Cops release surveillance video in beating case

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

PUBLIC SAFETY FACILITY Santa Monica police have released surveillance video of two men they believe brutally beat a man Thursday morning while he was working out on the 3100 block of Santa Monica Boulevard.

The video shows the suspects walking west on Santa Monica Boulevard near Busby's West bar and restaurant around 2:15 a.m. Their attention seems to be focused on something out of frame, most likely the victim, who police said was clad in workout clothes, sparring gloves and wrist weights.

The suspects, who police believe frequented the area for a few days before the attack, continue walking west, but suddenly turn back and head east toward the victim. About a minute later, the suspects come back into view and are captured running north on Berkeley Street.

"The victim was approached by two suspects who, without provocation, brutally beat the vic-

HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL

Samohi improves to 3-0

BY DANIEL ARCHULETA
Managing Editor

It wasn't their opponent that Santa Monica High School's football team was sharing with, it was each other.

A total of five Vikings scored touchdowns against overmatched Canyon as Samohi improved to 3-0 for the first time since 2008 when they started the year 6-0.

"We haven't been 3-0 in a long time," Head Coach Travis Clark said. "It's the first time since I've been here. Now we're just getting ready for league."

The Vikings still have two non-league games to go before league season begins, but that doesn't stop Clark and his boys from thinking about what's possible during the coach's third year in charge.

The Vikings struck first during their first possession. Star senior running back Kori Garcia got things started with a 6-yard scoring run that put Samohi up to stay.

The steadily improving play of senior quarterback Christian Salem took over from there as he passed for two touchdowns before being pulled during the third quarter to make way for some of the Vikings' reserves to get some reps. During his time on the field, he connected with increasingly-favorite target Sebastian

Grocery workers OK deal

ANDREW DALTON
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES After eight months of contract-wrangling and negotiations that dragged past a strike deadline, supermarket workers in Southern California will stay on the job and shoppers won't have to rely on Whole Foods or their corner liquor store for groceries.

Members of the region's United Food and Commercial Workers voted to ratify a new contract with three major grocery chains, union local spokeswoman Ellen Anreder said, averting a strike of more than 60,000 workers that could have crippled the industry and left shoppers scrambling.

United Food and Commercial Workers local spokeswoman Ellen Anreder said Saturday that after two days of voting, members agreed to a deal struck Monday with Vons, Ralphs and Albertsons. Exact vote totals were not released.

"We're all very grateful to our customers for their support over this eight-month process, and are very grateful that we can continue to serve them," a tired-but-relieved Anreder said after the vote.

Union officials had urged their rank-and-file to ratify the contract, which they said addressed concerns about funding for the employees' health plan, the main sticking point during months of negotiations.

"This package protects our members' access to affordable comprehensive health care for themselves and their families," the union said in a statement. "That was our top priority throughout the negotiating process."

The supermarkets, meanwhile, said after agreeing to the deal that it would allow them to remain competitive. Messages left for grocery representatives after the vote were not immediately returned.

Details of the agreement were made available to members for the first time as they filed into their union locals' headquarters or other voting locations to cast their ballots on Friday and Saturday.

Giving kids the 'Cool Tools' for success

BY ASHLEY ARCHIBALD
Daily Press Staff Writer

ROOSEVELT ELEMENTARY In Catherine Handelman's kindergarten classroom, a circle of 5- and 6-year-olds taunted a person-shaped cutout named "Put Up Paul."

"You're bad at skating!" one child said, and tore a small hole into Paul's paper body.

"Surprisingly, no one's made fun of his head yet," Handelman said, referring to the drawing's balloon-shaped facial feature.

The arrangement sounds like something out of "Lord of the Flies," but it's actually a carefully-staged lesson to show the kids the invisible wounds caused by meanness, and how they can be healed, but never truly taken back.

"Put Up Paul," named for the kind words used to negate the "put down" that resulted in the original wound, is one of a number of strategies in Cool Tools, a system developed by the UCLA Lab School to teach young children how to relate and interact with their peers.

Cool Tools debuted at Roosevelt in 2003 when it was still in its early research stage under the direction of UCLA's Ava de la Soto, and has since spread to every elementary school in the district with the exception of Will Rogers Learning Community.

> THEY GET SOMETHING THEY CAN SEE AS TANGIBLE AND ARE ABLE TO UNDERSTAND, AND FROM THERE, THEY CAN TALK ABOUT THE ANALOGY.
> Laurie Ramirez
> Cool Tools coordinator at the UCLA Lab School

Its strength lies in the strategy of teaching intangible concepts using physical objects so that children as young as Handelman's kindergarten class can understand the abstract idea, said Laurie Ramirez, the Cool Tools coordinator at the UCLA Lab School.

"They get something they can see as tangible and are able to understand, and from there, they can talk about the analogy," Ramirez said. "For instance, we tell them that we all have 'tool boxes,' but do you see people walking around with tool boxes all the time? No."

A number of "tools" fit in the tool box, which is actually a plastic box filled with props that each relate to a specific concept, like a giant inflatable tennis shoe to symbolize exit strategies, or a kaleidoscope to represent that everyone sees a situation from a unique point of view.

Since all the kids in the school learn about the tools in similar ways, students and teachers have a common vocabulary to address and prevent problems, Handelman said.

Add a splash of water

Editor:

We are fortunate to have such an excellent police force here in Santa Monica. They are well-staffed, very professional, and, on the rare occasions when I've had need of them, their response-time has been phenomenal. It's a tough job, and for some reason this town never seems to have a quiet day where we don't need help from these men and women in uniform. (Just ask "Crime Watch" writer, Kevin Hererra!)

I would, however, like to suggest an innovation that I think could improve the quality of our police service as well as the quality of life for residents. I would like to arm our cops with water. It is my opinion that part of standard procedure for any emergency response should be to offer bottled water to distressed parties.

Last summer, we had an armed break-in here at my house in the Ocean Park neighborhood. A young lady, who was in our house as a guest and had never seen a gun before in her life, had just been held down on the couch by our intruders. Understandably, she was in shock. Later, while she was surrounded by half a dozen officers in the living room, I had to actually interrupt their questioning to ask her if she would maybe like a glass of water. Her exact words were, "Oh, God, yes. Thank you."

Last month, I was the victim of a hit-and-run here in town while riding my bike to work. One of the witnesses who pulled me out of the street offered me a bottle of water, and I felt (and hopefully expressed,) the same sense of gratitude that I got from that girl.

Probably the kindest thing you can do for a person in shock is to give them water. We have a kind and courteous police force. We're just one small logical step away!

Expo's border fence

SOME CITY HALL POLITICIANS AND Expo Light Rail cheerleaders received a rude awakening a couple weeks ago when Rick Thorpe, CEO of Metro's Expo (Phase 2) Construction Authority told City Council that much of the Colorado Avenue alignment of the Expo Light Rail may be fenced for safety reasons.

Thorpe was referring to the dual, light rail tracks planned for the middle of Colorado Avenue from roughly 17th Street to the Fourth Street terminus. One of the reasons that City Hall favored Colorado over two other proposed alignments was the permeability of at-grade (surface level) transit for foot, bicycle/skateboard and conventional vehicular traffic.

There's a new joke at City Hall. "Why did the chicken cross the road?" "It didn't, Expo's fence was in the way."

According to a Sept. 13 staff report to council, "Expo is proposing pedestrian crossings to be permitted at existing signalized intersections. East of Lincoln there are currently signals at every third intersection (11th, 14th and 17th streets).

"The crossings are subject to the approval of Metro and the California Public Utility Commission (CPUC) … As discussed with Expo, Metro and CPUC staff, the city's preference is to preserve all existing pedestrian crossings."

The report continues, "Upon preliminary concurrence by Metro, Expo will prepare the study necessary to submit a CPUC application for crossings at 10th, 12th, Euclid and 15th Court; however, the application and approval process is lengthy and uncertain."

All this has left folks at City Hall frustrated. At the Sept. 13 council meeting, Councilman Kevin McKeown showed photos he recently took in a number of European cities of streetcar and light rail trains operating at grade amidst pedestrians, bicyclists and automobile/truck traffic. McKeown's shots demonstrated that the varied modes of transit can share the road comfortably without fencing or physical barricades.

It's good that McKeown is thinking optimistically, but in the L. A. area, the co-sharing of streets by pedestrians, drivers and bicyclists is fraught with problems — the main one being an appalling lack of consideration for others using the streets.

Also, our lack of experience dealing with multi-modal means of transit is an issue. In Europe, multi-modal transportation has been part of the landscape for decades and is totally accepted.

A couple of years ago when Expo's route through Santa Monica was being debated, Metro had originally recommended an elevated alignment from 26th Street/Cloverfield Boulevard down Olympic to the Fourth Street terminal.

Misguided Expo cheerleaders complained about a lengthy elevated structure down Olympic, calling it an eyesore. They said it would cut the city in two, limit pedestrian crossings and require removal of trees in the Olympic median. At least people can walk, drive and bicycle unimpeded beneath overhead rail spans.

City Hall favored an at-grade alignment on Colorado because it fit with its utopian vision of a thoroughfare that is "all things to all people" — the "complete street" of the future. With Expo running at grade on Colorado everybody and everything could exist in harmony. Ohhmm.

In my Feb. 23, 2009 column, I wrote how Jeffrey Tumlin, a principal in Nelson\Nygaard (City Hall's expensive, outside planning consultancy), had praised the virtues of ground-level stations "surrounded by the community." At a public meeting at the time, he said elevated platforms are not as pleasant an experience as platforms at ground level. I wrote in reply, "The truth is surface tracks divide and separate the community, not unite it."

Colorado was chosen in part because ground-level light rail was more pedestrian/bike friendly and that people could easily cross Colorado from one side to the other at will. Now, with the possibility of fencing along most of the railway, pedestrians and bicyclists will have to hike or ride a couple of blocks just to cross the street. Oops.

I also wonder about the potential liability of having open, accessible railway tracks in the middle of a congested urban street then encouraging pedestrian and bicycle use adjacent to them. How long will it be before someone stumbles in front of a moving Expo train and is killed?

Another factor being ignored is traffic. Tumlin's take on traffic was, "There would be no significant traffic impacts." Now, with the removal of traffic lanes on Colorado and intersecting streets blocked by fencing, it's even more obvious there will be significant traffic impacts. And, that's not even counting trains running in both directions at five minute intervals during peak periods crossing major intersections each hour! Major congestion factor?

Clearly, there are a lot of issues that need to be addressed. Unfortunately, now that Expo's alignment is finalized, City Hall is facing the reality that there may be a lot more wrong with Colorado than they expected.

State AGs favor watershed divide

JOHN FLESHER
AP Environmental Writer

CHICAGO Michigan Attorney General Bill Schuette said he and his counterparts in 16 other states want to demand quicker federal action on preventing invasive species such as Asian carp from migrating between the Great Lakes and Mississippi River watersheds.

Schuette told The Associated Press that a coalition of state attorneys general reaching from West Virginia to Nevada would push Congress and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to expedite a plan for severing the connection between the two giant drainage basins that engineers constructed a century ago in Chicago rivers and canals.

Supporters contend it's the only way to slam the door on species invasions that have disrupted aquatic ecosystems and cost billions in damages in both basins. Local cargo shippers and their allies say such a move would cause massive flooding and job losses in the Chicago area.

The Army Corps has promised to conclude by 2015 a long-range study of methods for cutting off potential avenues for species to transfer between the two basins, including separating them by installing dams or other structures. But carrying out whatever the agency recommends could take many more years, and money will be tight. Environmental activists, state and local officials, Indian tribes and others across most of the Great Lakes region are pleading with the Corps to move faster.

Five states — Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin — are pressing a federal lawsuit that accuses the Army Corps and Chicago's municipal water agency of operating a public nuisance and demands the quickest possible action to physically separate the Great Lakes and Mississippi systems. The attorneys general from those states and New York said in August they would try to assemble a nationwide coalition in favor of separation.

Illinois and Indiana, the other two states adjoining the Great Lakes, haven't joined the lawsuits. Indiana officials say blocking the waterways could cause economic problems for their communities near Chicago.

Schuette said the idea of separation has now drawn endorsements from attorneys general in Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Missouri, South Dakota, Utah, West Virginia and Wyoming.

It's unclear what practical effect the attorneys generals' campaign could have, with the lawsuit by the five states already pending. The U.S. Supreme Court and lower courts have refused to order the Army Corps to expedite its study or take temporary measures such as closing Chicago-area shipping locks that could provide a pathway to Lake Michigan for Asian carp.

Still, as political leaders and chief legal strategists for their state governments, the attorneys general could wield considerable influence, said Joel Brammeier, president of the Alliance for the Great Lakes, an environmental advocacy group.

"They're guardians of their states' resources and they're helping to monitor threats from other places," Brammeier said. "They're well within their bounds to be pushing for a faster timeline on this because they know what's at stake."

Many of the states that are new members of the coalition have suffered ill effects of invasions by species such as zebra and quagga mussels, which hitched rides from central Europe to the Great Lakes in the ballast tanks of oceangoing freight ships. After colonizing the Great Lakes, they moved into the Mississippi basin and have infested waterways as far south as the Arkansas River and west to Lake Mead, which supplies water for drinking and irrigation to much of southern Nevada, southern California and Arizona.

"With jobs at stake and the ecology of our waters at risk, this national coalition will make our message loud and clear: It is time to shut down the invasive species highway," Schuette said. "I am honored to be joined by attorneys general from across our country asking for immediate action to combat a looming crisis in our waters."

The Army Corps declined to comment on Schuette's announcement. Corps officials have said repeatedly their schedule was reasonable given the complex scientific and engineering issues involved. Maj. Gen. John Peabody, who until recently was commander of the Corps' Great Lakes and Ohio River Division, said last month he welcomed the involvement of state officials in developing the study.

"I do not believe the Corps is dragging their feet," said Kay Nelson, a spokeswoman for UnLock Our Jobs, a coalition representing Chicago-area businesses including barge and tour boat operators. "It's an extensive job they've been given."

The Corps operates an electric barrier on a shipping canal south of Chicago that is designed to prevent fish from swimming between the two drainage basins. The agency says it is working well, but some fear otherwise because scientists have detected Asian carp DNA in water samples beyond the barrier.

Much of the recent debate over species invasions through the Chicago-area waterways has focused on the threat that bighead and silver carp, both Asian species migrating northward in the Mississippi and its tributaries, pose to the Great Lakes and their $7 billion fishing industry. But many states are worrying about being on the receiving end of invasions from the Great Lakes, Brammeier said

DANGER: Climate change is affecting many more species than polar bears. The National Audubon Society found that 60 percent of the 305 avian species in North America during winter have shifted their ranges northward by an average of 35 miles, thanks to warming temperatures. The American Goldfinch, pictured here, has moved some 200 miles north in the last 40 years.

Warming puts species at peril

Dear EarthTalk

I know that polar bears are losing ice cover due to climate change, but what are other ways that global warming affects wildlife around the globe?

Hanna Bond
Hartford, Conn.

ALTHOUGH PERHAPS THE BEST KNOWN examples, polar bears certainly aren't the only wildlife species already suffering as a result of global warming. With the sea ice that they depend upon as hunting platforms and places to rest during long swims quickly melting, polar bears were added to the federal list of threatened species in 2008. This contentious listing decision was significant in that it represented the first time the federal government acknowledged that global warming was not only having a noticeable effect on the environment but could also be blamed for the decline of particular species. Environmentalists claimed the listing was reason enough to reign in our carbon emissions sharply, but of course that has yet to happen.

While all organisms on the planet are affected in one way or another by climate change, some are more at risk than others. "Species with small population sizes, restricted ranges, and limited ability to move to different habitat will be most at risk," reports the National Audubon Society. "Similarly, different habitats and ecosystems will be impacted differently, with those in coastal, high-latitude, and high-altitude regions most vulnerable."

Audubon, which is primarily concerned with birds, recently published a report based on 40 years of data that found some 60 percent of the 305 avian species in North America during winter have been on the move in recent decades-shifting their ranges northward by an average of 35 miles, as habitat shifts thanks to warming temperatures. The Brant (a coastal bird), the Ring-necked Duck (a water bird), and the American Goldfinch (a land bird), all moved about 200 miles north over the last four decades. While it's questionable whether some birds will find suitable habitat to the north-we may have paved that piece of land over-the picture looks even more grim for those species not willing or able to abandon old roosts. Also, Audubon reports that the timing of reproductive events (egg-laying, flowering, spawning) across different interdependent species is occurring earlier than ever "in some cases interrupting delicate cycles that ensure that insects and other food are available for young animals."

Another leading conservation group, Defenders of Wildlife, details how a long list of other North American fauna is in decline as a result of global warming. The gray wolf, trout, salmon, arctic fox, desert bighorn sheep, desert tortoise, Edith's checkerspot butterfly, golden toad, Hawaiian monk seal, lobster, manatee, painted turtle, penguin, streamside salamander and western toad are just a few of the species on Defenders' list that are negatively impacted by our profligate fossil fuel use. Meanwhile, the Wildlife Conservation Society adds the Irrawaddy dolphin of Southeast Asia, the Arctic's musk ox, the ocean-going hawksbill turtle and others to the list of species that are "feeling the heat" from global warming.

While it may seem futile given the scope of the problem, everyone can still take steps to be part of the solution. Switch out your incandescent bulbs for compact fluorescents or, even better, the new generation of LED bulbs. Bike, walk and take mass transit more; drive your car less. Telecommute when you can. Try to source as much of your food and other goods locally to cut down on carbon-heavy transcontinental freight shipping. If not for yourself, do it for the polar bears, turtles, foxes and toads.

KEVIN BEGOS
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH Some insist Marcellus Shale natural gas is a huge economic boom for America, while others are certain it's an environmental catastrophe.

Gas drilling from the Marcellus pollutes groundwater, or it never pollutes groundwater. It's cleaner than coal or oil, except that it's dirty. It provides a boost to hard-hit rural economies; but then again, maybe it doesn't.

The one point of agreement? Scientists say advocates on both sides increasingly spin every shred of research to fit their own views, and ignore the bigger picture.

Consider Duke University biologist Rob Jackson, who has degrees in chemical engineering, ecology, and statistics, and worked for Dow Chemical Co. for four years. He co-authored a report that went viral in May, showing that residential water wells near drilling operations in Pennsylvania's Marcellus Shale had disturbingly high rates of methane contamination.

The gas drilling industry insists that the process called hydraulic fracturing, or fracking, does not contaminate aquifers or water wells. Critics of the industry, who believe it does, rushed to embrace the Duke study.

"Our data has been used primarily by people opposed to fracking," Jackson told The Associated Press. "But that's not how I see our data. I think our data provides a mixed story."

The study of 60 wells showed high concentrations of methane in 85 percent of those that were within 1,000 yards of a drilling site. In a finding that pleased the industry, the Duke researchers did not find any evidence of fracking chemicals in the well water.

Jackson acknowledged that the Duke study didn't answer all the questions about the issue and that it needs follow-up. But that's simply the way science works, he noted.

At a recent drilling industry conference, Josh Fox, director of the anti-drilling documentary "Gasland," suggested the issue was the very survival of civilization.

"What I'm witnessing in Pennsylvania is a systematic destruction of the state," Fox said at a news conference. "What we're doing is contemplating taking our civilization off of an insane cliff."

Fox didn't mention that Pennsylvania had up to 325,000 oil and gas wells before gas-fracking even started, according to the Pa. Department of Environmental Protection. Some date back to 1859, and DEP says thousands of those old wells were probably improperly plugged and that no one even knows where many of them are. The figures don't include abandoned coal mines, which can also leak gas.

All can contaminate drinking water.

Some in the industry have responded with their own exaggerations and florid prose.

At the same conference Chesapeake Energy Corp. CEO Aubrey McClendon called critics of shale gas drilling fear-mongering extremists who want Americans to live in a world where "it's cold, it's dark and we're all hungry."

Other executives have claimed that there's never been a single reported case of fracking contaminating water supplies.

And DEP Secretary Michael Krancer criticized the Duke researchers for an editorial in which they said they "would like to see shale gas become largely unnecessary" in the future. Krancer said that was evidence of their bias against gas drilling, an opposition that is "not based on science or fact."

Kathryn Klaber, president of the gas-industry group Marcellus Shale Coalition, said the role of an industry critic in the Duke report "raises a host of questions regarding academic veracity."

Yet Terry Engelder, a Penn State University geologist who was one of the first to claim there are huge gas reserves in the Marcellus, found the Duke results "neither surprising or new."

"It could be cherry-picked depending on which camp you come from," said Engleder, who has degrees from Penn State, Yale and Texas A&M, and has worked with companies such as Saudi Aramaco and Petrobras.

Jackson said he's disappointed that Pa. DEP officials were "downright hostile" to their paper from the beginning. Duke researchers would like to work with the gas industry and DEP on Marcellus issues, he said.

Engelder said scientists are frustrated by how complex issues get oversimplified.

> "IT COULD BE CHERRY-PICKED DEPENDING ON WHICH CAMP YOU COME FROM."
> Terry Engelder
> Penn State University geologist

"So we're back to this era that often scientific data is boiled down to a punch line that can easily be taken out of context," he said.

Engelder knows firsthand.

Drilling foes have questioned him for predicting that the Marcellus could contain hundreds of trillions of cubic feet of recoverable gas. But the record shows his comments weren't that simple.

In early 2008 Engelder and another geologist first estimated that the region contained about 50 trillion feet of recoverable gas. Then, after getting new data from actual wells, they upped that to 363 trillion. But not without a warning.

"Geologists are still trying to size this play," Engelder said in 2008. "We don't really know how much gas is there and how much can be recovered."

There are signs the messy public policy debate is causing people to question Penn State and Duke — two institutions with distinguished reputations.

Jackson said he found it was beneficial that his team of researchers was from out of state.

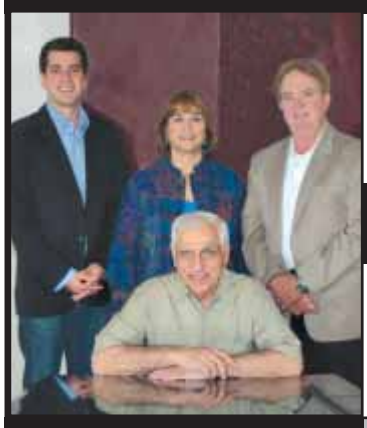

"There were many homeowners who were more willing to work with us because we were not from Pennsylvania," he said.

That perception may have come because Penn State has accepted huge donations from people with ties to the gas industry.

Some independent experts said Penn State hasn't always handled that situation well.

This year, geologists at Penn State and the University of Wyoming released an industry-funded report on Marcellus Shale projections and economic impacts. It contained a disclaimer that none of the scientists or institutions "makes any warranty or representation, express or implied, with respect to the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of the information contained in the report."

Obama claims GOP would 'cripple' America

ERICA WERNER
Associated Press

SEATTLE President Barack Obama charged Sunday that the GOP vision of government would "fundamentally cripple America," as he tried out his newly combative message on the liberal West Coast.

Aiming to renew the ardor of Democratic loyalists who have grown increasingly disenchanted with him, the president mixed frontal attacks on Republicans with words of encouragement intended to buck up the faithful as the 2012 campaign revs up.

"From the moment I took office what we've seen is a constant ideological push-back against any kind of sensible reforms that would make our economy work better and give people more opportunity," the president said at an intimate brunch fundraiser at the Medina, Wash., home of former Microsoft executive Jon Shirley.

About 65 guests were paying $35,800 per couple to listen to Obama at the first of seven fundraisers he was holding from Seattle to Hollywood to San Diego on Sunday and Monday. The three-day West Coast swing, ending Tuesday in Denver, offered him the chance to re-engage with some of his most liberal and deep-pocketed supporters.

The trip comes as Obama has shifted from focusing on compromise with Republicans on Capitol Hill to calling out House Speaker John Boehner and others by name. The president has criticized them as obstructionists while demanding their help in passing his $447 billion jobs bill.

The revamped approach is a relief to Democratic activists fed up by what they viewed as the president's ceding of ground to the GOP on tax cuts and other issues while the economy has stalled and unemployment is stuck above 9 percent.

Obama said 2012 would be an especially tough election because people are discouraged and disillusioned with government, but he also said he was determined because so much is at stake.

The GOP alternative, Obama said, is "an approach to government that will fundamentally cripple America in meeting the challenges of the 21st century. And that's not the kind of society that I want to leave to Malia and Sasha."

Obama got a friendly welcome from invited guests at his first stop. But later, liberal activists greeted the president with a demonstration.

"We want to see Obama stand up as strongly as he can to fight for the people of this country who are working out there to make ends meet," said Kathy Cummings, communications director for the Washington State Labor Council. The council helped organize a demonstration outside Seattle's Paramount Theater, the site of an Obama fundraiser with about 1,800 guests. Activists held signs promoting environmental and other causes and urging Obama, "Tax the rich."

Obama and the Republican presidential candidates are working overtime to raise campaign cash ahead of an important Sept. 30 reporting deadline that will give a snapshot of their financial strength. Obama's West Coast visit was heavy on fundraisers: two each in Seattle and the San Francisco area Sunday, followed by one in San Diego on Monday and two in Los Angeles.

He's meeting with the Silicon Valley and Hollywood elite, including an event Sunday night in Atherton, Calif., at the home of Facebook chief operating officer Sheryl Sandberg.

The expected haul from all seven events: $4 million or more.

In addition to the fundraising, Obama scheduled a town hall-style event Monday in Silicon Valley, hosted by social networking company LinkedIn. The trip ends Tuesday with a speech to supporters in Denver, where he accepted the Democratic nomination three years ago.

Obama was pushing throughout for his job proposal, which combines tax cuts, unemployment benefits and public works spending. The bill faces a hostile reception on Capitol Hill, particularly because Obama wants to pay for it with tax increases opposed by Republicans.

A top aide, David Plouffe, said the White House expects a vote in the Democratic-controlled Senate in October. Despite deep reservations even from some in the president's own party, "I think it's got a very good chance" of passing, he told ABC's "This Week" on Sunday.

If he can't persuade Congress to pass the bill, Obama has said he wants to make sure the public knows who's standing in the way.

Jobs are a major concern in California, where unemployment stands at 12.1 percent, highest of any state except Nevada.

Mark DiCamillo, director of California's Field Poll, said that's contributed to a softening of support for Obama among Democratic and independent voters. Obama's job approval rating dropped to 46 percent among Californians in a Field Poll this month. Among Democrats it was 69 percent, but that was down 10 percentage points from June.

"Californians voted for him by 24 points in 2008 and the Democrats and nonpartisans were the backbone of his support and he's losing some of that now," DiCamillo said. "They're looking for Obama to do something."

The summer's nasty debate over raising the government's borrowing limit turned off voters. Many liberals bemoaned the deal that cleared the way for a higher debt ceiling, with Obama agreeing to Republican demands for steep budget cuts without new taxes.

But Democratic supporters are heartened by the jobs plan and Obama's insistence that Congress must raise taxes to pay for it. Now they're hoping that the confrontational Obama they're seeing now is the same one they'll see through the 2012 campaign.

"We wish that his fighting spirit had been there a few months ago, but it's here now," said Rick Jacobs, head of the Courage Campaign, a progressive online organizing network in California.

Alley Resurfacing Project

The alley in the 4000 block of 19th Court will be resurfaced starting on Sept. 12 through Sept. 26 – daily work start time is 7 a.m. and end time is 4:30 p.m. Please be advised that resurfacing operations will generate noise and dust. There will be certain times when the alley will not be accessible during construction, but we will minimize these times of closure during the day. Questions should be directed to the Public Works Street Maintenance Division at (310) 458-4991. For more info on Alley Renewal Program, visit smgov.net/streets/alleyprogram.

Expo Light Rail Line Project

Follow daily construction updates on Twitter at twitter.com/EXPOinSM. Sewer and storm drain inspection will occur for this project in order to plan the initial layout of upcoming construction activities. Construction activity will take place on Colorado Avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets and 17th Street to Centinela Avenue. Camera inspection work on sewer mains will occur after-hours from 7 p.m. to 6 a.m. Temporary lane closures may be necessary, but one lane in each direction will remain open at all times. For questions regarding this project, contact Expo Light Rail Line Community Relations at (213) 922-EXPO or www.BuildExpo.org.

Transit Priority Systems Project

Installation of the Transit Priority System (TPS) at 80 traffic signals along major corridors within the City of Santa Monica. Partial roadway closures or detours are expected at various locations on Pico Boulevard between 11th and 23rd streets, but impact to traffic should be minimal.

Water Main Replacement

The water main at Third Court between Broadway and Wilshire Boulevard is undergoing removal and replacement. Please be advised that two-way traffic will be allowed on each side of construction work zone for local access only. Alley will be closed to through traffic and lane closure will be in place for night-time work on Wilshire Boulevard.

Utility Undergrounding

Construction on utilities in the public right-of-way will take place in the following locations: the east side of Cloverfield Boulevard from Pico Boulevard to the I-10 Freeway, and on the south side of Broadway from Seventh Street to Ninth Court. Partial roadway closures or detours are expected.

Pier Parking Lot Storm Drain Improvement Project

Drainage improvements will take place to the 1550 parking lot just north of the Santa Monica Pier. A gravity storm drainage system will be installed to replace the existing pump system. The bike path underneath the pier will be closed; however a bike path detour to Appian Way will be available.

Southern California Edison Installation

Lane closures will occur on the east side of 20th Street from Olympic Boulevard to Wilshire Place North. Estimated completion is November of 2011. Expect traffic delays. Use alternate routes whenever possible.

For more information on projects, please visit the Know Before You Go Web site at www.knowB4ugo.smgov.net.

COOL TOOLS

For instance, the challenging process of herding two dozen 5-year-olds from one end of the school to the other gets much easier when they all respond to directions to respect each other's personal space.

Because all the kids speak about problems in the same way, they're able to relate better to their peers, interpersonal skills that many have mastered better than most adults.

One thing that never comes up in Cool Tools is the one topic that dominates almost every other conversation about education — bullying.

Although its creators hope that something like Cool Tools will prevent situations that lead to bullying, it doesn't explicitly address it.

"It's about how we communicate, not just for bullying," said Norma Silva, the principal at the UCLA Lab School. "They're learning the skills of being respectful, collaborating and having compassion for one another."

In part, the focus of Cool Tools emerged from the context in which it was created.

"I think it was the year before Columbine," Silva said. "One of the things we were noticing was that there were problems on the yard because the curriculum was not yet supporting development to solve the problems that came up."

Kids on "the yard," a term used to cover free-play time outside of a classroom context like recess, were insulting one another, using skin color, clothes and even learning disabilities as fodder for mean comments.

To combat that, UCLA researcher Jaana Juvonen took on the project of examining a number of anti-bias programs from around the world and used that investigation to develop Safe Schools, a systemic program that includes Cool Tools.

A decade later, the program is still in a state of evolution as new challenges like body image issues or alternative family structures begin to play more of a role than they did in the past.

It's also critical to keep updating it so that kids that have grown up with the program remain engaged. Some, like the fifth graders at Roosevelt, have been getting Cool Tools lessons since they were five.

"We need to keep it fresh for them so they understand they still have these responsibilities," Ramirez said.

Eight years into its tenure at Roosevelt, both teachers and parents have really embraced the program and seen the positive results that it has wrought in the children.

Lauren Culp, a therapist by trade and also district parent and substitute teacher, has been a proponent of Cool Tools from the beginning.

It empowers not just the students, but also faculty and parents in creating a new, positive focus on building interpersonal skills in schools.

"Right now there's a whole movement to expand the three R's — reading, writing and arithmetic — to include relationships and reflection," Culp said. "If you can help people with reflection and relationships, that improves their ability to be successful later in life."

LaRue and Michael Jordan.

Salem also did a fine job running the ball, converting on a number of crucial third-down plays to keep drives alive. He wasn't alone running the ball. In addition to Garcia's first-quarter score, backup running back London Lewis scored a pair of TDs of his own.

"It's been fun," Salem said of the perfect start to the season. "This gives us a lot of momentum moving forward."

The victory over Canyon came with USC-commit Chad Wheeler in street clothes. The tall offensive and defensive lineman was sidelined with a shoulder injury, one that Clark isn't sure he'll be able to come back from when the Vikings take on powerhouse Valencia on the road on Friday.

"I think the offensive line rallied around his injury," Clark said. "People stepped up."

Clark singled out senior Matt Schultz, who moved over from the defensive line to replace the injured Wheeler. Clark called him the MVP of the game for his efforts.

Also key to the win was the play of Anthony "Animal" Hernandez, who hauled in a highlight reel one-handed touchdown pass from reserve freshman quarterback Nico Basile during the third quarter that capped the Vikings' scoring for the night.

Hernandez was also crucial on special teams where he dropped two Canyon return men for little or no games during his first experience playing the gunner position. The gunner is one of the lead players dispatched to be the head of the kick coverage.

"They told me to step it up," Hernandez said. "It felt great to contribute"

Clark was pleased to see so many players contribute to the victory, but did praise the play of the man they call "Animal."

"He does stuff like that all the time in practice," Clark said. "It's nice to see him get a chance to show what he can do."

STRIKE

"There was a sense of relief when people had an opportunity to really look over the new contract and see what was in it," Ralphs clerk and union member Mario Frias said.

The deal ended months of sometimes testy discussions between union officials and representatives of The Vons Cos.; Ralphs Grocery Co., a subsidiary of The Kroger Co.; and Albertsons, which is owned by Supervalu Inc.

The three-year contract affects about 62,000 workers from central California to the borders of Mexico and Arizona.

Ralphs had indicated it would initially close all 250 of its stores if there had been a strike; Albertsons had said it could shutter up to 100 locations, while Vons had said its stores would remain open.

The prospect of shuttered stores and tense picket lines brought fears of a repeat of the four-month strike in 2004 that cost the industry $2 billion and created a mess for shoppers. This time around, with unemployment at 12.1 percent in California, workers evidently feared that they would find little public sympathy if they voluntarily walked off the job.

The market chains, meanwhile, were likely reluctant to invite shutdowns and picket lines that might alienate shoppers already spending less due to the economic downturn.

Union leaders and the markets announced in July that they had reached a tentative agreement on the employers' contributions to pension benefits, but remained far apart on payments to the union health care trust fund.

Union members voted overwhelmingly last month to authorize their leaders to call a strike. Those leaders said they were responding to what they characterized as the chains' delaying tactics when they issued the required 72-hour notice Thursday evening to cancel the contract extension under which they had been working since March.

But after the Sunday evening deadline passed with neither a strike nor a deal, store employees returned to work. Union officials announced Monday that the tentative deal had been reached.

ARREST

Santa Monica police said Peter Duran, 29, who previously worked at the car wash located on the 2300 block of Wilshire Boulevard, was talking with the victim, whom he knew, around 10:20 a.m. Friday when he suddenly pulled out a small red knife and stabbed the employee in the lower back.

Duran fled the scene and was quickly apprehended by officers near the corner of 22nd Street and Wilshire Boulevard, about a block away from the car wash. The knife was recovered. Police said several employees of the car wash chased after the suspect and held him until police arrived.

The victim, a manager at the car wash, was transported to a local hospital for treatment and later released.

Police said Duran worked at the car wash 11 years ago. A motive for the attack is not known at this time.

tim about the face and head by unknown means," said SMPD Sgt. Richard Lewis.

The victim sustained major injuries to his head, face and neck, Lewis said. He was taken to a hospital where he remains in critical condition.

The first suspect is white, in his late 20s, 6 feet 3 inches tall and weighs 200 to 225 pounds. He was wearing a dark-colored Arizona Diamondbacks baseball cap, a white long sleeve shirt, dark-colored shorts and dark shoes.

The second suspect is white, in his late 20s, 5 feet 7 inches to 5 feet 10 inches tall and weighs about 170 pounds with a muscular build. He was wearing a dark-colored T-shirt, dark-colored pants and dark shoes.

Police urge anyone with information regarding this assault to contact Santa Monica Police Det. Chad Goodwin at (310) 458-8942 or (310) 458-8495.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Dodgers' Kershaw beats Padres for 21st victory

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO Clayton Kershaw got his 21st win, taking a two-hitter into the eighth inning to make his final case for the NL Cy Young award and leading the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 6-2 win over the San Diego Padres on Sunday.

Kershaw (21-5) moved into a tie with Arizona's Ian Kennedy for NL lead for wins and increased his league-leading strikeout total to 248 in his final start of the season.

Teammate Matt Kemp's pursuit of the NL Triple Crown suffered a major setback as he fell eight points behind Ryan Braun of Milwaukee in the batting race. Kemp, who started the day six points back, went 1 for 5 as his average stayed at .325. Braun went 2 for 3 and raised his average to .333, while New York's Jose Reyes was at .331 after a 2-for-4 game.

Kemp is tied with Albert Pujols of St. Louis in home runs (37) and leads the league with 120 RBIs. He has three games left in Arizona starting on Monday to catch Braun.

Kemp is trying to become the first player to win the Triple Crown since Boston's Carl Yastrzemski in 1967. St. Louis' Ducky Medwick (1937) was the last NL player to do it.

Kershaw dominated the Padres as he took a two-hitter and a 6-1 lead into the eighth inning.

The left-hander had allowed a home run to Aaron Cunningham in the fifth before Orlando Hudson reached on a leadoff double in the eighth and Alberto Gonzalez hit a one-out triple to knock him out of the game.

Kershaw struck out six and walked one. He became the first Dodger to win at least 21 games since 1988 when Orel Hershiser won 23 and also was voted the Cy Young Award. Kershaw's NL-best ERA rose slightly to 2.28 as he extended his career-high winning streak to eight games.

In his last nine starts, Kershaw has an ERA of 0.96.

Kemp doubled in a run in his first at-bat to extend his hitting streak to nine games. He scored later that inning on Aaron Miles' single.

He flew out in his second at-bat, reached on an error and scored in the fifth, struck out in the seventh and ninth innings.

Kemp needs three home runs to become the fifth player in major league history to hit 40 home runs and steal 40 bases in the same season.

Rod Barajas hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning off reliever Erik Hamren. Miles also had two RBIs and Dodger rookie Jerry Sands extended his career-high hitting streak to 13 games.

Corey Luebke (6-10) allowed four runs — three earned — on five hits over six innings.

Balance your budget, Leo

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ All work and no play can be debilitating, yet it is Monday. You must deliver professionally or within your immediate circle. Pace yourself; make lists. Demonstrate just how efficient you can be when you try. Tonight: Do only what you must.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Allow your creativity to flourish. Stop feeding undeveloped ideas to others who could be judgmental. You are asking for negative feedback. When you are ready, encourage greater give-and-take. Listen and share more. Others appear to be unusually receptive. Tonight: Squeeze in some fun.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Getting out the front door could be a major effort. You really would like to stay home. Who could blame you? If you can get enough done playing the recluse, then why not? Otherwise, know that this, too, will pass. Tonight: Head home. Touch base with someone at a distance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Speak your mind, but understand that not everyone wants to hear your conclusions. You might feel frustrated as you hit a brick wall. Use this moment to experiment with other styles of communicating. You want your points heard, don't you? Tonight: Hang out with pals.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Keep your eye on your budget, whether deciding to bring treats in to work or buy a gift (even for you!). It is so easy to overspend and justify it. Keep your eye on increasing funds rather than depleting them. Tonight: Balance your budget.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Allow greater give-and-take between you and others. Someone in your daily life -- it might even be at work -- could stress you out. There is an implicit misunderstanding between the two of you. Consider clearing it up soon. Tonight: Whatever knocks your socks off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ You simply aren't willing to discuss everything that is on your mind. Make that OK, though a child or loved one knows something is going on. This person might try to pry you open. Enjoy the attention rather than get annoyed. Tonight: Plan ahead.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Zero in on what you want. There could be some confusion about a work, health or day-to-day matter. You haven't received a clear message, and you aren't giving one either. If you see confusion, step in and clarify. Tonight: Wherever the crowds are.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Take a stand and move forward in handling a career-related or key personal matter. Others will intuitively follow you rather than question you. You might want to add to the moment, making what you desire possible. Tonight: The ball is in your hands.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Keep reaching out for someone at a distance. This person could be an expert or someone who often tosses a different perspective on situations. Be careful with financial commitments. Tonight: Let your imagination rock and roll.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ A partner or friend pulls in close and has a lot to share. You might have a mild sense of uneasiness with this person because he or she is so different from you. Still, he or she has a lot to offer. Tonight: Chat over dinner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Defer to others and maintain a sense of independence. Several friends, family and loved ones express their desires, each with a different, implicit agenda! You might be happiest doing your own thing. Tonight: Remember, you make the final call.

Happy birthday

This year, you will witness many changes in your life. Some of which you won't be comfortable with; others you might like. You will choose to spend a lot of time by yourself, more so than usual. Use this time to rest, digest what is happening and internalize it. If you are single, check out anyone you meet with care. Someone could be different from the person he or she portrays. If you are attached, you might take more of a back seat than in the past. Your sweetie might not understand why a new you is emerging.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ The medical establishment generally regards placentas (afterbirth) as biohazardous waste, but to New York City placenta chef Jennifer Mayer, they are a nutrient-laden meat that can alleviate postpartum depression and aid in breast milk production (among other so-far-unverified benefits). Mayer typically sets up in clients' own kitchens, she told New York magazine for an August story. Some placentas are "really intense, with grief or sadness or uncertainty." Others might be "joyful," "big and round." Mayer's method: Drain the blood, blot dry, cook for a half-hour (leaving something resembling brisket), chop into slivers, dehydrate overnight (rendering it jerky-like). For a popular touch, Mayer then grinds it in a blender and pours the powder into several dozen (one-a-day) capsules.

■ The Learning Channel's "Toddlers & Tiaras" series has pushed critics' buttons enough with its general support of the competitive world of child beauty pageants, but a recent episode provoked unusually rabid complaints, according to a September New York Post report. Mother Lindsay Jackson had costumed her 4-year-old Maddy as "Dolly Parton" -- anatomically correct (chest and backside) Dolly Parton. The Post described Maddy as "embarrass(ed)" at her chest when another 4-year-old pointed at her and asked, "What is that?" (Ultimately, the judges liked Maddy -- for "sweetest face.")
