NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

Erik K. Low, 37, was convicted of manslaughter in Salt Lake City in June for fatally shooting a friend who had just moments before given him a "wedgie." And Judy Castillo-Thomas, 29, was actually acquitted of manslaughter in July in Brooklyn, N.Y., even though she admitted accidentally stabbing her husband to death after he had beat her and taunted her for having buttocks that were "too small."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is the 255th day of 2005.
There are 110 days left in the year.

On Sept. 12, 1609, English explorer Henry Hudson sailed into the river that now bears his name.

In 1943, German paratroopers took Benito Mussolini from the hotel where he was being held by the Italian government.

In 1944, during World War II, U.S. Army troops entered Germany for the first time, near Trier.

In 1953, Massachusetts Sen. John F. Kennedy married Jacqueline Lee Bouvier in Newport, R.I.

In 1974, Emperor Haile Selassie was deposed by Ethiopia's military, after ruling for 58 years.

School officials weigh in on junk food ban

Yo, brah, these cities are so bubbles!

BY MARTHA MENDOZA

Associated Press Writer

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — Brah, the suits are acting like groms! (Translation from surf slang: My friend, government officials are acting like children!)

For about 15 years, Santa Cruz in the north and Huntington Beach in the south have both called themselves "Surf City." But late last year Huntington Beach made a legal move to trademark the name "Surf City USA" after the 1963 Jan and Dean hit.

Santa Cruz refused to be snaked.

The city filed objections. And strumming his guitar on a local cable access channel, Mayor Mike Rotkin publicly taunted Huntington Beach, musically challenging them to a surf-off: "Let's have a contest bring your sticks, but leave

Colby Evett: Santa Monica's model citizen

BY ROBERT FATURECHI

Special to the Daily Press

Colby Evett never learned how to separate business from pleasure, so he combined the two.

For nearly 60 years, he's turned a longtime passion — model airplanes — into his livelihood, selling neighborhood kids and kids-at-heart the miniature wings, engines and propellers they need to fly.

His Santa Monica store, Evett's Model Shop, is something of a childhood fantasy itself.

"This is his sanctuary," said Evett's wife, Yvonne, 71.

Suspended from the shop's ceiling are tiny fliers, all shiny and polished, of ruby red, sky blue, army olive and desert tan.

Evett — an 85-year-old with gold-rimmed glasses and a red apron — greets his customers with a warmth his regulars say keeps him in business.

Fabian Lewkowicz/Daily Press

Colby Evett has operated his hobby store, Evett's Model Shop, at 1636 Ocean Park Boulevard for nearly 60 years.

"I've been able to stay because I don't need a profit anymore to stay," Evett said. "I just enjoy working with my people."

For almost six decades, Evett's Model Shop has survived rising rent, thinning interest in the hobby and the pop-up of mega-sized franchise hobby stores that more often than not put mom-and-pop joints like Evett's to rest.

"It's the last of its breed,"

Yvonne said. "There's no more hobby shops around."

THE UNDERDOG

It's just a five minute drive from Evett's.

Cleanup needed at beach

By Daily Press staff

The 21st annual California Coastal Cleanup Day is part of an international environmental cleanup event with various activities taking place in 90 countries and all 50 states. The city of Santa Monica hosts six beach sites and a dive/kayak site. The call for volunteers reaches far and wide as buses will assist in bringing inland volunteers to the coast. This year, the Pacific American Volunteer Association — headquartered in Koreatown — plans to bring more than 2,000 volunteers for the beach cleanup at tower 22. In addition to the cleanup, they have arranged for a kite flying contest for the young volunteers followed by a drawing and essay contest.

Time Inc.'s Coastal Living Magazine has teamed up with Heal the Bay and the city of Santa Monica, and will be offering free gift bags to the first 1,000 volunteers on site.

City Hall has issued a request for proposals that opens the bidding process for the sites currently occupied by Perry's Beach Cafe and Rentals, four beach concession stands that have been a trademark of Santa Monica for more than 25 years. Officials say it's all part of a basic, legal procedure that ensures the best possible mix of businesses in Santa Monica; the owner of Perry's contends the request invites large food-service chains to sweep away his company.

So this week, Q-line wants to know, "What business(es) would you like to see in the space currently occupied by Perry's stands? Should things stay as they are, or would you like to see a change?"

A new approach

Art Chesluk
Santa Monica

Learn from Hurricane Katrina

Editor:

After having watched with shock and concern the occurrences in New Orleans the last several days, I was absolutely embarrassed by my country's government.

It was distasteful to listen and read about the disorganization, lack of planning and ineptness of the efforts by FEMA and Homeland Security.

As the richest, most powerful nation in the world, it came to light that bureaucracy, red tape, rules and procedural roadblocks have become more important than the aiding of a devastated region.

Yes, this was a natural event that was made more horrific by the failure of man-made levees which collapsed in the face of the force of nature.

Yes, the breadth was not expected for devastation over a three-state area in the Gulf Coast. But, it was truly a "bush league" effort for a major league problem.

The more I watched the problems, I came to the realization that we are alone when it comes to natural or manmade catastrophes. I personally have no idea where to go if a disaster occurred here in Santa Monica.

Who do I contact? Where do I go? Where do I get food? Where do I get water? What emergency service can I expect? And lastly, who runs the show? Does Santa Monica have any plans?

We live in an area that can be devastated within moments with absolutely no warning or preparation. An "8.0" earthquake could hit, and we would be without any civic services, phones, Internet, power, communication devices or other everyday methods of information processing services.

What New Orleans has taught is that we are alone for about three days. Some 85,000 citizens cannot expect FEMA to just show up and organize us and provide aid. So, here is the challenge.

Santa Monica, what are our plans? Do we have bottled water for the citizens stored someplace? Who is the "disaster czar" to organize the temporary relief effort?

If we are homeless, where do we go? Do we wander to the high school or the community college?

Who makes the call to the governor, president, FEMA or other relief agencies? Who do I listen to?

I have three days of water and food, as well as emergency cat food. Assuming there's a devastating earthquake and I can't get to the closet with the supplies, do I rely on the local grocery stores?

A look through the Santa Monica Web site reveals very good information about personal preparation by linking to Web sites such as FEMA. Basically they say to have water, food and a radio. What about "community preparedness?"

I found no information other than reference to FEMA and its information pamphlets. I am proposing that we in Santa Monica make these plans.

Budget a preparedness scheme and tell the citizens what the specifics are. Create a model of who is the "disaster czar" for Santa Monica and lay out the responsibilities. Store the water, minimum food and first aid supplies for the three-day lag before the national or state governments bring their disorganization.

If there are no current plans, City Council, appoint a commission, make the plans and carry them out. Put the plans on the back of everyone's Santa Monica library card so we can all know that Santa Monica will never be another New Orleans.

Andrew Zanger
Santa Monica

Unlike South, we're prepared for disaster

You've probably been watching Hurricane Katrina events in horror as they unfold in the deep South.

The state of readiness and disaster preparedness in New Orleans is a far cry from what we have in Santa Monica. I can say with a great deal of confidence that we're ready when disaster strikes.

Mistakes were made before, during and after Hurricane Katrina from the top down. But, it is the city of New Orleans and the state of Louisiana that shoulder the major responsibility for not being prepared, and not reacting to a bad situation in an effective and timely manner.

Here, in Santa Monica, years of disaster planning already are in place. It's the responsibility of the city's emergency service's coordinator, Paul Weinberg, to coordinate emergency activities within the city.

There are a number of elements to the city's disaster plan. Earthquake, tsunami, terrorist events and fire all have their own unique set of conditions that need to be addressed. The locations of shelters and service centers is dictated by the type of disaster. For example, in the case of a tsunami warning, emergency services would not be set up in the low lying coastal area of Ocean Park.

Weinberg said the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) requires municipalities and governmental jurisdictions, including school districts, to file a detailed report on emergency preparedness and management called a "Local Hazard Mitigation Plan."

"They want a solid, workable plan that would identify hazards, hazard mitigation and the steps that would be taken to address and correct problems and ensure public well being," said Weinberg. "Failure to submit a report that meets their approval could result in being excluded from FEMA aid and assistance."

In the case of New Orleans, not using the mass transit available to evacuate some 100,000 people who didn't or couldn't drive or were too old, sick or otherwise unable to evacuate themselves was a major contributor to the misery and death toll.

"Here, we have a fleet of city busses and flat bed trucks from public works that would be pressed into service immediately if that need should arise," Weinberg said.

The city has an Emergency Operations Center (EOC) that can be convened in a few minutes time. The EOC meets in the new public safety facility and includes city department heads such as transportation, communications, public works, police, fire, finance and administration. Outside representatives include the Santa Monica chapter of the Red Cross, Los Angeles County responders, representatives from utility companies, the medical community and others.

"Each one knows their functions and what has to be done," Weinberg said. "There is a chain of command, and everyone is contacted either by phone, cell phone or satellite phone. Amateur (ham) radio operated by the private citizen members of Disaster Communications Services (DCS) is our back-up."

The EOC is only activated when emergency activity is expected to continue for extended periods of time or have multiple events, such as earthquakes with aftershocks. Response levels are determined by whether the emergency is a low-, mid- or high-level event. County, state or federal responders would be brought in as needed.

"Police and fire personnel, medical help, serious medical emergencies and VIPs could be ferried in and out of Santa Monica Airport by private pilots in the Emergency Volunteer Air Corps (EVAC), a volunteer organization under the wing of the fire department consisting of local pilots with small planes," added Weinberg. "Their mission is to bring and take people wherever we need them."

The Santa Monica Red Cross chapter has cots, food, water, blankets and other emergency supplies warehoused at its chapter on 11th street, as well as additional supplies stored in metal containers around town. Its "Disaster Action Team" consisting of trained local volunteers—who also are available to go anywhere in the country to work disasters—is on call 24/7 and knows to report for assignments in emergencies.

The chapter has existing arrangements with schools, the city and Santa Monica College to use gyms, activity rooms or other spaces for shelter operations and emergency outreach. In addition, the local Red Cross can receive immediate back-up from surrounding chapters, the entire Pacific service region and even from the national organization depending on the need.

The local hospitals also are involved, and have plans for providing immediate and effective medical care in an emergency.

"Because of the 1994 Northridge Earthquake and working with local wild-fires, we have a great deal of experience dealing with disasters," Weinberg said. "We have a solid working relationship with LA County and other jurisdictions for mutual aid and service. We—including police and fire—train and work with each other all the time."

The best preparation for disaster is to be "self prepared."

Many Santa Monicans already have emergency preparedness training. The fire department has offered citizens free Disaster Area Response Training (DART) for years. The next class is scheduled for early December. Call (310) 458-8686 for information. Many Santa Monicans have also taken Community Emergency Response Team (CERT) training offered by Los Angeles city and county fire departments.

Have a family disaster plan, which includes enough food in cans that doesn't need cooking, drinkable water, first aid kit, flashlights and extra batteries and other supplies for at least four days. The city and the local Red Cross chapter have brochures and information on disaster preparedness as well as information on the Web.

COMMENTARY

Government throwing the public under the bus

COMMON SENTS

BY CAROLE ORLIN

Sunday marked the four-year anniversary of 9-11. For those of us who are old enough to remember back at least to the 1960s, we have lived through four decades of life after the assassination of our national leader John F. Kennedy. Until 9/11, I felt that Nov. 23, 1963, would be the defining historical moment of my lifetime. Then came Sept. 11, 2001. I think that we all immediately recognized that life was never going to be the same for us, for our children and for our grandchildren.

Although life after 9/11 would not and could not be the same as life prior to the attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C. (ironically the former being the city where I grew up, and the latter being the city where I worked for more than 25 years prior to coming to Santa Monica), I was able to see this country coming together in a positive, patriotic fashion. I saw an elected leader take charge after 9/11 in Mayor Rudy Giuliani. I even saw our president, at least for a short period of time, look and sound like a leader. Then, we seemed to be led down a road to an indefinite "war on terrorism" with a starting push in Afghanistan, and a complicated and increasingly unpopular war in Iraq. We have seen ourselves become financially tied to a national Department of Homeland Security, with a commitment to make our country and its citizens more secure and prepared to deal with a multitude of frightening, terrorist scenarios from biological to nuclear weapons, from unprecedented airline security measures to a myriad of changes in the laws that were enacted after 9/11 under the USA Patriot Act of 2001.

We watched last November the reelection of our president with the red states once again trumping the blue states. Then, as we watched our political leaders of both parties and at all levels struggle ineffectively with escalating energy costs, we had Mother Nature take hold and rock us on a local, regional and national level. We have all been watching in horror the handling — or mishandling — of Hurricane Katrina over the last couple of weeks. For me, the most upsetting issue has been the lack of real leadership. When it was clear that the local officials were not able to act swiftly and decisively to provide aid to a large population (spanning three states), who were in need of water, food, medical care and temporary shelter, the president needed to authorize and direct a Giuliani-type leader to take charge. The lack of a coordinated effort of government to react to a significant crisis, after all of the time, effort and money that have been expended since 9/11, is simply unacceptable. It was as if the famous seven-minute "freeze" by President Bush after the World Trade Center attacks turned into days of a similar "freeze" after Hurricane Katrina struck the Gulf Coast. It reminds me of hearing my parents' old line: "If we can land a man on the moon, why can't we do x, y or z?"

If government is unable to protect us or assist us in times of widespread emergencies like a biological or chemical attack, or natural disasters arising from hurricanes or earthquakes, tell us that and help us prepare ourselves. I know that Katrina seems to be teaching us many lessons. My confidence in Homeland Security is definitely shaken, as I look at the Katrina disaster as the first real test since 9/11 and see it as a terrible failure. I had been hoping that the billions of dollars that have been devoted to Homeland Security were at least making all of us somewhat safer. Now I am left to wonder what has been really happening. Furthermore, we have been witnessing an ineffective effort at the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), under the direction of its beleaguered head, Michael Brown. The lesson once again, which our presidents from both parties never seem to learn, points to the high stakes of cronyism. If you are going to select a friend to assist you in a position of power and responsibility, it is critical to ensure that such a selection be overly qualified and highly competent. Apparently, President Bush appears to have not done his homework with regard to Mr. Brown.

As an observer of politics since a very young child growing up in New York, and watching the elections of Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Carter, Reagan, Bush I, Clinton and Bush II, I keep asking whether the two candidates that run every four years are the best that the country has to offer. With the stakes so high, can we not figure out a better system to permit us to choose from the very best?

New bills slated to go into effect July 2007

Advocates claim big changes are coming to California's public schools after two bills were passed on Tuesday intended to limit the amount of junk food and soda available on campuses statewide.

Meanwhile, Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District officials said there may be more grease to the legislation than grit, since the food they provide local students may already comply with the proposed reforms.

The two bills, SB12 and SB965, reflect efforts already undertaken by some school districts — including the SMMUSD — that make lunches and snacks healthier by setting limits on the amount of sugar and fat sold in food during school hours.

Both bills have the support of Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who is expected to sign them this week during a fitness summit that will focus on health, nutrition and obesity.

SMMUSD officials said they don't have hard numbers on how many of their students are obese, but a report released two years ago by Santa Monica College indicates the local health picture may not be pretty.

In 1999, an estimated 61 percent of adults were overweight in the United States, along with 13 percent of adolescents. Obesity among adults has doubled since 1980, while the number of overweight adolescents has tripled.

Currently, it's believed 130 million Americans, or two-thirds of the population, are overweight or obese. By contrast, obesity in other industrialized nations is lower, averaging 10 to 12 percent in Europe. The health problems related to the growing girth of Americans are fairly well-known — more heart disease, diabetes and other weight-related ailments that send 300,000 Americans to an "early grave" every year, according to SMC's report, derived from information issued by the Surgeon General.

The two bills passed last week would allow junk food and soda to be sold at school club meetings and sporting events. They don't apply to foods that students bring from home or that are given away in the classroom.

Nothing in the bills prevents students from strolling to off-campus fast-food joints, and the laws, if they go into effect, would only apply to high school students; the state has already banned the sale of junk food and soda in elementary and middle schools.

Meanwhile, local school officials are hesitant to discuss the bill until they see it in its finalized form. Orlando Griego, food services director for the district, said there have been many attempts in the past to regulate food consumption among students — some that have been successful and others that haven't.

However, Griego said aspects about the current bills already seem to be confusing the public.

The purpose of the legislation is to restrict the consumption of sugar and fat, but it doesn't necessarily mean popular foods would no longer be available for students, Griego said. In a recent report, it was indicated that the legislation would mean French fries would no longer be available in high school.

Griego said that was a misnomer. The key to what students may be allowed to eat might in many cases have to do with how the food is prepared.

"French fries that are fried would likely be banned, but you may still be able to bake them," Griego said. "I think the best thing we can do is take a look at the final bills and ask our food providers what they can do to make sure we are in compliance."

DISTRICT BALANCES HEALTH WITH CHOICE

As the fight to improve the health of young people continues statewide, SMMUSD officials said they have been taking their own measures to provide healthy alternatives for hungry students.

Santa Monica high schools provide a "well-balanced" lunch menu, Griego said. Meals offered each week — from spaghetti to sandwiches — are required to have less than 35 percent fat and sugar content by weight. These restrictions are measured as an average over a month-long period. Likewise, the district offers it students more than one third of the daily average of vitamin C and calcium recommended by the Food and Drug Administration.

However, cafeteria meals are not students' only choice; high school students are allowed to leave campus for lunch.

Each high school also has the option to contract with nearby food establishments. Hence, the district has contracts with McDonald's, Papa John's and Taco Bell.

However, the number of bagels, hamburgers, pizzas and burritos these vendors provide is limited, and the food managers for the district's three high schools determine what to order, based on student demand, Griego said.

Current contract information for this year wasn't available. However, in the 2002-03 school year, annual contracts were awarded to Papa John's for $50,000, McDonald's for $33,000, Taco Bell for $33,000 and Pizza Hut for $15,000. The district also awarded a $30,000 contract for cookies, $23,000 for bagels, $10,000 for its "Slush Puppie" machine and a $6,000 contract for frozen yogurt.

When selling these foods to students, the district adds a slight mark-up to recoup the costs of service. One-year contracts with the vendors generate about $95,000 in revenue for the district, according to school records.

On a similar note, operating snack and soda vending machines has proven to be a very popular way for some departments to raise money that would otherwise not be available. For example, vending machines run by the Samohi athletic department raised $30,000 in 2001 to buy athletic equipment and new uniforms.

Although high schools aren't required to do so, Samohi has a vending machine that offers only 50 percent carbonated drinks — the rest is milk, water and juice.

Santa Monica is far ahead of the state on serving nutritious meals to its elementary and middle school students. For nearly 10 years, snack foods and carbonated beverages have not been sold in any of those schools, though children are allowed to bring them from home. Only in 2001 did the California Senate pass a law establishing those same rules statewide.

On the other side of the food spectrum, Samohi has had a salad bar in its cafeteria since 1997. The salad bar's fruits and vegetables come from the farmers' market.

It has become increasingly popular. At its inception, about 30 students took advantage of its meals daily. Currently, hundreds of students choose the salad bar over the regular lunch menu, said Dona Richwine, the district's nutritionist.

Richwine said approximately $25,000 in grants from the city of Santa Monica has allowed the district to expand the salad program. Now, students are growing many of the fruits and vegetables in school gardens, which are being tied in with health education.

"We hope the gardens and nutrition courses will increase the consumption at the salad bar," Richwine said.

KNOW BEFORE YOU GO

“Know before you go” is a weekly update on construction projects throughout Santa Monica. Here is a run-down of this week’s construction projects initiated by City Hall:

Marine Street utility undergrounding

Relocation and undergrounding of electric, phone and cable facilities on Marine Street, between Lincoln Boulevard and Prospect Court. Parking limitations will be posted daily, and detours may be announced as necessary.

Cingular telecommunications lines

Cingular is installing telecommunication lines on San Vicente Boulevard from 17th to 19th streets; San Vicente Boulevard from Fourth Street to 100 feet west of Fourth Street; and Fourth Street from San Vicente Boulevard to alley south of San Vicente Boulevard. There will be detours around the work areas.

Civic Center parking structure

Construction continues on a new 900-space Civic Center public parking structure, located on Fourth Street next to the Public Safety Facility. Construction will require the closure of Avenida Mazatlan and the Fourth Street sidewalk. One lane on southbound Fourth Street is subject to closure while work is occurring. There also may be delays entering the Civic Center parking lot from Fourth Street. Use the Main Street entrance.

Electrical vault installation

Southern California Edison will be installing an underground vault in Santa Monica Boulevard at Seventh Court. There will be detours around work areas. Follow posted signs.

Gas Company main replacement

Southern California Gas Company is replacing a 4-inch main on Ocean Park Boulevard between 14th and 18th street; San Vicente Boulevard, between 17th and 16th streets; 17th Street, between San Vicente Boulevard and Georgina Avenue; Georgina Avenue, between 17th Street and 16th Street; and 16th Street, between San Vicente Boulevard and Georgina Avenue. There will be detours around work areas. Follow posted signs.

Main Library

Construction is underway on the new main library, located at 601 Santa Monica Blvd. During construction, visit the temporary library at 1324 Fifth St. or any of the branch libraries. There is currently no sidewalk access on Santa Monica Boulevard, Sixth Street and Seventh Street adjacent to the project.

Memorial and Los Amigos Park building replacement

Demolition of existing park buildings and construction of new restrooms, concession stands and storage buildings. Park buildings will be inaccessible during construction. Memorial Park is located at Olympic Boulevard and 14th Street, and Los Amigos Park is located at Fifth Street and Hollister Avenue.

On-Fiber Telecommunications lines

On-Fiber is installing telecommunication lines on 26th Street from north of Colorado Boulevard to Pennsylvania Street. There may be detours around the work area along Pennsylvania Street, from 26th to Stewart streets.

Street and park lighting project

Work continues on upgrading street lighting with new fixtures and circuits. The contractor is installing new poles and lights. Construction for the project occurs in the sidewalk areas and may impact pedestrians, vehicles and park visitors. Parking restrictions also will be in place immediately adjacent to the work areas. The work is currently scheduled to occur on 23rd Street from Santa Monica Boulevard to Arizona Avenue; California Avenue from Second to 7th streets; and Ocean Avenue from Montana to California avenues; as well as Marine, Clover and Douglas Parks.

Seismic retrofit of parking structure no. 5

Seismic retrofitting is underway on parking structure 5 on Fourth Street, between Broadway and Santa Monica Boulevard. The project will bring the structure to current code requirements and enable it to better withstand future earthquakes. Additional work will improve access for those with disabilities. During construction, the parking structure will remain in full operation, and plenty of parking will be available. However, there may be some added congestion around the entrances and exits.

Traffic signal upgrade

The transportation management division is upgrading traffic signals on Ocean Park Boulevard at Cloverfield Boulevard and at 23rd Street. There will be detours around the work area. However, the contractor will maintain at a minimum one lane in each direction on all streets. For information on this project, call (310) 458-4982.

Virginia Avenue Park

Major renovations at the park, located at the corner of Pico and Cloverfield boulevards. Renovations are expected to continue through fall 2005. The park is closed. This project also includes construction of new turning lanes, traffic signals, striping, and irrigation and landscaping on Cloverfield and Pico boulevards, adjacent to the park.

Mom-and-pop hobby shops a rarity than a decade ago, Evett’s sales have taken a big hit.

“There are a lot of hobby shops that want to shut competition down,” said Adrian Franco, the manager at Hobby People’s West Los Angeles branch. “But a small store will never overcome a franchise, just too much buying power.

“They’ll pretty much go out of business before we will.”

Franchises like Hobby People cut out the middle man, buying in bulk and slashing prices far closer to cost than smaller shops can afford.

“An average small shop maybe at the max can buy four items, whereas we buy in bulk,” Franco said. “Twenty-one locations, 21 times, 10 big pieces each. That’s a greater buying power.”

Some say franchise customers are trading experienced customer service for price cuts.

“It’s like Wal-mart. They’re the wholesalers, and they’re supposed to be selling to me, but they’re selling to the public,” Evett said. “They can cut my throat.”

Evett’s managed to stay afloat by changing the way he does business.

Instead of shooting for big item sales — a niche the franchises have taken over — Evett sells the little things like replacement valves, igniters and tiny fuel tanks.

He’s had to expand his clientele, too.

Instead of just catering to hobbyists like he used to, Evett now sells to local art students in need of balsa wood — a lightweight material used in model airplanes, as well as sculptures.

“I’ve become a small hardware store for people looking for little bits and pieces or paint,” Evett said.

His adaptability and modest needs have allowed Evett to stay in business so long his model shop has become one of the oldest businesses in Santa Monica — and virtually the only mom-and-pop hobby shop left in the region.

More than anything, Evett attributes his longevity to the way he treats his customers.

“So many of my customers are friends,” Evett said.

HIS PASSION

It all started at the county fair.

Evett, enamored after hearing word of Charles Lindbergh’s flight across the Atlantic, gathered pine stove wood, made boards and put together his first model airplane.

Evett won the blue ribbon and hasn’t looked back since.

Though he no longer flies his models since he had eye surgery, the passion is still with him.

“People all have things they like to do,” Evett said. “Like maybe a guy likes golfing, but he has to work at something else he doesn’t like in order to pay for his hobby. I was able to do the thing I like to do, and I’ve been doing it now for 57 years.”

Originally from a little town in South Carolina — where he married his childhood sweetheart, Mary — Evett eventually wound up in the Naval air service.

His love for planes may have saved his life.

Because Evett had a strong background in aviation, he worked on a repair unit that patched up carrier-based warplanes in the Pacific through four years of war — a job that kept him out of the line of fire.

“Fortunately I never got out into the rough stuff. Nobody wanted to get shot at or killed if they could help it,” Evett said. “I got to work with airplanes. It’s what I wanted to do.”

After the war, Evett and his wife settled in Santa Monica, where they both worked at the Douglas Aircraft factory, then located on Ocean Park Boulevard.

Though Evett’s wife started out as a “Rosie the Riveter,” she soon left the factory to start her own model airplane shop, at the same site still standing today.

After a few years, business boomed and Evett decided to leave the factory to work full-time at the shop. And he still can’t get enough of his job.

Though Evett says he’s been financially able to retire for years, he comes into work seven days a week, including this past Labor Day.

“Now it’s just peaches and cream as far as I’m concerned,” Evett said.

A GENERATION GAP

John Marot, 52, first came to Evett’s hoping to get his son into model airplanes.

So the Santa Monica resident bought his 11-year-old the same USS Arizona that he had in the third grade.

Things didn’t take off like he planned. “So far he hasn’t bit,” Marot said. “He’d probably rather watch SpongeBob.”

Instead of introducing his son to the hobby, Marot built the plane himself, rekindling a childhood passion in the process.

Marot’s situation isn’t uncommon, as interest in model airplanes has waned among today’s youth.

“They spend too much time on their damn computer games,” Evett said. “It would be so much better if they learned how to use their hands or if they got out into the fresh air and chased something.”

Most model airplane hobbyists today are adults, many of whom were first introduced to the craft as children.

Because many of the older hobbyists no longer have the time to spend months on end piecing together models, ready-made sets have become more popular.

An influx of almost fully assembled model planes from China has changed the hobby of making models, offering customers a rock-bottom price and a quick fix.

“Planning was half the fun. Now the airplanes are coming in from China,” Evett said. “Instead of the guy gluing on all the bits and pieces, he glues on wings and a tail. They’re losing all the fun of building something and actually seeing something take shape.”

Though even Evett can’t deny the craftsmanship of the Chinese pieces, some serious hobbyists have rejected the new breed, instead choosing to build their planes piece by piece the old fashioned way.

“The ones that are made in China, they come in a package. One piece breaks, and your set is useless,” said 45-year-old Rico Lubrico, a hobbyist who stopped by Evett’s to pick up some parts for his F-27 Stryker.

A FAMILY AFFAIR

Yvonne and Evett are relative newlyweds.

The pair’s been together not even 10 years, but they complement one another as if they’d been together for decades.

And they met by chance.

Yvonne, a home health worker, watched over a married couple that Evett and his first wife often visited.

After Evett’s wife died, he visited alone, slowly building a friendship with Yvonne in the process. Then the other couple passed away — first the husband, then the wife.

That night Yvonne called Evett to let him know the news. Evett responded with an invitation to dinner that would change both of their lives.

“I keep telling her I need someone to take care of me, but I’m too tight to hire her so I married her,” Evett said.

Though Yvonne still cares for one patient, she spends most of her time at the shop, helping customers and keeping Evett company.

She claims to not know much about planes, but quite often she responds to customer queries with the deft of a wily hobbyist.

The couple gives the shop a family feel that makes many of Evett’s customers regulars.

“Very cozy, very family oriented, low key, pleasant all around,” rekindled hobbyist Marot said.

Celebrating success in homelessness fight

By Daily Press staff

Much is discussed in Santa Monica about the homeless population, but rarely is it about the success stories of people getting off the streets and learning how to be self sufficient.

On Sept. 23, “Celebrating Success: From Homelessness to Self Sufficiency & Healthy Lives” Tenth Annual Breakfast and Awards Ceremony will be all about the people who have been lifted out of homelessness with the help of local service providers.

The event will honor 25 previously homeless individuals who have made changes in their lives, and will recognize seven organizations and businesses that have contributed to the Westside Shelter and Hunger Coalition, its member social service agencies and their clients. The city of Santa Monica will be recognized for its leadership to end homelessness.

The breakfast will be held from 7:30 a.m. to 8 a.m., with the awards program starting at 8 a.m. The outdoor event will be held at Bergamot Station, 2525 Michigan Ave., and the emcee will be Wendie Malick, award-winning actress and humanitarian. The benefactor is Saint John’s Health Center and the patrons are The Richard F. and Eleanor W. Dwyer Fund, Kehillat Israel, the Parish of St. Matthew and St. Monica Parish Community.

The cost is $30 per person, or $300 for a table of 10. Seats are limited and depending on availability on event day, the cost is $40 per person at the door. Call (310) 314-0071, or log onto success@westsideshelter.org for more information.

The Westside Shelter and Hunger Coalition is a group of more than 30 social service providers, faith congregations and supporting organizations committed to ending homelessness through service coordination, public education and advocacy.

The coalition members have worked together for more than 20 years to provide a continuum of care for homeless and low-income individuals and families. They have built an infrastructure that serves the needs of the many sub-groups of the homeless population including veterans, battered women, families and individuals with mental illness, drug or alcohol addiction, or AIDS.

Pop a squat

Fabian Lewkowicz/Daily Press

Robert Speno, of Lake Wood, Calif., won the squat competition in the 308-pound class at the United States Power Lifting Federation contest, which was held at Venice Beach on Saturday. Speno weighed in at 276 pounds and squatted 716 pounds.

Songwriter: Huntington Beach should be the real 'Surf City'

your lawyers with their trademark tricks."

Now, the state has gotten involved.

State Sen. Joe Simitian proposed a resolution declaring that since Santa Cruz "is well known around the world as a center of a precious, but hard to define 'surf culture'" it should be designated by the state Legislature as "Surf City USA."

The resolution was approved by a committee, despite objections from Huntington Beach's Sen. John Campbell who harkened back to the original lyrics.

"I've done some research," he said. "Neither city has 'two girls for every boy,' so neither should be Surf City."

Doug Traub, president and chief executive officer of the Huntington Beach Conference and Visitor's Bureau, said the resolution was totally uncool.

"We're talking about an attempt to strip a business of its intellectual property which it obtained in good faith and this is a clear interference in our business relationships," he said.

Traub notes that his community is only seeking the specific "Surf City USA" trademark so it can market itself as "Huntington Beach Surf City USA." It's not, he stressed, asking for the simple "Surf City" which is already used by dozens of businesses in both cities — from Surf City Produce in Santa Cruz to Surf City Instruments in Huntington Beach.

Dean Torrence, who wrote and sang the song in the first place, said he's backing his hometown — Huntington Beach.

"I co-wrote the song and I'm really loaning the song and song title to Huntington Beach," he said. "I'm not loaning it to Santa Cruz. Sure, Santa Cruz is cool, but it's not Surf City, USA. I've been there, I went to the beach, and I didn't see anyone surfing."

In fact, surfers in Santa Cruz rarely paddle out from the beach. Instead, surfers there scramble, in their wetsuits, down narrow staircases and trails built into the rocky cliffs and then jump — with their boards — into the water.

In this liberal community, about 100 miles south of San Francisco, the sandy beaches are separated by steep escarpments, and the surf spots are at a series of points including the world famous "Steamer Lane." Paddling in the cold waters of the Monterey Bay (temperatures hover in the mid-50s), Santa Cruz surfers look back to shore and see redwoods in the distance.

Huntington Beach, 400 miles to the south and in the heart of politically conservative Orange County, is edged by about eight miles of wide, classic, sandy beach lined with bike paths and walkways. Surfers can hit the water just about anywhere, although the legendary pier certainly has the cleanest and most reliable break. The city itself, with a population of 190,000, is almost four times as big as Santa Cruz, with an average family household income exceeding $100,000, twice that of Santa Cruz.

The water in Huntington Beach, surfers will be quick to point out, is usually about 10 degrees warmer than in Santa Cruz. But the waves, which break on the beach, are simply smaller than the Northern California swells that can grow monstrous in the winter.

Both cities have major surf industry companies, dozens of surfing contests, surf statues and lots of sunshine.

"This is a silly argument," said Ben Marcus, an author and former editor of Surfer magazine. "Why not just call it Surf City North and Surf City South?"

Silly, yes. But nothing new.

In 1907, real estate and railroad magnate Henry Huntington, the founder of Huntington Beach, hired Hawaiian surfer George Freeth to come give demonstrations of the ancient Polynesian sport as a promotion for the Redondo-Los Angeles Railway. Freeth thus earned the title of "The First Man to Surf in California." The title was contested, however, by residents in Santa Cruz who said that in 1885, three Hawaiian princes visiting Santa Cruz rode waves at the mouth of the San Lorenzo River on boards shaped from local redwood.

How to settle the dispute, once and for all? The surfers themselves have an idea.

They're planning a competition between man-and-woman teams from each city. The trophy will go on display in the winning team's City Council chambers for the year they win, and they'll get a free year's supply of Surf City Coffee (from Santa Cruz) for their council meetings.

Not even entering the fray are Surf City, N.C., and Surf City, N.J.

"We're not Surf City USA. We have never claimed to be Surf City USA. We are Surf City, N.C., and that's all we're worried about," said Patty Arnold, the city clerk there.

The mayor of New Jersey's Surf City, Leonard Connors, just laughed.

"We were founded in 1690," he said. "California wasn't even a state. There's no doubt whatsoever, the real Surf City USA is right here on the East Coast."

Relocation bringing drastic life changes

BY MICHELLE LOCKE
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — California knows the lash of nature’s fury, from earthquake, fire and flood, so it’s no surprise cities from San Francisco to San Diego rushed to offer shelter to victims of Hurricane Katrina.

Official relocation plans were put on hold this week after federal officials said many survivors were reluctant to fly all the way to the West Coast. But hundreds of Katrina refugees have arrived anyway, emblematic of the piecemeal planning that has characterized disaster relief.

“The story of Katrina is a new plan every hour, and a new plan every hour equals no plan,” said Jorja Leap, who has worked with refugee populations overseas and teaches in UCLA’s Department of Social Welfare.

One planning problem is sticker shock as the relocated encounter the Golden State’s platinum cost of living.

“We’ve kind of opened our arms unconditionally to refugees without, I’m sorry to say, thinking through the emotional and the economic impact on both populations,” Leap said. “Everybody really does want to help. This is a wonderful response to have. But the question is, Where will we be six months down the line?”

Or in some cases, six days. San Diego businessman David Perez chartered a plane to fly in 79 people, saying the federal response was too slow. The survivors were being put up in the waterfront Hyatt hotel — one of San Diego’s most luxurious — at the hotel’s expense, until they were forced out Friday morning because the rooms were booked. The Red Cross then moved them to a less glamorous hotel nearby.

“We’re winging it,” said Michael Nacht, dean of the Goldman School of Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley. “Each day, new issues and challenges present themselves.”

Despite word from FEMA Wednesday that no refugees would be sent far beyond the Gulf Coast states for now, California, Oregon and Washington were keeping their doors open. In California, 3,855 refugees have registered with FEMA, according to the agency’s regional spokesman in Oakland, William L. Rukheyser. Of those, 3,465 are from Louisiana, 381 from Mississippi and nine are from Alabama.

In Southern California alone, an unofficial tally of hurricane evacuees provided by private agencies and centers averaged 2,500 people on Friday.

“It started Friday night as a trickle and by Monday we had an amazing deluge,” said H.T. Linke, director of communications for American Red Cross of Greater Los Angeles.

In terms of cost of living, bringing Katrina survivors to California seems ill-advised — it costs about 54 percent more for two parents with one child to live in San Francisco than New Orleans, according to the Economic Policy Institute, a Washington, D.C.-based think tank. In Los Angeles, it’s 26 percent more.

San Francisco residents offering housing to storm refugees caution that one-bedroom apartments run $1,500 a month and gas in the city rose above $3 a gallon well before Katrina. Warned one Web posting offering temporary shelter: “San Francisco is a wonderful city to relocate to, but the cost of living is high and jobs aren’t plentiful.”

But bringing refugees to a city like San Francisco makes sense in other ways, said Arindrajit Dube, a research economist with Berkeley’s Institute of Industrial Relations.

“The story of Katrina is a new plan every hour, and a new plan every hour equals no plan.”

JORJA LEAP
UCLA’s Department of Social Welfare

The area has wealthy residents who can be more generous, he said. Wages are higher — San Francisco has a minimum wage of $8.62, 67 percent higher than the federal minimum of $5.15 — and there’s growth in restaurant and hospitality jobs of the kind worked by many low-income residents of tourist-dependent New Orleans.

In Los Angeles, refugees were being housed at the nonprofit Dream Center. Fund-raising supervisor Matthew Wheeler said the center is fully staffed with church volunteers and employees from federal agencies such as the Social Security Administration and FEMA, and that if its evacuees still need it after six months, the center would look into providing more long term housing.

“We’ve committed to helping them get back on their feet, whatever it takes,” he said. “We’re not going to say, ‘Here you are, now you have to find an apartment and pay $1,400 a month.’”

But to get settled in sprawling LA, refugees were going to need transportation, which could be problematic.

“For these folks, cars are just essential,” said Evelyn Blumenberg, an associate professor of public planning at UCLA who has studied the link between public transport and low-wage workers’ job hunts.

Darren Fountain, 33, and fiancée Teaaka Burton, 28, are determined to make their futures in California. They were among the first to arrive at the Dream Center, along with Teakka’s children, 6-year-old Terrica and 1-year-old Jarmal.

“We can do this,” said Fountain. “We know it costs a lot to live here but that won’t stop us from starting over. It’s going to be a struggle anywhere we live.”

Leap, who worked with refugees in Kosovo and Bosnia, suggested California needs a task force led by someone with red tape-cutting ability, a six- to 18-month plan — and a budget.

“This is what I think of as the second loss, the second wounding,” she said. “First there is this hurricane and this catastrophe and the crisis of being evacuated and then it’s like, ‘OK, where am I now?’”

Bills headed for vetoes in ‘year of wasted opportunities’

BY STEVE LAWRENCE

Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO — California lawmakers approved hundreds of bills in the last days of a contentious 2005 session that the Senate’s leader nevertheless called “a year of wasted opportunities.”

Many of the biggest measures are headed for vetoes, including bills that would allow gay marriages and let illegal immigrants have driver’s licenses. And a massive effort to promote solar energy use was left on the negotiating table when the Assembly and Senate adjourned late Thursday night, a day earlier than they were scheduled to depart.

Lawmakers and Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger managed to avoid another lengthy deadlock over a state budget this year. They also resolved a dispute over how to pay for a new eastern span of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge.

But they couldn’t reach compromises on a number of other issues, including the spending limit, redistricting and teacher probation measures the Republican governor is backing in the Nov. 8 special election.

That failure seemed to add to an increasingly partisan atmosphere around the Capitol.

“We are on a path to one of the most divisive political campaigns that California has ever seen,” Assembly Speaker Fabian Nunez, D-Los Angeles, said Friday.

Senate President Pro Tem Don Perata, D-Oakland, said Schwarzenegger’s threat in January to schedule the election if lawmakers didn’t pass his proposals dimmed the chances to resolve a number of issues, including improving transportation and flood control.

“Everything after that became attack and counterattack,” he said. “We had very modest achievements when I think we could have had significant changes, large down-payments on years of neglect. This was a year of wasted opportunities.”

Nunez said there was “no question that things got done,” mentioning bills to protect buyers of used cars, ban sales of extremely violent video games to minors and keep certain dietary supplements out of the hands of teen athletes.

“We’re proud of the work we have done this legislative session.”

But he also said “some things got torpedoed,” and he said Schwarzenegger’s staff and his time away from the Capitol raising campaign funds were at least partly to blame.

“The governor is serious, but his staff isn’t,” Nunez said. “They’re keeping the governor away from getting deals done.”

That prompted an angry reply from Rob Stutzman, Schwarzenegger’s deputy chief of staff.

“There are accomplishments that were achieved during this legislative session through bipartisan cooperation,” he said in a statement. “But today we saw the speaker’s true colors — a petty, embittered partisan who will sacrifice the truth in order to score political tallies.”

Schwarzenegger both complemented and criticized lawmakers, saying “they had done as much as they could do” and “passed a lot of bills that were important to me,” including measures to require healthy school food.

But he also contended that Democratic lawmakers’ close ties to labor unions were to blame for the failure of the solar energy bill, which would have offered subsidies to building owners who installed solar panels.

“The legislators went as far as they could, but they are beholden to other people and have to always ask permission from other forces,” he told reporters. “So they could not go there.”

But Marvin Kropke, secretary treasurer of the State Electrical Workers, contended Schwarzenegger doomed the bill by rejecting a compromise on wage standards for solar energy installers.

“Governor Schwarzenegger continues to side with his biggest contributors — multimillionaire developers — who stand to make tens of millions of dollars in additional profits from a bill that doesn’t provide paying jobs and health care to the workers who’ll install these solar panels,” Kropke said.

Schwarzenegger said he decided to veto the gay marriage bill because of voters’ support for Proposition 22, which was put on the ballot in 2000 to prevent California from recognizing gay marriages performed in other states or countries.

“I think the legislators cannot overturn the will of the people,” he said. “I’ve made it very clear that the only one who can overturn it is the courts. ... If they decide to go the other way, I will uphold the law.”

He said the bill that would allow illegal immigrants to have driver’s licenses wouldn’t prevent immigrants from using false identification in applying for licenses.

“That is the basic question that’s been the obstacle from the beginning,” he said.

But Shannon Murphy, a spokeswoman for Sen. Gil Cedillo, the Los Angeles Democrat who introduced the bill, said it would implement license identification requirements created by federal legislation signed by President Bush.

“The governor’s comments are ridiculous,” she said. “They are not well-founded. We have amended the bill to address the governor’s concerns and believe he should keep his word” and sign the bill.

The bill would require the licenses to be of a different color or design than standard driver’s licenses, and they could be used only for driving, not as widely recognized identification documents.

NATIONAL

Conflicts of interest could sideline John Roberts

BY GINA HOLLAND

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — John Roberts is an appeals court judge with a multimillion-dollar portfolio, a spouse who is a successful lawyer and a broad roster of clients from his days in private practice.

Those all mean he probably will have to disqualify himself from dozens of Supreme Court cases should he become chief justice. It is an situation that, while not unusual, would leave the nine-member court with a potential for tie votes.

Roberts, whose confirmation hearings are to begin Monday, can minimize his problems. For example, he could put his money in mutual funds or other types of investments. But ethics experts say his early years on the Supreme Court will require diligence to avoid conflicts.

Potential personal conflicts, along with questions about his appellate opinions and correspondence as a lawyer during two Republican administrations, are expected to dominate the hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The Supreme Court begins its new term Oct. 3 with a full lineup of cases on issues such as abortion and physician assisted suicide, as well as matters that affect a company's bottom line.

By law, judges must not participate in cases brought by companies in which judges or family members own stock — even one share. Justices police themselves when it comes to ethical conflicts and cannot be overruled.

"The justice is a law into himself or herself on that issue," said Stephen Gillers, a professor at New York University's School of Law.

Young law school graduates who clerk for justices comb through the thousands of appeals filed each year to find possible conflicts. Justices do not have to explain why they are sitting out a case.

The most frequent cause of conflicts is money.

"Most of the justices try to make their finances a non-issue by not holding significant stocks directly. But there are no rules, and it's ultimately a matter of personal choice," said Washington lawyer Thomas Goldstein who regularly argues cases at the high court and tracks voting trends.

Disqualifications are not uncommon, especially among the wealthier justices who have extensive stocks. Six of the current eight justices are millionaires.

In the past year, there were 112 recusals — when justices take themselves out of a case — in opinions and orders. The court deals with more than 8,000 appeals a year. By Goldstein's count, Justice Stephen Breyer stepped aside 60 times and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor 27.

O'Connor has done so about 730 times during her 24 years on the court, Goldstein said.

Roberts' investment portfolio includes stock Coca-Cola, Disney and telecommunications and prescription drug companies.

Papers Roberts submitted to the Senate over the summer put his wealth at more than $5 million — well above that of his mentor, William H. Rehnquist, who became chief justice in 1986 and died last weekend, and Rehnquist's predecessor, Warren Burger.

Burger was named chief justice in 1969 after ethics questions doomed Abe Fortas' nomination for the job.

Fortas, an associate justice, was filibustered in the Senate in 1968 part because he had received $15,000 for teaching college seminars. Fortas resigned the next year after it was revealed that he also accepted money from a private foundation.

Roberts, a Harvard Law School graduate with a squeaky clean image, is expected to be cautious.

"I don't think there will be any sloppiness. We're not talking Abe Fortas here," said A. E. Dick Howard of the University of Virginia, an expert on the high court. "I don't think he'll try to dance around the recusal problem. He may find ways not to overdo it."

If a chief justice stays out of a case, the next senior justice presides at oral argument and oversees the voting.

Judges also are required by law to withdraw when their impartiality might reasonably be questioned.

Last year, Justice Antonin Scalia refused to step aside in a case filed by Vice President Dick Cheney, a friend. Cheney and Scalia had taken a hunting vacation together shortly after the court agreed to consider whether the Bush administration had to release information about private meetings of Cheney's energy task force.

Roberts has told the Senate he would stay out of some cases involving his former law firm and clients, abiding by guidelines from the federal court's policymaking board. He could face conflict issues related to his wife's financial interest as a partner at a prominent Washington law firm.

Roberts was a top Supreme Court lawyer earning more than $1 million a year when Bush named him in 2003 to the federal appeals court based in Washington.

Roberts took himself out of a major case now at the Supreme Court: the administration's attempt to seek $280 billion in profits from tobacco companies. Roberts did not give a reason, but his former law firm has taken positions adverse to the tobacco industry on behalf of health care clients.

Roberts has come under criticism from Gillers and other legal ethicists for ruling on a case involving the administration while he was meeting with White House officials who were preparing for a vacancy on the high court.

Roberts was among the judges who said the Pentagon could hold military commissions, or tribunals, for a foreign terrorism suspect at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The Supreme Court will decide this fall whether to review that case, which would be an important test of the president's wartime powers.

Roberts would immediately take himself out of the case and others he voted on as an appeals court judge. Although not required, it is considered unseemly for judges to attempt to judge their own opinions.
