Masked bank robber escapes on Montana Ave.

Madeleine Pauker

MONTANA: A section of Montana Ave. was shut down yesterday due to a bank robbery.

MADELEINE PAUKER
Daily Press Staff Writer

A masked man stole up to five thousand dollars from a Montana Ave. bank Tuesday and is still at large.

According to the Santa Monica Police Department, a man wearing a skull mask entered Wells Fargo on Montana and 9th Street at 9:51 a.m. armed with a "long barreled weapon" and demanded money.

Santa Monica Police Department Lt. Candice Cobarrubias said the suspect was heavily dressed in dark clothing and wore a "Day of the Dead" style mask. He received between three and five thousand dollars before escaping over a wall at the rear of the bank on the 800 block of 9th Street.

Sections of Montana Avenue and the surrounding streets were on lockdown Tuesday while police searched for the suspect.

The street was closed from about 9th to 11th streets from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. SMPD asked all residents and businesses on that section of Montana, including Roosevelt Elementary School and First United Methodist Church School, to shelter in place.

At 3:30 p.m., SMPD announced on Twitter that the shelter in place order has been lifted. Cobarrubias said officers did not find the suspect.

"We understand this has been very stressful on the

The Pacific Coast Highway closed at Chautauqua Boulevard Tuesday morning due to a car crash that occurred around 8 a.m.

Despite earlier reports that the crash near Will Rogers State Beach resulted in fatalities, CalTrans spokesperson Eric Menjivar said it was not fatal. Two individuals were hospitalized, Los Angeles Fire Department officials said.

PCH was closed northbound from Chautauqua and southbound from Temescal Canyon Road until 12:45 p.m., Menjivar said.

Traffic was backed up into Santa Monica and Malibu Tuesday morning as drivers were diverted onto side streets. Drivers traveling south on PCH were delayed more than an hour, while those traveling north were delayed for about half an hour.

Crossroads brings "How to be an Antiracist" author to campus

MADELEINE PAUKER
Daily Press Staff Writer

The co-president of Crossroads School's student council had a question for professor and author Ibram X. Kendi, who had just finished a lecture on antiracism in the school's gym Monday night.

"While I'm blessed to go to a school that provides lectures like this, there are only 30 students here," said Kai McAliley. "How can we try to change the culture of apathy to enthusiasm about subjects like these?"

Kendi looked at McAliley, a black student at a school where almost half of the students identify as people of color but is situated in a city that is more than 70% white and costs $43,000 to attend.

"Fundamentally, you would have to figure out … the cause of their apathy," Kendi said. "What I would suggest is doing a project — like a survey — to try to figure out what is causing kids to not be interested in these subjects. And once you have that data, you can develop solutions."

Share of uninsured Americans rises for 1st time in a decade

CHRISTOPHER RUGABER AND RICARDO ALONSO-ZALDIVAR
Associated Press

The proportion of Americans without health insurance edged up in 2018 — the first evidence from the government that coverage gains under President Barack Obama's health care law might be eroding under President Donald Trump.

The Census Bureau also said in an annual report Tuesday that household income rose last year at its slowest pace in four years and finally matched its previous peak set in 1999. Median household income increased 0.9% in 2018 to an inflation-adjusted $63,179, from $62,626 in 2017.

The data suggest that the current economic expansion, now the longest on record at more than 10 years, is still struggling to provide widespread benefits to the U.S. population. Solid gains in household incomes over the past four years have returned the median only to where it was two decades ago. And despite strong growth last year in the number of Americans working full time and year-round, the number of people with private health insurance remained flat.

The Census report found that 27.5 million people, 8.5% of the population, lacked health insurance coverage in 2018. That was an increase of 1.9 million uninsured, or 0.5 percentage point.

One bright spot in the report was that the poverty rate fell for a fourth straight year to 11.8%, its lowest point since 2001. The proportion of households led by women that were poor reached a record low.

"While any reduction in poverty or increase in income is a step in the right direction, most families have just barely made up the ground lost over the past decade," said Elise Gould, senior economist at the liberal Economic Policy Institute.

Though income inequality narrowed last year, it remains near record levels reached in 2017. Last year, the richest 5% of the U.S. population captured 23% of household income.

Still, steady hiring and an unemployment rate at 3.7%, near a five-decade low, have helped raise earnings for lower-paid workers employed by restaurants, warehouses, shipping firms and other sectors of the economy. This trend has contributed to a decline in poverty.

On health insurance, more people were covered by Medicare, reflecting the aging of baby boomers. But Medicaid coverage declined. The number of uninsured children also rose. And there were more uninsured adults ages 35-64.

Though the increase in the number of uninsured Americans was modest, it could be a turning point, the first real sign that coverage gains under Obama could be at least partly reversed. This year, the number of uninsured could rise again. That's because a previous Republican-led Congress repealed fines under the Affordable Care Act that had been intended to prod people to sign up for coverage.

The Census report is sure to play into 2020 presidential politics. Health care is the leading issue for Democrats, with proposals including Sen. Bernie Sanders' call for a government-run system to cover everyone and former Vice President Joe Biden's idea for expanding Obama's law and adding a government plan open to virtually anyone.

Democrats are laying the blame on Trump, long accusing his administration of deliberately undermining Obama's health care law. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Tuesday blamed Trump's "cruel health care sabotage" for the rising number of uninsured. In a statement, the California Democrat asserted that Trump's ongoing efforts to erode Obama's law have forced Americans to "live in constant fear of an accident or injury that could spell financial ruin for their families."

Trump spent most of his first year in office trying unsuccessfully to get a Republican Congress to repeal the Affordable Care Act. He is now asking a federal appeals court to overturn it as unconstitutional. The president also slashed the program's sign-up season ad budget and scaled back funding to help people navigate the enrollment process. Trump also removed a subsidy for insurers, thereby triggering a jump in premiums.

Yet ACA enrollment has held fairly steady, with about 20 million people covered by its mix of subsidized private plans and a Medicaid expansion for low-income individuals. The Census report found that Medicaid coverage declined by 0.7 percent from 2017.

The Trump administration has also rolled out some regulatory changes of its own intended to expand coverage. These include "association health plans" for small businesses, short-term plans for individuals and new options for employers to help finance workers' coverage. These changes are fairly recent, though, and it's unclear what impact they might eventually have.

Changes in how Census conducts its income survey have made historical comparisons difficult. Still, household incomes largely declined for the first five years after the recession ended, before taking a sharp turn up in 2015, when they rose 5.1%. Incomes jumped 3.1% the next year but then slowed to 1.8% in 2017 and barely rose last year.

The economic expansion hasn't noticeably narrowed the income gap between white and African-American households. The median income for black households is $41,700; for whites, it's $70,600.

Women earned nearly 82 cents for every dollar earned by men, a figure little changed from the previous year and up just 4 cents from 2007, when the Great Recession began. (That figure compares both men and women with full-time, year-round jobs.)

Many economists consider the poverty rate an antiquated measure that is based mostly on food costs and that doesn't reflect all government benefit programs.

A second calculation, known as the "supplemental poverty measure," includes health care expenses and shows that 13.1% of Americans are in poverty, essentially unchanged from 2017. This measure also includes the effects of government benefit programs like Social Security and food stamps. The EPI estimates that Social Security kept 27.3 million people out of poverty in 2018, while food stamps kept 3.1 million above the supplemental poverty line.

Fair And Balanced

WHAT A PREPOSTEROUS PURSUIT

It is to write opinion, for publication.

No, wait, stop! Don't flip to Crime Watch — we know you love Crime Watch — 'cause I'm not talking about myself, for a change. This week I have to take on other opinion writers. Because they have done us wrong, fair citizens of Santa Monica, and I'm here to stick up for our fast-fading honor.

The first and easiest target is gasbag Harold Meyerson, who wrote last Thursday in the LA Times under the headline: "Stephen Miller wants America to look more like his hometown of Santa Monica - rich and white."

His lead sentence: "You can take the boy out of Santa Monica, but you can't, apparently, take Santa Monica out of the boy." Well, that certainly gets peoples' attention, but it's disingenuous and leaves a false impression, especially for that majority who won't read much further than the first sentence.

For most of us here who despise Miller and every incredibly cruel, inhumane, despotic, racist shove he has given the Trump monocracy, and how embarrassing it is that he is a son of Santa Monica, this is painfully unfair. And Meyerson knows it.

IT'S WHAT YOU CALL A CHEAP SHOT

It's lazy, careless, glib, dishonest and pandering. He does accurately go on to explain that "Miller grew up despising the liberalism of his Westside hometown. But even as Miller has rejected the inclusive politics, he seems to have embraced its demographics."

What is that supposed to mean? Making the connection to Santa Monica because it is more rich and white than average America makes no sense except to slap us down for guilt by association. It would be more accurate to peg it to the rich, white Halls of Congress he inhabits and seeks to control. (He previously worked for two other GOP horrorshows: Michele Bachmann and Jeff Sessions. What a resume. Waiting for the Fourth Reich.)

THE DIFFERENCE

Of course, is that many of us in Santa Monica embrace the racial and economic diversity that we are fast losing, due to gentrification. (Given steroids by a City government overdeveloping our beach town like it was a young Arnold.) So Miller is the antithesis of the Santa Monica many of us know, yet Meyerson weds us because it serves his purposes for this particular piece. Ya gotta have a hook, right Harold?

He ran the LA Weekly for 12 years from the late '80s on, as editor. I would say he ran it into the ground, greatly responsible for its penchant for sensationalism and contrariness over what the heck actually happened. Hard to break old habits, eh Harold?

POLITICIANS ARE PROPAGANDISTS

At least, locally. OK, almost everywhere. A few exceptions. So a so-called opinion piece by one is going to almost fall over from being so slanted. Opinion yes, and even politicos have a right to them and to have them published. But put on your hip boots.

City Council member Kevin McKeown recently took umbrage to a column written in another paper that compared the politics of Trump's Washington with Santa Monica shenanigans.

I take umbrage, because I've done that several times in my columns and McKeown ignored me. Hmmph.

I'VE GOT MY BOOTS ON

But it's awfully wide and deep so I'll pick just a couple bon mots.

First of all, McKeown either completely missed the point, or is intentionally ignoring it. He protests right off that "Santa Monica is about as far from Trump's Washington as one can get, geographically and politically." We all know that, Kevin, both counts. He starts in on our environmental policies being the exact opposite of Trump's. We know that.

And it takes him only until the fifth sentence to mention how he was invited to the 2015 UN climate change conference in Paris, as our then-Mayor. "We were the only small city so honored."

A point of pride, we might all think, but I have come to believe that this has been a focus of our selected politicians for a long time now. That reputation. That gives them notoriety, and invitations to conferences all over the world. But when they give their speeches I'm betting they leave out the part about the cost of their so-called enlightened policies on the residents of SM. Like spending tens of millions more than necessary on an office annex building for no extra benefit to the residents, but years of bragging rights for all present and future Council members. Tens. Of millions. Too much.

"The resident-friendly centralized offices will save money on operations and maintenance, costing taxpayers less over the life of the building," McKeown writes. Less than what? So would a platinum LEED construction costing tens of millions less than the estimated $142,000,000. "Resident-friendly" — ??

"That kind of long-term fiscal responsibility is a hallmark of Santa Monica's budgeting." Change one word, to "irresponsibility," and you definitely have your hallmark. Bus benches, anyone? $2.5M toilets? $20M+ of our taxpayer money to appeal a lost lawsuit, a desperate attempt to stay in power?

McKeown goes on but I cannot. Thank goodness for print, that has a stopping point.

Apple rolls out new streaming TV service for $5 a month

BY MICHAEL LIEDTKE
AP Technology Writer

Apple is finally taking on Netflix with its own streaming television service and, uncharacteristically for the company, offering it at a bargain price — $5 a month beginning on Nov. 1.

Walt Disney Co. is launching its own assault on Netflix the same month, for just $7 a month.

It may be sheer coincidence that the cost of both Apple and Disney subscriptions will be a dollar less than Netflix's main plan, priced at $12.99 a month. But the companies' intent to disrupt Netflix's huge lead in the streaming business couldn't be clearer.

Apple delivered the news Tuesday while also unveiling three new iPhones that won't look much different than last year's model other than boasting an additional camera for taking pictures from extra-wide angles.

Hoping to propel its streaming service to a fast start while also boosting iPhone sales, Apple will give a year of free access to its original shows and films to anyone who buys an iPhone, iPad, iPod Touch or Mac.

The aggressive pricing is unusual for Apple, which typically charges a premium for products and services to burnish its brand. Most analysts expected Apple to charge $8 to $10 per month for the service, which will be called Apple TV Plus.

But Apple is coming into a market that Netflix practically created in 2007 — around the same time as the first iPhone came out — and now has more than 150 million subscribers, so it needed to do something extraordinary to make a big splash.

"It's Apple. They're going to be competitive, so you have to expect they're going to do something, considering how hyper competitive the streaming video space is," said Tim Hanlon, CEO of Vertere Group.

Apple CEO Tim Cook did not have much new to say about the TV service beyond its pricing and service date, although he did show a trailer for a new Jason Momoa-led series called "See."

Like Netflix and similar services from Amazon and Hulu, Apple has been spending billions of dollars for original programs featuring stars such as Oprah Winfrey, Jennifer Aniston and Reese Witherspoon. The service will launch with nine original shows and films, with more expected each month. It will only carry Apple's original programming, and will be available in 100 countries at launch.

Apple also announced a new videogame subscription service that will cost $5 a month when it rolls out Sept. 19. Called Apple Arcade, the service will allow subscribers to play more than 100 games selected by Apple and exclusive to the service.

Disney Co., one of the most hallowed brands in entertainment, is also muscling its way into the market with a streaming service featuring its treasured vault of films and original programming.

That means both Apple and Disney will be undercutting the industry leaders. Besides Netflix, there is Amazon at $9 per month and Hulu at $8 per month.

The price war is unfolding as Netflix tries to bounce back from a rough spring in which it suffered its first quarterly drop in U.S. subscribers since 2011. Apple's pricing tactics caught investors' attention. Netflix's stock fell 2% on Tuesday.

Apple is the latest entry to the crowded video subscription market, with each new service stretching the limits of just how many monthly plans people are willing to pay for.

The Apple streaming service will, at least for now, offer fewer viewing options than Netflix or Disney but also a significantly lower price.

Apple's pricing shows it is serious in a field dominated by Netflix and in which Disney will likely also be a strong contender, said Colin Gillis, director of research at Chatham Road Partners.

"Apple is going to take most likely a loss on this as it plays catch-up," he said.

The new iPhones were largely unchanged from previous models and were accompanied by an unexpected price cut for the cheapest model, which underscored the company's efforts to counteract the deepest slump in sales for its flagship product in the 12 years since the phone was unveiled.

IPhone shipments are down 25% so far this year, according to the research firm IDC, putting more pressure on Apple to generate revenue from services such as music, video streaming, games and its App Store. Revenue from services rose 14% to nearly $23 billion during the first half of this year.

Apple is cutting the price of the iPhone 11 to $700 from $750, the price of last year's XR. The lower prices reverses a trend in which premium phones get more expensive as people upgrade them less often.

The new phone models resemble last year's iPhone XR, XS and XS Max. And they have the same design — with more display space, less bezel and no home button — that Apple switched to with the iPhone X in 2017.

Unlike some of the other devices coming out this year, the new iPhones won't support upcoming ultrafast cellular networks known as 5G. Apple paid billions of dollars to settle a royalty dispute with chipmaker Qualcomm in April to gain the technology it needs for 5G iPhones, but those models will not be ready until next year.

Besides iPhones, Apple also showed off new versions of its internet-connected watch and iPads.

California Senate approves bill to cap rent increases

ADAM BEAM
Associated Press

California lawmakers on Tuesday moved to cap annual rent increases statewide for most tenants as a limited housing supply in the country's most populous state continues to drive up the cost of living while pushing more people to the streets.

The California Senate voted 25-10 to cap rent increases at 5% each year plus inflation for the next decade while banning landlords from evicting tenants without just cause. Democratic Gov. Gavin Newsom says he will sign the bill into law, but first it must survive a final vote in the state Assembly where the California Association of Realtors is pushing to defeat it. Lawmakers must act by Friday.

California's largest cities, including Los Angeles, Oakland and San Francisco, have some form of rent control, but a state law passed in 1995 has restricted new rent control laws since that year. In most places, landlords can raise rents at any time and for any reason, as long as they give advance notice.

In Pomona, about 30 miles (48 kilometers) east of Los Angeles, Yesenia Miranda Meza says her rent has jumped 20% in the past two years. Monday, she marched with other tenants through the halls of the state Capitol chanting: "Once I've paid my rent, all my money's spent."

"I'm a rent increase away from eviction, and that's with me having two jobs," she said "So if this (bill) doesn't go through and I get another rent increase, I really don't know what I'm going to do. I'm either going to be homeless or I'll have to cram into a room with a whole bunch of other people."

Opponents have likened the proposal to rent control — a more restrictive set of limitations on landlords. California voters overwhelmingly rejected in a statewide ballot initiative to overturn the 1995 law last year.

California Association of Realtors President Jared Martin said the group's 200,000 members strongly oppose the bill because it will "reduce the supply and quality of rental housing." It's an argument echoed by Republican Sen. Jeff Stone, who said developers would have no reason to build new housing if they can't make money off their investment.

"We'll see even a greater housing crisis because of the low supply of housing," Stone said. "Either this will force our constituents to join a 60,000 homeless population that we see in the LA area, or they will simply just move community and appreciate your patience and understanding," the tweet said. "We will continue to provide updates should any additional information become available."

Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District spokesperson Gail Pinsker said students at Roosevelt continued their classes and ate lunch in their classrooms or in the cafeteria. They were permitted to go to the bathrooms with adult escorts but were not allowed to play outside.

Students were released in groups through the back gate, Pinsker said. Afterschool programs and childcare were still in place.

"The school has been communicating with parents on the status all day, and parents were being very cooperative and not running to the school to get their kids," she said. "It's going smoothly."

The incident was the second time a suspect has robbed a Montana business and escaped.

In 2018 Robert Abalov (dubbed the "Bomber Robber" by authorities) walked into Curated Los Angeles at 1603 Montana Avenue holding a suspicious device and demanded jewelry. The suspect dropped the merchandise, jumped into a getaway car and hit several parked cars, injuring one person, before fleeing the area on foot.

Police quickly identified Abalov as their suspect and he eluded police for about three months before his arrest near the corner of Sepulveda and Venice Boulevards in West Los Angeles. Abalov was eventually sentenced to two years in state prison.

America commemorates 9/11 as its aftermath extends and evolves

JENNIFER PELTZ
Associated Press

Americans are commemorating 9/11 with mournful ceremonies, volunteering, appeals to "never forget" and rising attention to the terror attacks' extended toll on responders.

A crowd of victims' relatives is expected at ground zero Wednesday, while President Donald Trump is scheduled to join an observance at the Pentagon. Vice President Mike Pence is to speak at the third attack site, near Shanksville, Pennsylvania.

Eighteen years after the deadliest terrorist attack on American soil, the nation is still grappling with the aftermath at ground zero, in Congress and beyond. The attacks' aftermath is visible from airport security checkpoints to Afghanistan. A rocket exploded at the U.S. embassy as the anniversary began in Afghanistan, where a post-9/11 invasion has become America's longest war.

"People say, 'Why do you stand here, year after year?'" Chundera Epps, a sister of Sept. 11 victim Christopher Epps, said at last year's ceremony at the World Trade Center. "Because soldiers are still dying for our freedom. First responders are still dying and being ill."

"We can't forget. Life won't let us forget," she added.

The anniversary ceremonies center on remembering the nearly 3,000 people killed when hijacked planes rammed into the trade center, the Pentagon and a field near Shanksville on Sept. 11, 2001. All those victims' names are read aloud at the ground zero ceremony, where moments of silence and tolling bells mark the moments when the aircraft crashed and the trade center's twin towers fell.

But there has been growing awareness in recent years of the suffering of another group of people tied to the tragedy: firefighters, police and others who died or fell ill after exposure to the wreckage and the toxins unleashed in it.

While research continues into whether those illnesses are tied to 9/11 toxins, a victims compensation fund for people with potentially Sept. 11-related health problems has awarded more than $5.5 billion so far. Over 51,000 people have applied.

After years of legislative gridlock, dwindling money in the fund and fervent activism by ailing first responders and their advocates, Congress this summer made sure the fund won't run dry . Trump, a Republican and a New Yorker who was in the city on 9/11, signed the measure in July.

The sick gained new recognition this year at the memorial plaza at ground zero, where

Democrats will try to block Trump's border wall maneuver

ANDREW TAYLOR
Associated Press

Senate Democrats are moving on two fronts to block President Donald Trump from using special emergency powers to transfer money from military base construction projects like new schools to pay for new fences along the U.S.-Mexico border.

First, Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer of New York announced Tuesday that he will force a vote to reject the plan, saying the vote would give lawmakers a chance to block Trump "from stealing military funding from their states to foot the bill for an expensive and ineffective wall he promised Mexico would pay for."

A similar measure passed this spring with 12 Senate Republican votes but was vetoed by Trump. The rules allow Schumer to retry every few months and don't allow Republicans to block the vote.

Perhaps more ominously for Trump is a potential vote on Thursday in the powerful Appropriations panel, where several members agree with Democrats that Trump is overstepping by reordering spending decisions by Congress to fund wall projects that have otherwise been rejected.

A top Appropriations Democrat, Sen. Dick Durbin of Illinois, said he will move to amend a $694 billion Pentagon funding bill to block Trump from diverting money intended for military projects to the wall.

The Pentagon last week identified $3.6 billion worth of military construction projects it's willing to kill to build 175 miles (282 kilometers) of border wall. The projects included a $63 million middle school in GOP Majority Leader Mitch McConnell's state of Kentucky though most of them are located outside the continental U.S.

"The cancellation of these projects is based on a national emergency declared by the president that was rejected on its face by both house of Congress on bipartisan votes," Durbin said. "Congress cannot and should not be silent when the power of the purse is undermined in this way. Why are we here?"

Durbin would prevail in the vote if panel Republicans like Roy Blunt of Missouri and Susan Collins of Maine vote like they did in March — a development that would embarrass top Republicans like McConnell and Appropriations Committee Chairman Richard Shelby.

McConnell said Durbin's move, along with an abortion-related vote promised by Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., on a separate health spending bill, amount to "poison pills" that violate the recent budget pact.

"I can't overstate how difficult it was, given the players involved, to reach an agreement," McConnell said. "And here, when we begin to take the first step in our committee process here, our Democratic friends ... are trying to wiggle out of the agreement we all signed off on and voted for. So I think it is truly a disturbing development."

In remarks caught on a live microphone after a panel vote on the whopping defense measure Durbin implored Shelby to work with him to stop Trump's border wall maneuvering. Shelby was clearly sympathetic.

"I'm going to do everything I can," Shelby said. "Listen, I'm going to talk to McConnell, and you talk to Schumer and let's see if we can get together."

A Shelby spokeswoman said the Alabama Republican was talking more generally about moving the appropriations process — which would fill in the details of this summer's bipartisan spending and debt deal — forward. Shelby is also pushing ahead, for now, to deliver Trump's full $5 billion request for new wall funding in the upcoming round of spending bills, though it's a non-starter with Senate Democrats and powerful House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

Schumer said Trump is actually trying to win $12 billion for the wall once the $5 billion request is combined with money that Trump is shifting from military accounts.

"They know darn well that $12 billion additional for the wall is not going to fly — with Senate Democrats or with the House. So they ought to get to serious negotiating now that they've shown the president they're paying a little more fealty to him," Schumer said.

Schumer's move in the full Senate to force a repeat vote could put some Republicans in a difficult spot. For instance, endangered Republicans Cory Gardner of Colorado and Martha McSally of Arizona supported Trump in the earlier vote in March but stand to each lose funding for a home state project.

Trump says a wall would stop immigrants from entering the United States illegally. He promised repeatedly during his 2016 presidential campaign that Mexico would pay for the wall, but Mexico refused.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (SEPTEMBER 11)

Balance requires imbalance in order to find itself. You will feel compelled to focus intently on one area through the next 10 weeks. Things will get back in balance once this mission is complete. Bonus: You'll be richer! In 2020, you'll meet new people and know a wonderful match immediately. Cancer and Sagittarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 6, 20, 4, 44 and 32.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You are not a person who is stuck in any particular attitude. Many attitudes live inside you, each capable of eliciting a particular response from others. You'll make adjustments to draw out a desired result.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Hopefully, you're working for the cause, not the credit. Because the cause will be served but the credit may not ever come, at least not in a formal fashion. People see you though; you can count on that.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Your project may take a long time realize. That's fine for you, but what can you really expect from the spectators? People don't necessarily have the bandwidth to pay attention and follow along. Know your bottom line. Simplify and edit.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You'll get a feel for people and understand who should be on your team. Chances are, not very many will be needed. One person, if it's the right person, can do the work of many.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Humility is a trait that carries a person far. The humble avoid dozens of mistakes that can only be made by the ambitious. Also, humility allows for seeing and naming the mistakes before others even know that's what they are.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Get focused and then start at the very beginning, which is, as one Rodgers and Hammerstein song suggests, "a very good place to start." Know the essentials of the situation and you'll know the next right move.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). For better or worse, no mood ever happens to just one person. Hurt resonates with hurt and joy resonates with joy. These are tones that get played and strike a tone in others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Everyone has a tolerance level for how long they are willing to have attention flow elsewhere. For some it can go on for days, for others minutes. You'll be made aware of the attention needs of you and yours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). If you hide your heart, you might forget where it is, and then where would you be? If you deny your heart, then you might minimize its voice. And no one benefits from a mute heart. The best thing to do with a heart is to listen to it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Who believes in you? It should be you in the top position of that list. If not, that's OK, but you'll need to go to the you-believer who has the most points and learn a thing or two about yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Here's something to consider now, before the visiting guest starts asking about how many days to stay: houseguests and fish, after three days... pee-yew!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You have no idea how you're coming across, nor should you give much thought to this. What if you're irresistible because you haven't a clue how irresistible you are?

Quincunx Quiz Show

If only you could go where you want to go, be where you want to be, do what you want to do... but nope! So what's stopping you and why? That's the crux of the cosmic question on this day with four lunar quincunxes in a row. (A quincunx occurs when luminaries are 150 degrees apart.) Keep asking until you've identified the blockage.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTION

"How long is the Uranus retrograde going to last?"This time last month, Uranus went retrograde on the same day Jupiter went direct. Uranus will continue the backward trend until mid-January 2020. The passages of Uranus are associated with the kinds of mighty surprises that action movies rely on – volcanoes erupting, bridges breaking, oceans rising. But even Uranus recognizes that while such occurrences are part of natural life, they don't happen very often. It is our fear of such uncontrollable chaos that causes us to stuff as many catastrophic images as possible into the span of a 90-minute film and call it entertainment. The current Uranus retrograde will remind us that, as Franklin D. Roosevelt famously said, "We have nothing to fear but fear itself." Fun fact, "Uranus" was not the original name for the 7th planet from the sun. Sir William Herschel, the astronomer and musician who first discovered the planet in 1781, wisely decided to name the planet after King George III of England. (How better to honor the leader of your government and fund your scientific research as well?) So, the first name was Georgium Sidus, which translates to "George's Star." The name didn't stick. The true nature of the planet won out in the end and it was named for the powerful and tyrannical Greek god of the Heavens.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

When he's not touring the world with brass band, Grammy and Emmy award winner Harry Connick Jr. graces the silver screen in projects like the upcoming thriller "I Saw a Man with Yellow Eyes." Connick Jr. was born when Venus and Jupiter were both in Leo, the sign of the entertainer. Natal moon and Mars in Sagittarius indicate a love of travel and global appeal. Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis.com.

the new 9/11 Memorial Glade was dedicated this spring.

The tribute features six large stacks of granite inlaid with salvaged trade center steel, with a dedication "to those whose actions in our time of need led to their injury, sickness, and death." No one is named specifically.

Some 9/11 memorials elsewhere already included sickened rescue, recovery and cleanup workers, and there is a remembrance wall entirely focused on them in Nesconset, on Long Island. But those who fell ill or were injured, and their families, say having a tribute at ground zero carries special significance.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon announced Monday that its 9/11 memorial will close next week for electrical and lighting work. The project, expected to take until late May, includes repairs to lighting glitches in the shallow reflecting pools under the memorial benches.

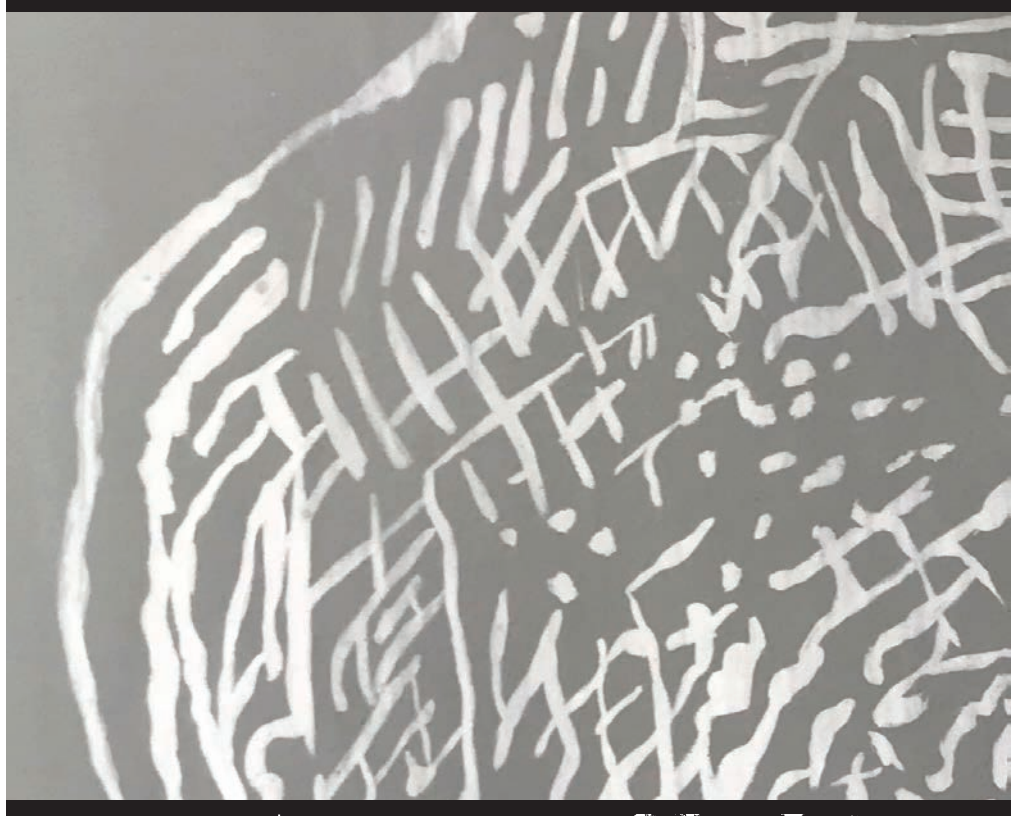

Sept. 11 is known not only as a day for remembrance and patriotism, but also as a day of service. People around the country continue to volunteer at food banks, schools, home-building projects, park cleanups and other charitable endeavors on and near the anniversary.

to another state."

But supporters say the bill includes lots safeguards to prevent that from happening. The rent caps don't apply to new construction built within the last 15 years — a provision that prompted the California Building Industry Association to drop its opposition.

Plus, the caps don't apply to single family homes, except those owned by corporations or real estate investment trusts. And duplexes where the owner lives in one of the units are also exempt.

"We all desperately want to build more housing. It was a very important aspect of this bill," Democratic Assemblyman David Chiu said.

But even some Democrats who voted for the bill on Tuesday signaled they didn't like it, a sign the bill is not guaranteed to pass. Sen. Steve Glazer, a Democrat representing a district in the San Francisco Bay area, cited a 2018 study by Stanford University showing landlords under rent control are more likely to nudge tenants out by spending less on maintenance.

"Any time you reduce the rate of return on an investment, you make that investment less attractive, and this is true even if new investment is exempted for 15 years as this bill does," he said.

But Carolyn Wilson, a 71-year-old Sacramento resident, said she needs help now. She said her rent has increased about $100 each year and her landlord just gave her a 60-day notice to move out for no reason.

"All I do is get up on the computer looking for some place to go," she said. "With my income, I can't afford anything."

invited Kendi to campus, said Derric J. Johnson, founding director of the school's year-old Equity & Justice Institute.

"We want to help the student body, parents and the community find the projects they are passionate about by bringing people to campus who are really engaged in the fight and have dedicated their lives to making change happen," Johnson said.

The lecture series, which began in February 2018, will also feature Winona LaDuke (Oct. 14), Zenon Neumark (Dec. 17), Robin DiAngelo (Mar. 4) and an environmental justice symposium (Apr. 22) during the 2019-2020 school year.

The series is open to the public and free to attend. This year's lecturers will focus on racism, hatred and environmental justice, Johnson said.

Kendi, a professor at American University and the founding director of the university's Anti-Racist Research and Policy Center, is also a bestselling author and 2019 Guggenheim Fellow. He released his latest book, How to Be an Antiracist, last month.

He spoke to a diverse audience of about 600 people Monday night about his scholarly work on racism and antiracism, which hinges on the idea that policies and people are either racist or antiracist.

Individuals across the political spectrum insist they are not racist rather than identifying as antiracist, Kendi said. But racism persists, he said, because the majority of white people do nothing to combat racist policies — which makes them racist.

"The function of racist ideas has been to get people to do nothing. Because what happens is when a person has consumed and internalized racist ideas, it causes them to look at all the racial inequities in our society and see normality," he said. "They have consumed this idea that black neighborhood are more dangerous, that black people are violent ... so when they see that 40% of the incarcerated population is black, they think it should be that way."

Kendi said white people resent being called racist because they view it as a pejorative term, an idea promoted by white nationalists like Richard Spencer.

In reality, he said, any policy or action that negatively impacts people of color is racist. Individuals can be racist by supporting some policies that hurt people of color and promote antiracism in other ways.

For example, abolitionist William Lloyd Garrison fought for emancipation but still believed black people were inferior to white people and needed to be civilized once freed. Assimilationists like Garrison have been present in every liberal and progressive movement, Kendi said.

He said while assimilationists believe people of color are not inherently inferior but are part of lesser cultures or have been rendered inferior through oppression, segregationists think people of color are born inferior.

The latter group comprises conservative factions and is more obviously racist, but both still operate on the same underlying assumption, Kendi said.

"Antiracism says no group of people are better than any other group of people in any way," he said. "We should not standardize one culture and judge every culture from that standard."

Kendi said the idea that people of color are inferior was created to justify racist policies the rich and powerful created in their own self-interest. The only way to end racism is to drive racist policymakers from power or challenge their power, he said.

Ultimately, racist policies created by wealthy white people hurt the working-class white people who support them, Kendi said, noting that working-class Republican voters don't support public healthcare because they don't want to pay taxes to help low-income people of color, even though it would improve their lives.

"This isn't just about healing and providing opportunities for all Americans equally, this is about saving America," he said.

Johnson said the ideas Kendi discussed Monday will give Crossroads students the historical context and academic vocabulary to engage in discussions about racism as the lecture series continues.

"He set the stage and created the language for a larger conversation and incorporation of these issues in the school's academics," Johnson said. "Then, we can work to get the community more engaged in work happening outside the walls of the school."
