pollution levels present in the surf zone
WET -- grades for days of recorded rainfall and the following 3 days
ns -- no sample taken

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card℠ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

SDSU gives Fisher contract extension

BERNIE WILSON
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO San Diego State coach Steve Fisher has received a four-year contract extension and long-time assistant Brian Dutcher has been designated as his eventual replacement.

The school announced the deal Monday. It could keep Fisher at SDSU through the 2014-15 season, if he wants to serve it out.

The 66-year-old Fisher has turned what had been a sad-sack program into a consistent winner. The Aztecs had a breakthrough season in 2010-11. They set a school record by going 34-3, secured their first two wins ever in the NCAA tournament and were ranked in The Associated Press Top 25 for the first time.

Fisher will get a $150,000 raise next season, to $800,000. The contract provides for escalators after that.

The Aztecs reached the West regionals before losing to eventual national champion Connecticut. It was their sixth straight 20-win season, and seventh in 12 years under Fisher.

Dutcher has been with Fisher since 1988 at Michigan.

Fisher said Dutcher has been approached several times by other schools about head coaching jobs, but that he's talked his assistant out of leaving.

"To draw me away from this would have to be something spectacular," Dutcher said.

"In my mind, Brian is more important than the extension of my contract," Fisher said.

Fisher will have a big job trying to keep the Aztecs playing at a high level after losing four starters. Point guard D.J. Gay and forwards Malcolm Thomas and Billy White were seniors, and star sophomore forward Kawhi Leonard left for the NBA draft. Additionally, center Brian Carlwell was denied a sixth year of eligibility by the NCAA.

"I'm not looking to be pushed out the door or run out the door anytime soon," said Fisher, who had a cancer scare a few years ago. "Who knows? I used to operate on a handshake. Now, everyone has a contract. I do like that I have a contract. Right now I'm very healthy. Given the success we've had recently, I'm very excited about what the program has done and what we continue to do."

You also have an unusual amount of creativity and the ability to transform emotional situations. If you are attached, your partner could be whimsical and at times spontaneous. If you are single, you'll meet someone quite interesting this year. Curb a tendency to be too jealous or possessive. You could be pushing suitors away. LIBRA helps you make money.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Once hired, almost no federal employee ever leaves. Turnover is so slight that, among the typical causes for workers leaving, "death by natural causes" is more likely the reason than "fired for poor job performance." According to a July USA Today report, the federal rate of termination for poor performance is less than one-fifth the private sector's, and the annual retention rate for all federal employees was 99.4 percent (and for white collar and upper-income workers, more than 99.8 percent). Government defenders said the numbers reflect excellence in initial recruitment.

■ Bats' Rights: In January, Alison Murray purchased her first-ever home, in Aberdeen, Scotland, but was informed in August that she has to relocate, temporarily, because the house has become infested with bats, which cannot be disturbed, under Scottish and European law, once they settle in. Conservation officials advised her that she could probably move back in November, when the bats leave to hibernate.

■ In June, the Five Guys Burger and Fries restaurant in White Plains, N.Y., was robbed by five guys (well, actually, four guys and a woman). One of the guys worked at Five Guys. All five "guys" were arrested.
