THE FIRES ARE BAD ISSUE

Issues surround locality of vendors

Jonathan Kalan news@smdp.com

LOCAL LINKS: Most of the non-fresh produce vendors who call the Main Street Farmers' Market home are not based in the shopping district.

BY MELODY HANATANI
Daily Press Staff Writer

MAIN STREET With the launch of a citywide campaign this year to urge consumers to buy from local businesses, one merchant association is hoping the neighborhood Santa Monica Farmers' Market also follows the same philosophy.

On the list of about a dozen non-agricultural vendors at the Main Street Farmers' Market, selling everything from French crepes to tamales to Louisiana hotlinks — is one participant — Groundworks — who also maintains a business on the commercial corridor where the weekly street fair is located.

Gary Gordon, the executive director of the Main Street Business Improvement Association, said that there used to be a practice that if a Main Street restaurant wanted to participate in the prepared foods section of the farmers' market, it would get in.

"Over time that practice seemed to have evaporated," he said.

The situation first arose about two years ago when Euphoria Loves Rawvolution inquired about becoming involved but was initially turned away because organizers were in the middle of rewriting rules for the entire organization and drafting a new request for proposals (RFP) document that included a scoring system for applicants,

Local plastic surgeon is the face of service

BY EMMA TROTTER
Special to the Daily Press

MID-CITY It's been a lifetime of service for Santa Monica plastic surgeon Robert Amonic.

"I have always thought it's very important to give things back to the community," he said. "It's just something you just do — it's not even optional."

Amonic's latest chance to serve comes with his election to the position of chairman of the board of directors of Red Cross of Santa Monica.

John Pacheco, branch CEO, said it was "rare" for someone who has only been on the board for a few years, like Amonic, to be elected chairman.

"He's been involved in just about everything," Pacheco said, citing fundraising, blood services, disaster preparedness and youth services. "He's a real asset to the community. Take what you expect a board member to do, go six steps ahead and there's Rob Amonic out there doing it."

Amonic said he puts in so much time and energy because of his passion for the non-profit's mission.

"The Red Cross is one of the most under-appreciated organizations in the U.S.," he said. "No one acknowledges it until they need it."

Whether it's an earthquake, a fire or a terrorist attack, Amonic continued, the Red Cross wants to be ready.

Amonic, who lives with his family in Brentwood, previously served on the Saint John's Health Center board of directors, which oversees the daily operations of the hospital. For more than 20 years, he has been a trustee of the hospital's foundation, which raises money to cover expenses for more far-reaching projects.

The foundation's most recent achievement is helping to raise the $530 million required to repair damage done by the Northridge Earthquake in 1994. The Keck Diagnostic and Treatment Center was just completed.

Wearing several hats has long been a part of Amonic's

'Guiding Light' wins one more Daytime Emmy

BETH HARRIS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES "Guiding Light" earned one of its last trophies at the Daytime Emmys on Sunday night before it leaves the air after 72 years.

Jeff Branson, who plays Shayne Lewis on the CBS soap, tied for supporting actor in the first award presented on the live CW telecast.

"This is so bittersweet," Branson said backstage.

He tied with Vincent Irizarry of ABC's "All My Children," who got his soap start on "Guiding Light" in the early 1980s.

"I have such affection for that show. I'm grateful to have had the opporutnity to be a part of television history," Irizarry said backstage. "What other medium is producing product that lasts 72 years? It has entertained not only generations, but employed generations of people."

Singing, dancing, comedy and a touch of pathos set against the glitzy backdrop of a historic theatre were part of the 36th annual Daytime Emmys in an attempt to lure an eroding audience for award shows.

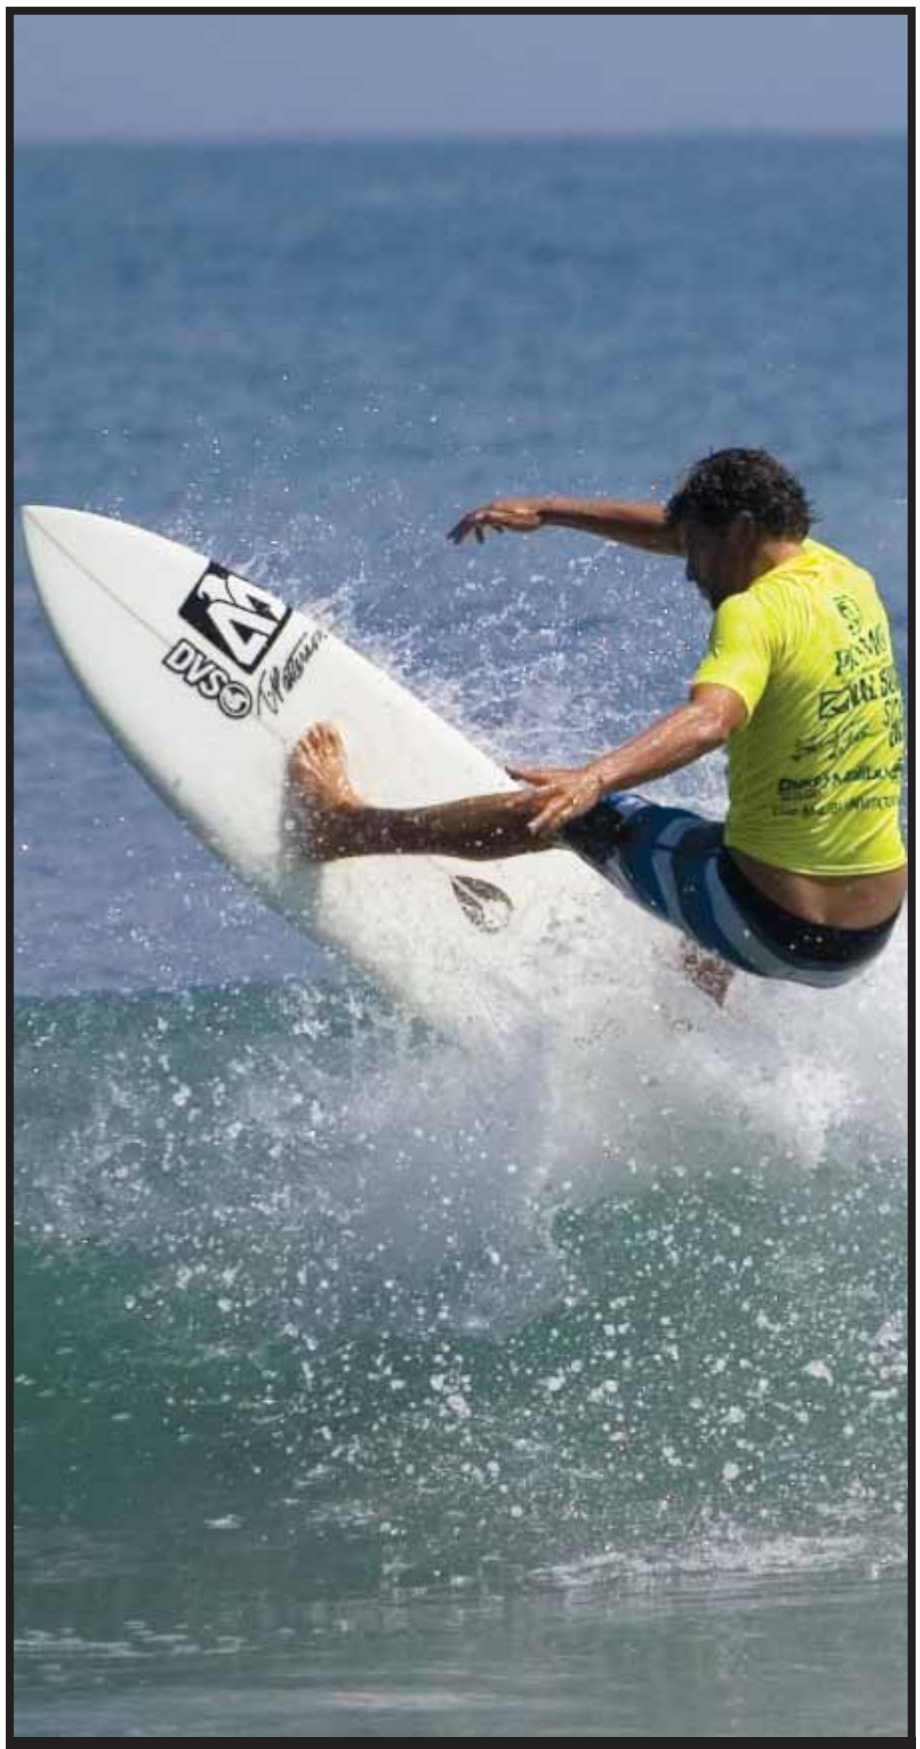

Sunday's broadcast relocated to the Orpheum Theatre in Downtown Los Angeles this year, leaving its recent home at Hollywood's Kodak Theatre. Opened in 1926, the venue has hosted everyone from Judy Garland and Jack Benny to Duke Ellington and Stevie Wonder.

"It's a smaller venue, which has that real glamorous look," executive producer David McKenzie said. "We want to call attention to the fact that downtown has these incredible theaters. I hope to restore a lot of the glamour to the awards and make it a really memorable event."

Early arrivals in sweltering heat on the red carpet included Big Bird and Susan Lucci of "All My Children" in a bejeweled coral gown. Stacy Haiduck of "The Young and the Restless" created a stir by carrying a stuffed cat, which she dressed up with a black ribbon and sparkling brooch. The cat is a favorite prop of her mentally unstable character Mary Jane Benson on the CBS soap.

Honoring everything from soaps to talk shows to game shows, it's the first time the awards weren't on one of the major three networks.

"We've tried to make it very fast-moving this year so it doesn't seem like two hours," McKenzie said.

Wildfire threatens homes

CHRISTOPHER WEBER AND RAQUEL MARIA DILLON
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES Wildfire threatened 12,000 suburban homes and rained ash on cars as far away as Downtown Los Angeles on Sunday, spreading in all directions in hot, dry conditions. Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger urged those in the fire's path to listen to authorities and get out.

Firefighters trained their attention on the blaze's fast-moving northern front as more evacuations were ordered in the Los Angeles suburbs.

While thousands have fled, two people who tried to ride out the firestorm in a backyard hot tub were critically burned. The pair in Big Tujunga Canyon, on the southwestern edge of the fire, "completely underestimated the fire" and the hot tub provided "no protection whatsoever," Sheriff's spokesman Steve Whitmore said Sunday.

The two individuals made their way to firefighters and were airlifted out by a sheriff's rescue helicopter. They received adequate notification to evacuate from deputies but decided to stay, Whitmore said.

One of the two was treated and released and the other remained hospitalized in stable condition. A third person was burned Saturday in an evacuation area along Highway 2 near Mount Wilson, officials said. Details of that injury were not immediately known.

"There were people that did not listen, and there were three people that got burned and got critically injured because they did not listen," Schwarzenegger said at a news conference at the fire command post.

The blaze was only about 5 percent contained and had scorched 55 square miles in the Angeles National Forest. Mandatory evacuations were in effect for neighborhoods in Glendale, Pasadena and other cities and towns north of Los Angeles. Officials said air quality in parts of the foothills bordered on hazardous.

What about Mary Jo?

Editor:

While many are mourning the passing of Sen. Teddy Kennedy, let us not forget Mary Jo Kopechne, who was only 28 when she drowned after Kennedy drove the car they were riding in off a bridge while returning from a party on Chappaquiddick Island 40 years ago.

Perhaps flags around the country can remain at half-staff in memory of Miss Kopechne.

Speeding toward Expo Line's proposed maintenance yard

THE INK WAS BARELY DRY ON LAST Monday's Daily Press with my column about pending changes in maximum speed limits on a number of city streets when my phone started ringing.

Callers reported city crews were already changing speed limit signs on Wilshire Boulevard from 35 mph to 30 mph even though the City Council hadn't approved speed limit changes.

I called Sam Morrisey, City Hall's principal transportation engineer, who confirmed that city crews were indeed installing new signage on Wilshire Boulevard and other streets including Ocean Park Boulevard (omitted from last week's list) east of 23rd Street where the maximum allowable speed would "officially" drop from 40 mph to 35 mph with council's approval.

Morrisey said the City Council had approved a first reading of the ordinance, so assuming they will approve new speed limits at their next meeting on Sept. 8, "We went ahead and began changing signs. By changing signs now, we're giving motorists a 'heads up' that the speed limits will change."

Most of the recommended speed changes are 5 mph less than the current limits but two Downtown streets will have 5 mph higher limits than current limits. Sgt. Larry Horn, the Santa Monica Police Department's lead officer on traffic enforcement, told me the new limits won't be enforced until 30-days after City Council approves the new speed limits — meaning early October.

Morrisey admits that he authorized the replacement of signs. While I think he jumped the gun by ordering the new signage while new speed limits were pending, Sgt. Horn thought it was good that the motoring public be given as much advance warning as possible.

But, I'm disturbed that a city employee would take it upon himself to repost speed limits when the governing body of the city has not approved those limits. While I agree that council will probably approve the changes, it's possible some members might not approve all of staff's recommendations, thus creating motorist confusion especially if reinstallation of recently changed signage on one or more thoroughfares is necessary.

EVERYONE WANTS EXPO, NOBODY WANTS DIRT

The proposed maintenance facility for the Exposition Light Rail Phase 2 expansion into Santa Monica still is generating a lot of heat. The Metropolitan Transportation Authority (MTA) is specifying the Verizon property — a 7-acre industrial property adjacent to Stewart Street and Exposition Boulevard — for its Expo Light Rail train storage and maintenance yard.

Pico Neighborhood resident (and school board member) Oscar de la Torre wrote a letter to all the local media a few weeks ago. Tossing around terms such as "toxic triangle" and "environmental injustice" as only Oscar can, he laid out a case that City Hall and the MTA are discriminating against the neighborhood by asking residents to "shoulder the burden" by accepting another noisy, pollution-generating facility in the Pico neighborhood.

He wrote that the proposed rail yard would be in addition to negative environmental impacts originating from the nearby I-10 Freeway, a recycling center and two solid waste facilities in the immediate area.

While I share de la Torre's concerns about noise, chemicals and other factors that may be harmful to the local environment, a lot of people should have seen this coming long ago.

Expo's maintenance yard along with other more serious impacts -— including exacerbation of traffic problems and public safety due to trains running down the middle of Colorado Avenue -— were ignored and glossed over by promises of an "exciting new era in transportation" and a "solution to traffic problems" by transit cheerleaders, City Hall bureaucrats and local politicians. But now, the realities are beginning to settle in.

The January, 2009 Draft Environmental Impact Report drafted by the Expo Construction Authority and approved a couple months ago by the governing MTA Board of Directors noted that the Verizon site was the obvious choice after extensive and lengthy analysis of numerous other locations that were deemed inadequate.

Because of the growing number of complaints about a rail yard across the street from residences, politicians and city staff are grasping at straws to deflect complaints and placate the public. One proposal is to shift part of the facility across Stewart Street and further away from homes.

Another flawed scheme suggests using two square city blocks bounded by Colorado, Olympic Boulevard, Ninth and 11th streets as a possible site. Numerous other locations along the Olympic/Colorado corridor have also been reviewed but all have suitability problems including security, access, size, location or closeness to residences.

I'd bet the family Prius that residents near these other potential sites, like de la Torre, will also be screaming about their own "environmental injustice" if the yard is relocated to their neighborhoods. I predict Expo's maintenance yard will be built on the Verizon property. City Hall needs to stop chasing its tail and start spending its resources on ways to mitigate its noise and pollution.

Guns don't need to be at town hall meetings

With each passing moment, the nation grows more polarized as Washington's partisan bickering becomes ever more combative. Nowhere is this more evident than with the health care debate. It has become a touchstone for discontent over the Obama administration's aggressive attempts to push through health care reform, the government's out-of-control spending, the loss of civil liberties and the fact that government leaders are not listening. Understandably, many Americans are very frustrated.

This frustration has spawned lively — and often angry — protests at town hall meetings across the country, marked by Americans wielding protest signs and demanding to be heard. According to the Associated Press, "Many of those raising their voices and fists at the [health care] town halls have never been politically active."

Although this is a healthy sign of democracy in action, critics have denounced the protesters for their disruptive behavior and likened them to angry mobs. However, the First Amendment does not require civility — merely free speech, and whether we like it or not, yelling and offensive signs are part of that.

What is not healthy and is, in fact, downright stupid are the handfuls of protesters who have recently taken to carrying guns along with them to these free speech rallies. For example, one man showed up at a rally in Portsmouth, N.H., with a protest sign and a loaded handgun strapped to his thigh. In Phoenix, Ariz., about a dozen people brought guns to a health-care rally. One man actually had an AR-15 assault rifle slung over his shoulder. When asked why he had guns with him, the man reportedly responded, "Because I can do it. In Arizona, I still have some freedoms left."

Here's the bottom line: there are basically only two reasons for carrying a gun in America — to protect yourself or to go hunting. But there is no valid reason for carrying a gun to these town hall meetings. It will only increase the police presence. And as I've said many times before, there is no way the average citizen armed with a gun can challenge the modern police officer who is armed to the teeth with even bigger guns, assault vehicles, battering rams, ballistic shields, "flashbang" grenades, smoke grenades, pepper spray and tear gas, to name just some of local law enforcement's arsenal.

However, this does not mean that we, as citizens, are powerless. Our power rests in our ability to protest and foment change. As the Associated Press recently reported, "The emerging protest movement is almost the mirror image of the grass-roots campaign that helped sweep Obama into office by pulling in people who'd never been politically active."

Our power also rests in our ability to speak truth to power — even shout truth to power. People have a right to shout. And they have a right to be extremist in their speech.

Martin Luther King Jr. is a case in point. Although he advocated nonviolent change, King was often labeled an extremist. To many Americans, King's arguments and protests for equality were seen as threatening. Thus, calling someone extremist is a relative value. It depends on who's doing the labeling.

This brings me back to the gun-toting protesters at the health care rallies. It's time for cooler heads to prevail. The frustration level in this country is already at an all-time high. All it will take is one stupid, violent act for these town halls to be closed down by the government. And that will mean the destruction of free speech. That's why the gun-toting has to stop.

We certainly don't want a handful of foolish people to destroy something that up to this point has been very healthy for our democracy. After all, the democratic process works best when critical discourse is allowed. That's why the First Amendment is so important. It works as a steam valve, allowing radicals to blow off steam and air their views. This facilitates against radicals going underground and becoming terrorists.

Democracy can only survive by active participation of its citizenry. Lest we forget, the Constitution opens with those three beautiful words "we the people," and we must do all we can to protect the rights of "we the people" to express themselves freely. Thus, whether or not you agree with the behavior at these town hall meetings, at least these protesters have taken the time to turn their televisions off, step outside their houses and get active in the governmental process.

The Q Line

Road work

A pilot project that converted a stretch of Ocean Park Boulevard from four lanes to two is currently being studied by city officials. Some say the new configuration helps keep pedestrians safe while others believe it creates more traffic.

So this week's Q-Line question asks:

Do you think Ocean Park Boulevard should be kept two lanes or should it be restored to four?

Call (310) 285-8106 before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press.

KNOW BEFORE YOU GO

"Know Before You Go" is a weekly update on construction projects throughout Santa Monica.

Annual Tree Trimming Project

Construction is underway at 18th Street at San Vicente and Wilshire boulevards through Aug. 24. City trees will be trimmed at various locations. For the address and location please visit the KBUG Web site (www.knowB4ugo.smgov.net). The annual tree trimming schedule is subject to change without notice due to inclement weather, emergencies, community events, budget conditions, street repairs or other public improvements. Residences and businesses will be notified in advance of tree trimming operations, blocks will also be posted with no parking signs.

Alley Project

Starting Aug. 17 through Aug. 24 the Street Maintenance Division will be resurfacing alley ways with asphalt at the following locations: 1000 block of Cedar and Pearl streets and the 2300 block of 10th and 11th streets. The alley will be closed (24 hours) during construction. Daily work start time will be 7 a.m. till 4:30 p.m. The "no parking" signs will not be enforced for street cleaning or permits at this location. We ask that you please observe all construction signs. If possible, please park your vehicles on the streets during construction.

Big Blue Bus Campus Expansion (1620 Sixth St.)

No public parking along the eastside of Sixth Street (south of Colorado Avenue) until Aug. 25, 2009. No parking along the west sidewalk of Seventh Street between Colorado Avenue and Olympic Boulevard until March 2010. No parking along and no pedestrian access to south sidewalk of Colorado Avenue, between Sixth and Seventh streets.

Charnock Well Field Restoration Project

Construction is under way to improve the water disinfection and water softening processes at the Santa Monica Water Treatment Plant, 1228 S. Bundy Dr., Los Angeles for the City of Santa Monica, Charnock Well Field Restoration Project. The work, which will include some demolition of existing equipment and facilities, is expected to take about one year to complete.

Euclid Court Project

Grinding, concrete gutter and asphalt paving is under way in the 1800 and 1900 block of Euclid Court. Parking enforcement and other public safety agencies have been notified. Please follow posted detour signs and flagmen's direction to ensure your safety.

Federally Funded Street Resurfacing Project no. 5

Construction is underway through Sept. 11. Please follow flagmen's direction to ensure your safety.

Parking Structures 1-6 Facade Improvement Project

Starting July 6-14, all six parking structures counting signs on Second and Fourth streets will be replaced. There will be a period of 10 days when there will be no sign displaying the number of available parking spaces in garages 1 through 6. The City is switching to a new software system which will operate the new signs.

Street and Park Lighting Project

Construction is currently under way at 12th to 17th streets between Georgina and Montana avenues. Some parking spaces will be temporarily lost and alleys may be briefly closed at one end

MOTHER'S MILK: It is generally acknowledged within the medical community that breast milk is the ideal first food for babies, though modern formula brands can get the job done, too. Many companies now make organic baby formula, a sure way to avoid chemicals.

Breast milk vs. formula

Dear EarthTalk

What are the pros and cons of feeding babies formula versus breast milk? And if I purchase formula, should I spend the extra money on the organic variety?

Suzy W.
via e-mail

IT IS GENERALLY ACKNOWLEDGED within the medical community that breast milk is the ideal first food for babies, though modern formula brands can get the job done, too. Human breast milk naturally contains the vitamins and minerals a newborn requires. According to the website KidsHealth.org, breastfed infants have less difficulty with digestion than their formula-fed counterparts. And since breast milk is easily digested, breastfed babies have fewer incidences of diarrhea or constipation.

Also, researchers have found that infants fed with human breast milk have lower rates of hospital admissions, ear infections, diarrhea, rashes and allergies than bottle-fed babies. Meanwhile, a raft of studies suggest that infants who are fed breast milk may have lower incidences of asthma, diabetes, obesity and other health problems later on in life.

"Human milk is made for human infants, and it meets all their specific nutrient needs," says Ruth Lawrence, M.D., spokeswoman for the American Academy of Pediatrics and professor of pediatrics and obstetrics at the University of Rochester School of Medicine in New York. "We've known for years that the death rates in Third World countries are lower among breast-fed babies," she adds. "Breast-fed babies are healthier and have fewer infections than formula-fed babies."

Another related upside to breast milk is cost savings—both for families and the larger health care system. Mothers who can't or choose not to breast feed end up spending hundreds if not thousands of dollars per year on formula, and higher incidences of illness and disease down the road means higher costs for all.

One concern with breast feeding is that toxins present in mom's bloodstream can make their way into baby. But a 2007 study by Ohio State and Johns Hopkins University researchers found that levels of chemicals in breast milk were far below U.S. Environmental Protection Agency maximum acceptable levels for even drinking water, and that indoor air in typical American homes contains as much as 135 times as many contaminants as mother's milk. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control maintains that the benefits of breastfeeding far outweigh any chemical exposure risks. "To date, effects on the nursing infant have been seen only where the mother herself was clinically ill from a toxic exposure," reports the agency.

Of course, not all mothers are able to breastfeed, and in such cases formula can be a healthy alternative. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration regulates all baby formulas to ensure purity and that they meet nutritional requirements. Parents should know, however, that they may not be avoiding chemical exposure by opting for formula. Non-organic formula can contain the same or higher amounts of chemical residues left over from its raw materials. One way around this is to buy organic formula. Leading makers include Nature's One, Earth's Best and Bright Beginnings. Enfamil and Similac also now offer organic varieties.

Sustainability and the bottom line

AS A NEW-TO-TOWN RESIDENT, I HAVE found fewer things more refreshing than the weather. (I came from Fresno, in the Central Valley of California, with averages topping 100 degrees during the summer months.)

That said, it is amazing to find that the issues surrounding environmental sustainability are woven into the framework of this place. A local store owner said it best when he said that Santa Monica is a progressive flagship city in many ways. Sure, I may be biased now to this wonderful beach town, but I have taken notice of the ambitious goals of City Hall when it comes to making business and residential practices more environmentally friendly. The advocacy of it has worked on me; I found out about Sustainable Works when walking into a store called The Green Life on Main Street. Picking up a card that boasted "Sustainable Works: Environmental Education and Action," I decided to investigate further.

Sustainable Works is a non-profit environmental education organization, a project of Community Partners. They are funded by the City of Santa Monica's Sustainable City Plan, their program participants, grants and donations and from in-kind services from Santa Monica College.

From programs to workshops, I could go on for days about the organization. Trust me, the long-winded writer in me, along with the eager reporter of all things environmentally-conscious, is even tempted to. The part I want to focus on is the Sustainable Works Green Business Certification program.

What makes this program certifiably of note is the way that City Hall seems to have found a way to entice businesses to volunteer to implement actions that are good for the environment. How does the program do that? It asks agribusinesses to become more sustainability minded in exchange for the chance to help their bottom line through inclusion in media and advertising exposure. One look into a window baring a GBC logo, and you know that City Hall, the Convention and Visitors Bureau, the Chamber of Commerce and Sustainable Works have certified that business green. Being involved in this program means that businesses have to live up to some very energy-efficient and environmentally-friendly practices.

Great ideas, but as for what all of this means in practice to a business that has not even thought about sustainability, I can see where putting thoughts to action might get intimidating. To see how the task of greening up might feel daunting to a business, let's take a look at the hard facts: the list of what they must go through. As listed on www.smgbc.org, depending on the office/retail, hotel/motel or retail/grocers list, the requirements vary slightly. Upon first glance, it specifies program criteria for conserving resources, preventing pollution and minimizing waste. But there are several sections requiring many action steps. For example, one section for a retail or office application asks for the selection of five new or existing recycling products your business uses, while another asks that the business enact new measures such as becoming involved in a waste exchange program.

The good news is that the program has "required" and "optional" steps to be flexible as a business adapts to becoming green in practice, and the Web site itself is a great resource. It offers an "FAQ" section answering questions ranging from on-site certification to how long the certification lasts (two years). It also encourages currently proactive businesses with the news that they do give credit for practices that a business is already implementing. The certification comes with benefits, including becoming a part of a large community of businesses already involved. I was surprised when I looked at the list and saw that businesses varying from The Lobster restaurant to Universal Music Group have gone through the process.

As a consumer looking in, I can definitely see how it isn't easy at all to be green. The good news is that if you meet the requirements of five or more employees, and a minimum 500 feet of commercial retail space, you are eligible to begin the checklist, and look into a program for businesses seeking to become green if you don't know where to start.

With all of this paperwork promising greener practices, as well as the overuse of the word green itself, it is easy to turn a skeptical set of eyes to the very same practice that seems like a good step toward sustainability. What separates this program from the overwhelming flood of initiatives we've heard about? Well, this program looks to really require a business to change their practices considerably in day-to-day production. When I saw that one of the possible items on the office checklist was to change paper to a minimum of 30 percent post-consumer recycled content, I got the bigger picture in my head: that is, effectively, three sheets of original paper material saved per 10 used. The number sounds small until I thought about it this way. If I have a meeting where I am handing out proposals, and I print 500 pages using 30 percent post consumer content paper. I just saved 150 pages worth of new production for packets that may be looked at for only a few minutes. With any luck, business would be better, and they'd keep my proposal in a file. But that kind of information is certified. If you're a local business, maybe you should be certified, too.

The ecology of cell phones

BY SARAH MOSKO
Special to the Daily Press

THE LANDFILL aIt's not much of a stretch to liken America's relationship with cell phones to a once sizzling romance that ends in good-bye.

Fated love affairs typically begin with inflamed passion before reality sets in, cooling the embers enough to allow more guarded, sometimes less attractive aspects of the self to surface. Interest wanes until the love object is abandoned or replaced by an alluring new one.

Americans relate to cell phones in much the same way. An old phone, with once novel features that drew fascination, is discarded with hardly a thought when an updated model makes it seem obsolete. That consumers replace cell phones about every two years — with Californians purchasing in a single year nearly one new cell for every two state residents — makes this analogy seem less silly.

A parallel can be drawn too between the innards of a cell phone and what is revealed when one person lets another peek inside: it's not all pretty. Some nasty materials lurk behind the bright shiny casing, making cell phone disposal a knotty environmental issue, analogous to ending, with minimal damages, a relationship gone sour.

Cell phones and their rechargeable batteries are considered hazardous waste in California and prohibited from disposal in landfills or incinerators to prevent contamination of soil, water and air. The handsets are typically 40 percent plastic, 40 percent metal and 20 percent ceramics and trace materials. The circuit boards can contain arsenic and a number of toxic metals including lead, mercury, cadmium, beryllium, nickel and antimony, according to the California Department of Toxic Substances Control.

The toxicity of such metals derives from their ability to disrupt the function of vital biological molecules like proteins, enzymes and DNA. They pose additional hazards because they are persistent and accumulate in human tissues and the environment.

Improper disposal of cell phones adds to ecological degradation in other important ways. For one, the circuitry also contains gold and other valuable metals that could be recaptured.

Mining of gold is a particularly dirty business, as exposed in the January 2009 cover story of National Geographic, "The Real Price of Gold." Gold mining generates more waste per unit weight, in the form of rock and chemical effluent, than any other metal. Poisonous cyanide or mercury, often used to separate gold from rock, pollute the environs. Large mining operations create open-pit eyesores so vast they can be seen from space.

According to a 2005 report from the Washington, D.C.-based non-profit Earthworks, recycling all of the estimated 130 million cell phones retired yearly in the United States would yield 202,000 ounces of gold — double the annual yield of the notorious Zortman-Landusky mine in Montana that operated until 1998 and left a legacy of pollution requiring water treatment in perpetuity.

There's also the issue of the energy that goes into making new cells, from extracting the raw materials, like oil and metals, to manufacturing and packaging.

To make cell phone recycling convenient, retailers in California are required to take back old cell phones and rechargeable batteries for reuse, recycling or proper disposal under first-of-a-kind state laws enacted in 2006. Retailers have to accept even a phone bought elsewhere when a new one is purchased.

The federal government runs a voluntary recycling program called "Recycling Your Cell Phone. It's An Easy Call." The Web site gives both instructions for terminating service and erasing data stored on a phone along with drop-off or mail-in locations (www.epa.gov/epawaste).

And there's no lack of opportunities to donate used phones to charity. For instance, siblings Robbie and Brittany Bergquist of Massachusetts launched "Cell Phones for Soldiers" in 2004 when they were just 12 and 13 years old, selling donated phones to recyclers to purchase pre-paid calling cards for overseas soldiers. One donated phone pays for an hour of talk time.

CollectiveGood, a Virginia-based non-profit, refurbishes donated phones and sells them at low costs to developing countries. Donated phones are tax deductible and the proceeds go to the charity of your choice.

ReCellular, the nation's largest cell phone refurbishing and recycling firm, processes half a million phones monthly, keeping that many out of landfills. By utilizing smelters in developed countries only, ReCellular avoids the human and environmental exploitation reported in China and other developing nations where workers dismantle toxic e-waste without adequate protections, said company Vice President Mike Newman.

Despite all these opportunities, less than one in five cells in California is recycled: 17.7 million were sold in California in 2007 and only three million were turned in for recycling. The nation as a whole performed even worse, with a recycling rate of one in 10, per a 2007 government report. So where do the rest go?

Roughly 1/3 get stashed somewhere (e.g. in a drawer) or passed onto someone else, and about half are landfilled. CollectiveGood estimates that over 1 billion cell phones lie idle in storage or are already discarded in landfills.

Given all the environmental costs of cell phones, certainly the most eco-friendly cell is the one you already own.

But, if you decide your relationship with your cell just can't be salvaged, think back to sweeter moments you once shared and consider first donating it so someone else can have a crack at a satisfying relationship with it. If on the other hand you're sure the phone's too dysfunctional to make anyone happy, then search out a recycling location — finding one is as easy as finding a retailer that sells them.

Report: Lockerbie bomber's release tied to oil proposal

JENNIFER QUINN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON The British government allowed the Lockerbie bomber to be covered by a prisoner transfer agreement with Libya because that was in the "overwhelming interests of the United Kingdom" as a major oil deal was being negotiated, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The Sunday Times, citing leaked correspondence between Justice Secretary Jack Straw and his Scottish counterpart Kenny MacAskill, said the decision was made as "wider negotiations" with the government of Libya continued.

However, Straw dismissed as "simply untrue" any suggestion that economic considerations had an effect on the decision to release Abdel Baset al-Megrahi.

"The suggestion that at any stage there was some kind of backdoor deal done over (al-Megrahi's) transfer because of trade is simply untrue," Straw said in an interview with the BBC Sunday.

Earlier this month, MacAskill released al-Megrahi on compassionate grounds and allowed him to return to Libya. The 57-year-old had served just eight years of his life sentence, but is terminally ill with prostate cancer.

The Sunday Times reported that Straw had originally tried to keep al-Megrahi, the only person convicted of the attack on Pan Am Flight 103, from being included in the prison transfer agreement.

But five months later, the newspaper said, as a multibillion-pound (-dollar) deal between oil company BP and Libya stalled, Straw wrote MacAskill to say that there would be no exceptions.

"The wider negotiations with the Libyans are reaching a critical stage and, in the view of the overwhelming interests for the United Kingdom, I have agreed that in this instance (the prisoner transfer agreement) should be in the standard form and not mention any individual," the paper quoted Straw as writing in December 2007. It said the oil deal was ratified six weeks later.

In a statement released Sunday, Straw said it had always been made clear during negotiations with the Libyans that Scotland would have a right to veto any application under a prisoner transfer agreement — including that of al-Megrahi.

"The negotiations over a prisoner transfer agreement were part of a wider agreement for the normalization of relations with Libya as part of bringing them into the international community," Straw said, adding that the agreement's terms were "academic," as al-Megrahi was released on compassionate grounds rather than under the prisoner transfer agreement.

The statement did not comment on the authenticity of the letters published by the Sunday Times.

According to the Economist magazine, Britain has significant economic interests in Libya. Last year, British imports topped 1 billion pounds ($1.6 billion), and this year both imports and exports have been rising steadily.

The decision to release al-Megrahi sparked outrage in the United States, where most of the 270 people killed in the December 1988 attack lived. Both President Barack Obama and FBI director Robert Mueller criticized the move, and scenes of jubilation in Libya at al-Megrahi's arrival were condemned on both sides of the Atlantic. U.S. families had also opposed any move to allow al-Megrahi to serve his sentence in Libya.

On Sunday, the U.S. State Department declined to comment on the Times report, but New York Sen. Chuck Schumer called the letter "really troubling."

"If it is true that there was a quid-pro-quo — and it hasn't been proven yet — there ought to be some sanctions against Britain," the Democrat said.

The Scottish government said Sunday that it had received a letter from Nelson Mandela's foundation, which said the former South African president appreciated the decision to release al-Megrahi on compassionate grounds.

In an interview with a British newspaper, al-Megrahi — who has maintained his innocence — said he hoped there would be a public inquiry into the attack.

"In my view, it is unfair to the victims' families that this has not been heard," he told Glasgow's The Herald newspaper. "It would help them to know the truth. The truth never dies. If the U.K. guaranteed it, I would be very supportive."

Gunmen kill eight in Mexico

RICARDO GONZALEZ
Associated Press Writer

CULIACAN, Sinaloa Gunmen opened fire on a crowd of young people partying at a seaside boulevard in northwestern Mexico, killing eight people and wounding four, an official said Sunday.

A 15-year-old boy and a 17-year-old girl were among the victims of the shooting Saturday night in Navolato, a Pacific coast town in Sinaloa state, said Martin Robles, a spokesman for the state prosecutor's office. Another was the 20-year-old daughter of a local policeman.

Police had no information on a possible motive. Sinaloa, the cradle of at least two of Mexico's main drug cartels, has long been a hotspot for gang violence.

Robles said the unknown assailants fired at the crowd with AK-47 rifles as they drove by the festive crowd. The seaside boulevard is a popular weekend gathering place for young people in Navolato, which is just outside of the Sinaloan capital of Culiacan.

Gang violence has claimed at least 13,500 lives since President Felipe Calderon took office in 2006 and sent tens of thousands of troops and federal police to battle cartels across Mexico. The government attributes most of the deaths to violence between rival gangs, although cartels have also stepped up attacks on police and other officials.

Civilians often get caught in the crossfire. In the most violent cities, gangs have frequently opened fire on nighttime crowds, mostly in clubs and bars.

Meanwhile, authorities arrested four men accused of killing at least 211 people for the Juarez cartel. Most of the killings took place in Ciudad Juarez, a city across the border from El Paso, Texas, according to a statement from the joint military and police force in charge of security in the city.

The four men allegedly belong to La Linea, a gang of hit men for the Juarez cartel, the statement said. One of the men alone is accused of killing 97 people and another 87.

Security forces caught the men based on information from suspects.

ON THE WAY: The rules by which vendors are selected for Farmers' Markets are slated to change.

Farmers' Market in process of rewriting vendor rules awarding points depending on their location and where they buy ingredients.

"It turned out the association seemed to have some desire to have edits and changes to the RFP and we said let's hold off on the RFP, go forward with (rewriting) the rules, and let (Euphoria) in," Jodi Low, the organizer for the Sunday market, said.

The restaurant remained for three months, withdrawing after experiencing difficulty in simultaneously managing a satellite location.

Two years later, Gordon said he has yet to see the new RFP.

While the selection of the non-agricultural vendors has long been an issue for Gordon, he said it recently arose again following discussions about the new Buy Local campaign, which urges consumers to keep their dollars in the Santa Monica economy. The campaign is sponsored by local business associations, including Main Street, Montana Avenue Merchants Association, Bayside District Corp., and the Pico Improvement Organization. The Farmers' Market and Santa Monica Daily Press are also partners.

"This is as local as you can get," Gordon said.

There have been a number of Main Street businesses that participated in the Sunday market, including Panini Garden, La Vecchia and The Galley. Current vendor Rockenwagner was previously located in the Edgemar Center for the Arts.

Low said that local businesses have always been given priority, noting that for the four years she's been with the Farmers' Market, Main Street vendors have gotten first preference.

"The current policy is that if there's space available, then Main Street businesses get preference," she said. "There just happens to be no space right now."

She added that many of the vendors have been with the market since its inception more than 15 years ago at a time when few of the businesses on Main Street wanted to participate.

"I think some of the controversy now is that it's so popular that they want a piece of the pie when the people who are there baked the pie," she said.

The new rules for the Farmers' Market is expected to go to the City Council in October after it makes the rounds with the business organizations that have a market in their neighborhood. The new RFP should follow soon after.

Gordon said several new merchants have asked about participating in the market, including La Grande Orange.

He added that the point system proposed has problems because it favors businesses that have been in the market for a long time more than it favors Main Street establishments.

"We hit the roof on that," he said.

Low said that under the scoring criteria, businesses located in the same district as the market will receive the highest score in that specific category.

"If the Lazy Daisy Cafe applied for the Pico Farmers' Market, in that scoring criteria, they should get the highest score," she said. "If they applied to the Main Street market, they would not get the highest score."

For Euphoria Loves Rawvolution, which buys its produce from the Farmers' Market, it took two years to finally get admitted.

The notice that the restaurant could participate came at an inopportune time, but owner Janabai Amsden said she jumped on the highly coveted spot regardless.

The restaurant, which was placed next to the Carbon Grill, ended up losing money for three straight months.

"We were trying to introduce food in that environment and make it cost effective," Amsden said. "It takes a while to build clientele, especially competing with a well known restaurant."

Amsden said that while she believes the people involved with the market were trying to do the best they could in a system that is a "bit marginalized," she believes the process is a bit unfair.

"I'm paying Main Street rent, which is very high, and on Sunday morning and afternoon my business is slow," she said.

modus operandi. As a college student, Amonic was hesitant to pick a major and limit himself.

"I badgered the counselor," he said. "Finally she told me about something called 'premedical studies' — if you take that you're allowed to take a whole lot of classes without having the prerequisites."

Amonic attended UCLA as an undergraduate and for much of his medical training. Today, he works as an associate clinical professor there.

Back in the day, he said, it was a big deal for someone from California to intern back east, as Amonic did at Yale.

"Most high class training in the U.S. was considered East Coast Ivy League kind of stuff," he said. "The faculty at UCLA was anxious to have us go and learn their ways and to show them what we could do."

In his second year of medical school, Amonic heard a lecture by a plastic surgeon and knew immediately that he wanted to go into that field.

In addition to his work at Saint John's, Amonic performs plastic surgery procedures in his own office nearby, where he averages about three major surgeries a week. Amonic's specialty is face and eye surgery, but he also performs liposuction, breast augmentation and some reconstructive surgeries.

"Noses were very big years ago, and they still are," he said. "But I don't do as many."

Some of his patients are among Los Angeles' most rich and famous.

"Most of the celebrities I know are delightful," he said. "If they're really high-powered celebrities it can be trying because they're usually at a distance — they have their people call my people."

Amonic said he is "envied," not criticized, by colleagues for his work in plastic surgery.

"The nice thing about plastic surgery is that it's paid for in advance — the patient knows exactly what it's going to cost," he said. "There's no dealing with insurance."

This self-assuredness probably helps him attract customers.

"He's the best advertisement for his own plastic surgery business that anyone could be," Pacheco said.

During the Vietnam War, Amonic served as chief of Base Surgical Services at a NATO facility in Germany.

"It was sort of like a secret place," he said. "We had F-4 Phantom jets that were protected by dogs. And I got to see a lot of Europe."

Pacheco revealed that Amonic also had a small acting career on the side.

"He was in 'Spartacus,'" he said. "You have to watch closely to see him, but he's there."

Evacuation centers begin to thin

National Forest were confirmed destroyed, but firefighters were likely to find others, Dietrich said.

Firefighters hoped to keep the blaze from spreading up Mount Wilson, where many of the region's broadcast and communications antennas and a historic observatory are located. Flames were within two miles of the towers Sunday, fire officials said.

For the third straight day, humidity was very low and temperatures were expected in the high 90s. Some 2,000 firefighters were battling the blaze.

Mandatory evacuations were also in effect for neighborhoods in Altadena and for the communities of Acton, La Crescenta and Big Tujunga Canyon.

The fire traveled six to eight miles overnight, burning as actively during the night as it did during the day, said Forest Service Capt. Mike Dietrich. Dietrich said he had never seen a fire grow so quickly without powerful Santa Ana winds to push it.

"The leading edge, the one they're really focused on, is that northern edge. It's moving pretty fast up in that direction," said U.S. Forest Service spokeswoman Randi Jorgenson. "But the fire's growing in all directions. All fronts are going to be areas of concern today."

At the fire command post, Schwarzenegger praised firefighters for successfully protecting subdivisions in the foothills.

Rob Driscoll and his wife, Beth Halaas, said they lost their house in Big Tujunga Canyon. By Sunday morning they were desperate for more information and came to the command post to get answers.

"Our neighbors sent us photos of all the other houses that are lost," Halaas said, her voice breaking as her young son nestled his sunburned face in her arms. "We've heard as many as 30 houses burned."

Driscoll said 15 of his neighbors who live on private property within the forest were still waiting for word on their homes. Fire officials assured them teams were working to survey the damage.

At least four evacuation centers were set up at schools and community centers in the area.

The center at Crescenta Valley High School filled up after evacuation orders came down at about 2 a.m., but by Sunday afternoon fewer than two dozen people remained. Residents trickled in to get information and snacks.

Debbie and Mercer Barrows said their house was saved but they lost their scenic view of a hillside to the flames.

"That'll grow back," said Mercer Barrows, a TV producer.

The Barrows didn't consider staying in their home because there's only one way in to their La Crescenta neighborhood.

"It depends where your house is, if you can see what's coming. If you're up next to steep and heavy brush like we are, forget it," Barrows said.

Internet's growth faces obstacles

ANICK JESDANUN
AP Technology Writer

NEW YORK Goofy videos weren't on the minds of Len Kleinrock and his team at UCLA when they began tests 40 years ago on what would become the Internet. Neither was social networking, for that matter, nor were most of the other easy-to-use applications that have drawn more than a billion people online.

Instead the researchers sought to create an open network for freely exchanging information, an openness that ultimately spurred the innovation that would later spawn the likes of YouTube, Facebook and the World Wide Web.

There's still plenty of room for innovation today, yet the openness fostering it may be eroding. While the Internet is more widely available and faster than ever, artificial barriers threaten to constrict its growth.

Call it a mid-life crisis.

A variety of factors are to blame. Spam and hacking attacks force network operators to erect security firewalls. Authoritarian regimes block access to many sites and services within their borders. And commercial considerations spur policies that can thwart rivals, particularly on mobile devices like the iPhone.

"There is more freedom for the typical Internet user to play, to communicate, to shop — more opportunities than ever before," said Jonathan Zittrain, a law professor and co-founder of Harvard's Berkman Center for Internet & Society. "On the worrisome side, there are some longer-term trends that are making it much more possible (for information) to be controlled."

Few were paying attention back on Sept. 2, 1969, when about 20 people gathered in Kleinrock's lab at the University of California, Los Angeles, to watch as two bulky computers passed meaningless test data through a 15-foot gray cable.

That was the beginning of the fledgling Arpanet network. Stanford Research Institute joined a month later, and UC Santa Barbara and the University of Utah did by year's end.

The 1970s brought e-mail and the TCP/IP communications protocols, which allowed multiple networks to connect — and formed the Internet. The '80s gave birth to an addressing system with suffixes like ".com" and ".org" in widespread use today.

The Internet didn't become a household word until the '90s, though, after a British physicist, Tim Berners-Lee, invented the Web, a subset of the Internet that makes it easier to link resources across disparate locations. Meanwhile, service providers like America Online connected millions of people for the first time.

That early obscurity helped the Internet blossom, free from regulatory and commercial constraints that might discourage or even prohibit experimentation.

"For most of the Internet's history, no one had heard of it," Zittrain said. "That gave it time to prove itself functionally and to kind of take root."

Even the U.S. government, which funded much of the Internet's early development as a military project, largely left it alone, allowing its engineers to promote their ideal of an open network.

When Berners-Lee, working at a European physics lab, invented the Web in 1990, he could release it to the world without having to seek permission or contend with security firewalls that today treat unknown types of Internet traffic as suspect.

Even the free flow of pornography led to innovations in Internet credit card payments, online video and other technologies used in the mainstream today.

"Allow that open access, and a thousand flowers bloom," said Kleinrock, a UCLA professor since 1963. "One thing about the Internet you can predict is you will be surprised by applications you did not expect."

That idealism is eroding.

An ongoing dispute between Google Inc. and Apple Inc. underscores one such barrier.

Like some other mobile devices that connect to the Internet, the iPhone restricts the software that can run on it. Only applications Apple has vetted are allowed.

Apple recently blocked the Google Voice communications application, saying it overrides the iPhone's built-in interface. Skeptics, however, suggest the move thwarts Google's potentially competing phone services.

On desktop computers, some Internet access providers have erected barriers to curb bandwidth-gobbling file-sharing services used by their subscribers. Comcast Corp. got rebuked by Federal Communications Commission last year for blocking or delaying some forms of file-sharing; Comcast ultimately agreed to stop that.

The episode galvanized calls for the government to require "net neutrality," which essentially means that a service provider could not favor certain forms of data traffic over others. But that wouldn't be a new rule as much as a return to the principles that drove the network Kleinrock and his colleagues began building 40 years ago.

Even if service providers don't actively interfere with traffic, they can discourage consumers' unfettered use of the Internet with caps on monthly data usage. Some access providers are testing drastically lower limits that could mean extra charges for watching just a few DVD-quality movies online.

"You are less likely to try things out," said Vint Cerf, Google's chief Internet evangelist and one of the Internet's founding fathers. "No one wants a surprise bill at the end of the month."

Dave Farber, a former chief technologist at the Federal Communications Commission, said systems are far more powerful when software developers and consumers alike can simply try things out.

Farber has unlocked an older iPhone using a warrantee-voiding technique known as jail-breaking, allowing the phone to run software that Apple hasn't approved. By doing that, he could watch video before Apple supported it in the most recent version of the iPhone, and he changed the screen display when the phone is idle to give him a summary of appointments and e-mails.

While Apple insists its reviews are necessary to protect children and consumer privacy and to avoid degrading phone performance, other phone developers are trying to preserve the type of openness found on desktop computers. Google's Android system, for instance, allows anyone to write and distribute software without permission.

Yet even on the desktop, other barriers get in the way.

Steve Crocker, an Internet pioneer who now heads the startup Shinkuro Inc., said his company has had a tough time building technology that helps people in different companies collaborate because of security firewalls that are ubiquitous on the Internet. Simply put, firewalls are designed to block incoming connections, making direct interactions between users challenging, if not impossible.

No one's suggesting the removal of all barriers, of course. Security firewalls and spam filters became crucial as the Internet grew and attracted malicious behavior, much as traffic lights eventually had to be erected as cars flooded the roads. Removing those barriers could create larger problems.

And many barriers throughout history eventually fell away — often under pressure. Early on, AOL was notorious for discouraging users from venturing from its gated community onto the broader Web. The company gradually opened the doors as its subscribers complained or fled. Today, the company is rebuilding its business around that open Internet.

What the Internet's leading engineers are trying to avoid are barriers that are so burdensome that they squash emerging ideas before they can take hold.

Already, there is evidence of controls at workplaces and service providers slowing the uptake of file-sharing and collaboration tools. Video could be next if consumers shun higher-quality and longer clips for fear of incurring extra bandwidth fees. Likewise, startups may never get a chance to reach users if mobile gatekeepers won't allow them.

If such barriers keep innovations from the hands of consumers, we may never know what else we may be missing along the way.

Activist: Camper warnings smack of racial profiling

STEVEN K. PAULSON
Associated Press Writer

DENVER A federal warning to beware of campers in national forests who eat tortillas, drink Tecate beer and play Spanish music because they could be armed marijuana growers is racial profiling, an advocate for Hispanic rights said Friday.

The warnings were issued Wednesday by the U.S. Forest Service, which is investigating how much marijuana is being illegally cultivated in Colorado's national forests following the recent discovery of more than 14,000 plants in Pike National Forest.

"That's discriminatory, and it puts Hispanic campers in danger," said Polly Baca, co-chairwoman of the Colorado Latino Forum.

The U.S. Forest Service quickly retracted the warning.

"It is inexcusable and we regret that this insensitivity distracted attention from the real problem of illegal marijuana cultivation on federal land and the threats to human safety and environmental degradation it poses," said Hank Kashdan, associate chief of the U.S. Forest Service.

Wealth helped fuel Kennedy clan's rise

STEVE LEBLANC
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON Sen. Edward Kennedy's family fortune not only fueled his brothers' presidential campaigns and his eight terms in the U.S. Senate, it also helped drive the family's liberal legacy and forge Kennedy's lifelong crusade for universal health care.

Just how wealthy was Kennedy when he died Tuesday at the age of 77 after a yearlong battle with brain cancer?

Untangling a family fortune that reaches back to the early days of the past century is murky business, but the annual federal financial disclosure reports Kennedy was required to file provide at least a partial glimpse into his personal capital.

As a U.S. senator, Kennedy earned a base salary of $165,200 a year, but that just skimmed the surface of his net worth.

On the most recent report in 2008, which includes his own assets and those of his wife and any dependents, Kennedy listed a string of publicly and non-publicly traded trusts and assets. Under the filing rules, Kennedy was only required to place the value of those assets within a range, rather than give an exact dollar amount.

The report placed the net worth of his publicly traded assets somewhere between a low of $15 million and high of $72.6 million.

Just a year earlier, Kennedy reported somewhat rosier totals that placed his publicly traded assets somewhere between a low of $46.9 million and a high of $157 million.

Kennedy has other sources of income, including $1,995,833 in royalties he received from Grand Central Publishing a division of Hachette Group Book, publishers of his memoir "True Compass" scheduled for release in mid-September. Part of the proceeds will go to charity, including the John F. Kennedy Library.

Separate from his personal wealth was Kennedy's federal campaign account. As of the end of June, Kennedy reported more than $4.5 million in the account.

The main source of Kennedy's wealth was his father and family patriarch Joseph P. Kennedy who amassed a fortune in banking, real estate, liquor, films and Wall Street holdings that eventually grew to an estimated $500 million by the 1980s.

A significant portion of that came from Joseph P. Kennedy's decision to buy Chicago's famed Merchandise Mart in 1945 for $12.5 million. Spanning two city blocks and rising 25 stories, the sprawling limestone and terra-cotta mart is so large it has its own zip code and only lost its title as the world's largest building after the Pentagon was built in the 1940s.

The elder Kennedy helped transformed it into a national center for the home furnishings and design industries.

The family retained ownership of the building until 1998 when it was sold — along with other properties including Chicago's Apparel Center.

State fairs a boon for jobless

NOMAAN MERCHANT
Associated Press Writer

FALCON HEIGHTS, Minn. A year's worth of failed job leads prepared Richard Briggs for anything, including night shifts as a Minnesota State Fair custodian.

For $8.50 an hour, the out-of-work financial analyst vacuums and cleans bathrooms in fairground buildings. Briggs, 38, said he's "something of a curiosity" among his coworkers.

"You know, they don't hire financial analysts to clean the sidewalks," Briggs said.

A crippled economy has sent droves of unemployed and underemployed people to fairs nationwide, with many reporting record numbers of applicants to tear tickets, serve food and clean up after crowds.

Iowa's state fair closed most of its hiring weeks earlier than usual. Colorado's fair is finished hiring but was still getting more than 50 people a day trying to apply as the fair opened last week. In Indiana, about 2,300 people — at least twice as many as usual — applied for 800 open positions.

"And the nice thing about it for us is that we got, I guess you could say, many overqualified candidates," said Andy Klotz, a spokesman for the Indiana State Fair.

In Minnesota, more than 10,000 people applied for the fair's 3,000 jobs. At the same time more people were applying, fair vendors intent on keeping costs down were requesting far fewer employees than in years past.

And, more experienced fair workers were returning. The fair had room for just 1,250 new employees, about one-third the number of last year.

Briggs lives in the Twin Cities suburb of Mendota Heights with his wife and two stepchildren. He lost his job last September, and he's found few openings in the financial sector since. Over dinner in June, his wife suggested he apply for a job at the Fair, which he hadn't attended since childhood.

"It'll get you out of the house, and you'll be busy for 12 straight days," Briggs remembers her saying.

After a visit to the State Fair's employment center, he got an offer. Though the family still has his wife's income as a regulatory analyst, Briggs said his fair paycheck has given their budget "some breathing space."

"We have a mortgage to pay and mouths to feed," he said.

As the fair opened its 12-day run last week, Josh Chaika was working a day shift as a custodian.

Chaika, 27, signed up to work for the first time this year. He has a part-time job for 30 hours a week, but when he saw a newspaper advertisement for fair jobs, he decided to apply because he "just needed the extra cash."

He was surprised when he heard about the size of the waiting list.

"I didn't think it would be that tough," he said.

Jerry Hammer, the general manager of Minnesota's fair, said it's not always like this.

"I've seen other years where we're telling staff to go home and tell your friends and neighbors" workers are needed, he said.

The Minnesota State Fair still attracted a large number of teenagers and 20-somethings.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

NBA

From the hardwood to Iraq

TIM REYNOLDS
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI Tim James apologized for being late. A rough day at work, said the Miami Heat's 1999 first-round draft pick. Vehicles broke down, problems flared up, and he simply fell behind.

"It happens," James said. "Even here."

Even on the front line of the Iraq war.

A former NBA player who often wondered about his true calling, Tim James is now a U.S. Army soldier, a transformation that even many of the people closest to him never saw coming.

"I got my degree, lived the life I was able, have my freedom and became a professional athlete," James said last week from Iraq. "I'm the example of the American dream."

James is at Camp Speicher, the massive base near Tikrit, 85 miles north of Baghdad, not far from Saddam Hussein's hometown and where insurgents still are a perpetual threat. For Miami Northwestern High, the Miami Hurricanes, three NBA teams and some foreign clubs, he was forward Tim James. For the Army, he's Spc. Tim James of Task Force ODIN — short for Observe, Detect, Identify, Neutralize.

In layman's terms, he's part of the unit tasked with watching and catching the bad guys before they plant bombs.

So long, charter jets, enormous paychecks and Ritz-Carlton hotel stays.

Hello, 130-degree afternoons, 12-hour work days, $2,600 a month and 50-caliber machine guns.

"In life, we all have different desires and needs," said Leonard Hamilton, James' college coach and now the coach at Florida State. "With the passion he has, he had to go fulfill this. I'm in total support of Tim and what he's doing. He's at peace. All we can do is hope he comes back safely."

James spent years thinking about the prospects of a military career. Drafted 25th overall by the Heat, James' NBA career barely registered a basketball blip: He appeared in 43 games for Miami, Charlotte and Philadelphia, never starting and never scoring more than seven points in a game.

So he went to play overseas, making a fine living in Japan, Turkey and Israel. By 2007, his playing days were done. After months of deliberating, he made the difficult decision that would take him away from his family and 5-year-old son, whom James still tries to talk with by phone every night. Even so, Tim James Jr. doesn't understand where his dad is.

"I think of myself as a patriot," James said. "I wanted to give back to a country that gave so much to me."

James is believed to be the first former NBA player to enlist and then serve in Iraq. Arizona Cardinals safety Pat Tillman quit football to become an Army Ranger and was killed by friendly fire in Afghanistan in 2004.

James joined the Army on Sept. 12, 2008. The training was brutal, even for a 6-foot-8 basketball player whose athleticism had drawn raves since junior high school. James slept outside in frigid night air, scaled seven-story towers, endured 10-mile marches ("with full battle rattle, as they say," he said), and learned how to take apart and reassemble his weapon.

He never questioned if he was making the right decision.

"I have no doubts," James said. "I have no regrets. Not one bit."

His 12-month deployment to Iraq started in late July. On his second night there, James was awoken from a sound sleep, completely startled.

Machine gun fire. The sound of war.

Understandably, it took a while for him to fall back asleep.

"It's a pretty impressive thing that he's doing, making the transition from where he was then to where he is now," said James' captain, Curtis Byron. "Such a small percentage of U.S. citizens are in the military or are veterans, doing their part to protect the nation's freedom. Putting that life behind you, setting aside any thoughts you had before about the military, that's impressive."

Byron said James didn't tell most members of his unit that he used to be an NBA player. James not only didn't want the attention, he didn't want to be treated differently than anyone else.

"He's very humble," Byron said. "To him, it's not a big deal at all."

Oh, but it's a very big deal to the Heat.

They preach family inside the Heat complex, and even though James played only four games, he's forever part of the Heat family. Rob Wilson, the team's director of sports media relations, helped arrange for two boxes of T-shirts and posters to be sent to Iraq as a morale booster. They should get there this week, unless sandstorms delay the arrival of mail — a common occurrence.

Included in that package is an 8-minute, 31-second DVD, with greetings to James from several members of the organization. Another DVD from the Heat is already in the works, and the team is already planning to honor James at a home game this season.

"I just want to wish you good luck, man," Heat captain Udonis Haslem, who wears No. 40 to honor two of his idols who had that number — his father and James — said on the DVD. "God bless you and keep doing what you're doing."

"Stay focused," said Heat center Jamaal Magloire, a former James teammate. "Never let your guard down and get back to us safe."

"You're not like any other basketball player out there," Heat assistant coach Keith Askins said.

Since 2006, Miami has given a center-court tribute to soldiers returning from Iraq and Afghanistan at every home game, a program Heat president Pat Riley developed and called the HomeStrong initiative.

He said he cannot wait for James to get his due.

"The work we do, while being important to us, is made possible by the efforts of our soldiers in the Middle East," said Riley, who coached James.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Others see you as an adviser or their leader. Enjoy the acknowledgment and the sense of respect. You will want to use your instincts with a situation, especially one involving a boss. Tonight: Nap, and then decide.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Stretch and read between the lines. You might not be comfortable with everything that you see now that you have taken off your rose-colored shades. Isn't that why you wear them anyway? Tonight: Beam in what you want.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Reach out for a pivotal person. Listen to what is being shared about a key matter. You might know more about this topic. The question will remain whether to share this information. Tonight: Togetherness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Defer to others and understand what is motivating them. A serious conversation can help more than you think. Clear the air and state what you feel. The unexpected comes in from out of left field. Know that you can deal with this matter directly and with clarity. Tonight: Ask for offers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Dive into work, and don't get distracted with accomplishing more than what you must. You could be slowed down by a strong feeling that something is off. Trust your judgment if you sense a problem, even though the facts might not be there yet. Tonight: Exercise time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ If you let go of a heaviness, creativity could flow and point to the path that leads to where you want to go. Listen to feedback from others. You might want to head in your own direction, but on some level you feel overwhelmed and tired. Tonight: Always a live wire.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Your inner voice might contradict what you are seeing. Observe rather than declare. Listen rather than talk. You will get the type of information you need. Listen to news that comes forward, and consider what will work best. Only you can make choices for yourself. Tonight: The fun times are here.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Keep communication going. You are focused and goal-oriented. You know what you want. Don't allow yourself to be sidetracked right now. Your words are imprinted in others' minds. Use care with what you say. Others are listening. Tonight: Catch up on a friend's news.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ You might not come to an agreement. A feeling of being betrayed or not listened to could hurt. You can and will get around a problem if you so choose. Tonight: Know when to start.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Continue the process of looking beyond the obvious. Listen to news with an eye to everyone's benefit. Understand what is going on with others, and try to come to an agreement. Tonight: Just make yourself happy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb, 18)
★★ Knowing when to back off is important. Nevertheless, a key associate decides to charge in. Just the same, observing could be far more powerful than acting right now. Tonight: Nap, then decide.

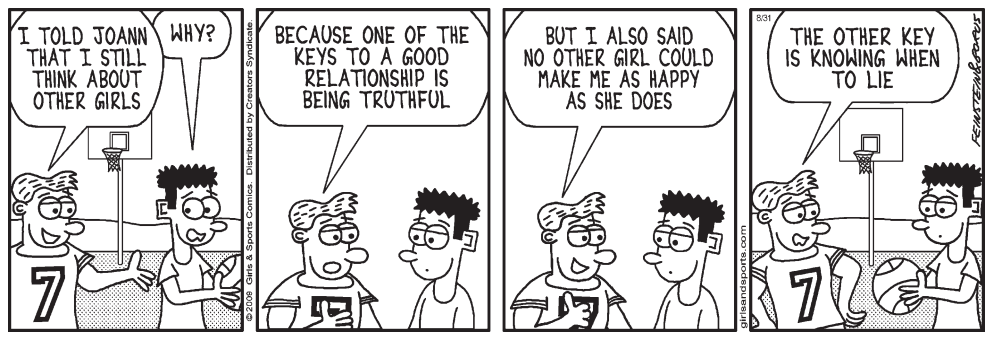

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Just because a partner or several people in your life are tight right now doesn't mean much. All it says is that you might want to try another approach or ignore the grumpy faction in your life. This, too, will pass. Tonight: Where the action is.

Happy birthday

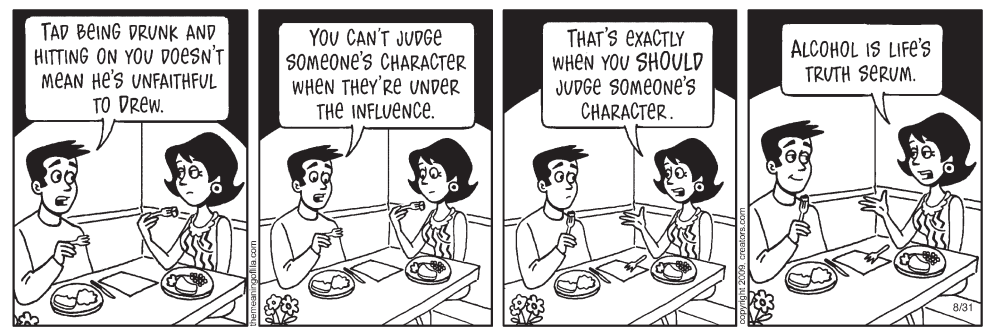

This year, discerning if you are indeed a workaholic could be difficult. You simply are more focused on getting the job, project or whatever done. Partners, especially those involved with finances, could be full of surprises. If you are single, don't move too quickly into a budding romance. If you are attached, you need to respect your differences and allow them to empower the bond. CAPRICORN is earthy, stable and sometimes dull.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ (1) A 114-pound tortoise, part of the Zambini Family Circus performing in Madison, Wis., in July, escaped. He actually made good time on his dash for freedom, covering two miles in six days before being spotted. (2) About 20 men were present for a Belgian body builders' championship in May when three anti-doping officials arrived unexpectedly and requested urine samples. Every single contestant abruptly grabbed his gear and fled, according to press reports, and the event was canceled.

■ According to prosecutors in Britain's Preston Crown Court in July, Christopher Monks, 24, wanted two things (based on transcribed Internet chat room dialogue): his parents killed and his penis bitten off. As the Internet is fertile ground for communities of sexual aberrants, Monks easily found a man, Shaun Skarnes, 19, who was searching to accommodate someone on the latter desire and who allegedly agreed to kill Monks' parents in exchange. However, Skarnes botched the killings, and Monks, himself, is still intact.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURER AND TAX COLLECTOR

Notice of Divided Publication

NOTICE OF DIVIDED PUBLICATION OF THE PROPERTY TAX DEFAULT (DELINQUENT) LIST
Made pursuant to Section 3371,
Revenue and Taxation Code

Pursuant to Sections 3381 through 3385, Revenue and Taxation Code, the Notice of Power to Sell Tax-Defaulted Property in and for Los Angeles County, State of California, has been divided and distributed to various newspapers of general circulation published in the county. A portion of the list appears in each of such newspapers.

I, Mark J. Saladino, County of Los Angeles Tax Collector, State of California, certify that:

Notice is hereby given that real properties listed below were declared to be in tax default at 12:01 a.m. on July 1, 2007, by operation of law. The declaration of default was due to non-payment of the total amount due for the taxes, assessments and other charges levied in 2006-07 tax year that were a lien on the listed real property. Property upon which a nuisance abatement lien has been recorded shall be subject to sale if the taxes remain unpaid after three years. The name of the assessee and the total, which was due on June 30, 2007 for the 2006-07 tax years, is shown opposite the parcel number. Tax defaulted real property may be redeemed by payment of all unpaid taxes and assessments, together with the additional penalties and fees, as prescribed by law, or it may be paid under an installment plan of redemption. If the 2006-07 taxes remain unpaid on non-residential property after June 30, 2010, the property will be subject to sale at public auction in 2011. All other residential property remains unpaid after June 20, 2012, will be subject to sale at public auction in 2013.

All information concerning redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by Mark J. Saladino, Treasurer and Tax Collector, 225 North Hill Street, First Floor, Los Angeles, California 90012, 1-(888) 807-2111 or 1-(213) 974-2111.

I certify, under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed at Los Angeles, California on August 13, 2009.

MARK J. SALADINO
TREASURER AND TAX COLLECTOR
COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES
STATE OF CALIFORNIA

Assessees/taxpayers, who have disposed of real property since January 1, 2006, may find their names listed for the reason that a change in ownership has not been reflected on the assessment roll.

ASSESSOR'S IDENTIFICATION NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Identification Number (AIN), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the Assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map, if applicable, and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The Assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the Assessor's Office.

The following property tax defaulted on July 1, 2007, for the taxes, assessments, and other charges for the fiscal year 2006-07:

LISTED BELOW ARE PROPERTIES THAT DEFAULTED IN 2007 FOR TAXES, ASSESSMENTS AND OTHER CHARGES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 2006-2007. AMOUNT OF DELINQUENCY AS OF THIS PUBLICATION IS LISTED BELOW.
