$10K in purses stolen from Main Street

Grace Inez Adams

OPEN: Susu is open for business this week despite losing many purses to a weekend burglary.

GRACE INEZ ADAMS
SMDP Staff Writer

Susu, a handbag boutique on Main Street was robbed early Saturday morning. The owner, Susu Zheng, said that over 30 bags were taken with a combined value of over $10,000.

Zheng awoke to the news at around 3:30 am.

"My mind went blank for five seconds," she said. "I was still in my pajamas, it suddenly felt very cold. I got up and put my clothes on, tried to keep calm, not panic and then I drove over [to the store]."

She said two police cars were already there when she arrived and that broken glass surrounded the entryway. Security footage obtained from neighboring Shoop's Deli shows a person dressed in black and wearing an orange beanie walking up to Susu while pushing a garbage bin, smashing the glass of the boutique's door, entering and tossing bags out and into the bin before wheeling it away.

Zheng said her store does have an alarm but that the burglary happened too quickly for anyone to respond in time. The suspect was in and out in less than three minutes. She added that the suspect took her most expensive styles and seemed to know which bags were the most valuable, leading her to believe there was prior planning involved.

"It makes me think he may have cased it," she said. "He may have come into the store, looked around, saw the price points and checked the bags."

Zheng said she has a security camera inside the store, but that it was not operational the night of the theft because she was in the process of resetting her wifi password after

Suspect arrested in SMC sexual assault investigation

EMILY SAWICKI
SMDP Staff Writer

The LA County Sheriff's Department and the Santa Monica College Police Department made an arrest on Monday following a reported series of sexual assaults of Santa Monica College students that occurred earlier this month.

A suspect, 27-year-old SMC student Christopher Griddine, was arrested in his vehicle on the Santa Monica College campus around 9 a.m. Monday, Sept. 26, according to a press release supplied by the LASD Special Victims Bureau, four days after the college announced it was on the lookout for a suspect thought to be luring female students off campus and assaulting them.

LASD deputies based out of the Malibu/Lost Hills Sheriff's Station documented two separate sexual assaults between Sept. 18 and Sept. 21, each involving female adult students.

"Both victims were students at Santa Monica College and reported similar experiences wherein they met a male adult suspect on the college campus, whom they believed to be a fellow student," according to the LASD information. "In each incident, the

Malibu leaders denounce proposed $375 million SMC bond

HANS LAETZ
Special to the Daily Press

A broad consensus is emerging among Malibu political leaders from all sides of the spectrum that the proposed Santa Monica College bond issue on this fall's election ballot is a very bad deal for Malibu.

Craig Foster, the city's lone member on the Santa Monica-Malibu School Board is campaigning against the college bond issue.

Foster said all five city council members are also against Measure SMC, a $375 million construction bond proposed by Santa Monica College that will appear on the Nov. 8 ballot in both Santa Monica and Malibu.

In Santa Monica, the bond issue proposes replacing temporary classrooms and an "obsolete" lab, upgrading the Veterans Success Center, adding and expanding facilities for health programs and constructing an SMC Police Department substation.

One big goal is constructing student housing for homeless students and students at risk of homelessness.

But in Malibu, the $375 million bond issue proposed nothing at the new Malibu SMC satellite campus, funded by an earlier bond issue and

NOTICE OF A PUBLIC HEARING BEFORE THE SANTA MONICA CITY COUNCIL

SUBJECT: 1) Approval of Addendum to the Final Environmental Impact Report (FEIR) (SCH #2020100575) for the 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element to the City's General Plan; and
2) Adoption of amendments to the 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element of the City's General Plan previously adopted by the City Council on October 12, 2021.

A public hearing will be held by the City Council to consider approval of an addendum to the Final Environmental Impact Report (FEIR) previously adopted by the City Council on October 12, 2021 for the 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element of the City's General Plan, and adoption of amendments to the 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element. The FEIR was certified and the 6th Cycle Housing Element was adopted by the City Council on October 12, 2021.

The proposed addendum to the Final Environmental Impact Report and revisions to the 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element were prepared in response to a letter from the State Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) dated February 8, 2022 determining that the adopted 6th Cycle Housing Element required revisions in order to comply with State Housing Element law. On September 6, 2022, the HCD issued a letter determining that the revised draft Element resubmitted by the City meets all statutory requirements described in the February 8, 2022 letter, and that it will comply with State Housing Element law when it is adopted, submitted and approved by HCD.

On September 22, 2022, the Santa Monica Planning Commission adopted Resolution Number 22-018 (PCS), recommending to the City Council that the City Council adopt the proposed Amended 6th Cycle Housing Element.

DATE/TIME: TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2022 AT 6:30 PM

LOCATION: City Council Chamber, Second Floor, Santa Monica City Hall, 1685 Main Street, Santa Monica, California

California State law requires that communities prepare and update the Housing Element of the General Plan every eight years. The Housing Element serves as the City's guide for addressing the housing needs of all segments of Santa Monica's population. Housing needs are determined by the California Housing and Community Department (HCD), which decide the numerical housing targets for each regional council of governments. Each council of government across the State then further allocates the regional housing number (known as the Regional Housing Needs Allocation – or RHNA) to every city and county within its jurisdiction. The RHNA is a targeted housing number - cities and counties must plan for the RHNA and show that under current land use and development standards, there is capacity to accommodate for this number of housing. For the proposed 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element, the Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG) determined that the City's draft RHNA allocation is 8,895 units, more than 5 times than the last cycle. The significant increase in the City's RHNA housing number is indicative of the severity of the current housing crisis. As part of the proposed 6th Cycle Housing Element, Santa Monica must demonstrate to the State that there is available capacity within its jurisdictional boundaries to meet its targeted RHNA number.

On October 12, 2021, per State requirements, the City Council adopted its 6th Cycle 2021-2029 Housing Element, which is available online at www.santamonica.gov/housing-element-update. The proposed revisions to the adopted 6th Cycle Housing Element are based on achieving Housing Element compliance as determined by the State Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD). The adopted Housing Element sets forth a series of goals, policies and programs to be implemented over the next 8 years of the 6th Cycle.

The 6th Cycle Housing Element was analyzed in accordance with the California Environmental Quality Act ("CEQA") and this analysis is contained in the Housing Element Update's Final Environmental Impact Report (SCH #2020100575) (FEIR). At its October 12, 2021 meeting, the City Council adopted Resolution Number 11369 (CCS) certifying the FEIR, and Resolution Number 11370 (CCS), making the findings necessary to adopt the Housing Element and adopting a statement of overriding considerations and mitigation monitoring and reporting program.

On February 8, 2022, the State Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) issued a letter determining that although the Adopted 6th Cycle Housing Element addressed "many statutory requirements," "revisions would be necessary to comply with State Housing Element Law". The proposed revisions were prepared in response to the comments received from HCD and are consistent with the draft revisions the City Council reviewed at its June 21, 2022 meeting and directed staff to submit to HCD for review. Additional environmental analysis was prepared as an addendum to the project's Final Environmental Impact Report.

On June 21, 2022, the City Council reviewed the draft revisions to the 6th Cycle Housing Element, made recommended revisions, and directed staff to transmit to HCD for review and comment.

On September 6, 2022, the HCD issued a letter determining that the revised draft Element meets all statutory requirements described in the February 8, 2022 letter, and that it will comply with State Housing Element law when it is adopted, submitted and approved by HCD.

The proposed revisions are consistent with the draft revisions presented to the City Council on June 21, 2022, except for revisions to implementation deadlines for certain programs to reflect changes in State law and minor typographical errors. On September 22, 2022, the Planning Commission adopted Resolution Number 22-018 (PCS), recommending that City Council adopt the proposed revisions to the 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element, with recommended revisions to the proposed implementation timelines for certain programs. The proposed September 2022 revisions to the 6th Cycle Housing Element are available online at www.santamonica.gov/housing-element-update.

The City Council will consider approval of the addendum to the Final Environmental Impact Report and consider the adoption of amendments to the 6th Cycle (2021-2029) Housing Element.

A doc from the Disney family takes aim at the Mouse House

JAKE COYLE
AP Film Writer

Abigail E. Disney has been critical of the company that bears her name before. But for the first time, Disney, the granddaughter of co-founder Roy O. Disney, has put her views into the medium the Mouse House was built on: a movie.

In the new documentary "The American Dream and Other Fairy Tales," Disney argues that the Walt Disney Co. has lost its moral compass. As one of the company's most prominent and outspoken critics — one who happens to be from within the Disney family — Disney lays out an unflattering portrait of the company, particularly in regard to pay inequity and the struggles of some theme park employees to sustain their families on minimum-wage salaries.

"They have gone the way of most every other company in this country. They started with a bigger idea of themselves than that," Disney said in an interview. "The Walt Disney Co. was better. It was kinder, it was gentler. It was a human company.

"We have lost the plot," said Disney.

"The American Dream," which is playing in select theaters and debuts Friday on video-on-demand, is directed by Disney, an activist and film producer, and the filmmaker Kathleen Hughes. It was made on the heels of a series of tweets from Disney in 2019 in which she slammed Bob Iger, then-Disney chief executive, for compensation that in 2018 surpassed $65 million. Disney's siblings, Susan Disney Lord and Tim Disney, are also executive producers on the film, which was made without any interaction from the company.

> They have gone the way of most every other company in this country. They started with a bigger idea of themselves than that - Abigail Disney

"No one's reached out to me. I'm a little mystified by it, frankly," said Disney. "I'm happy to talk if that's what they want to do. I am rooting for them. I love this company. This is a love letter to the company. But when you really, really love something and see it going off the rails, you can't be silent."

The film follows four Disneyland custodians who on a salary of $15 an hour struggle to make ends meet in the high-priced Anaheim, California, area. Growing pay gaps between executives and low-rung workers is an issue Disney knows goes far beyond the company her film concerns. At one point in the film, she describes her hope for change as "a little Disney.

"I know that people think I'm just living out here in abstract land," Disney said. "But the abstractions matter a lot, and the sensibilities must change."

Wages for some Disney workers have been changing. Unions representing 9,500 workers at Disneyland averted a strike by ratifying a contact that raised pay from $15.45 an hour to $18. A union representing hotel workers at an Anaheim hotel also recently reached agreement on $23.50 an hour. (Anaheim's living wage ordinance, which is $23.50, was earlier ruled not to apply to Disneyland.)

In response to "The American Dream," a Disney spokesperson replied with a statement.

"Our amazing cast members, storytellers, and employees are the heart and soul of Disney, and their wellbeing is our top priority. We work hard to ensure that our team is supported in ways that enable them to grow their careers, care for their families, and thrive at work — which is why so many people choose to spend their entire careers with us."

The spokesperson also cited medical coverage, access to tuition-free higher education and subsidized child care as worker benefits. "We are committed to building on these impactful programs by identifying new ways to support our cast members and communities around the world," said the spokesperson.

When Roy E. Disney, who founded the company with his brother, Walt, in 1923, stepped down from the board in 2003, the family ceased participating in running the company. Since Abigail Disney made her documentary, which first premiered in January at the Sundance Film Festival, Iger has been succeeded by Bob Chapek, who had previously run parks for the company. In that period, prices have risen sharply at the company's theme parks — another point of contention for Disney.

"I just don't think it's a good idea for Disneyland to become a luxury vacation that most Americans can't access," she said. "I don't know how much more the brand can take."

Disney, though, was encouraged by workers who protested Chapek's response to Florida legislation that critics have dubbed the "Don't Say Gay" bill. To Disney, the situation reflected the corporation's struggle to maintain a role as any kind of moral authority amid such politically polarized times.

"There is no such thing as not having a position on this question," she said. "There is no neutral ground. To pretend you can stand still on a moving train is a terrible mistake."

Ultimately, Disney increasingly doesn't recognize the company that for much of her life was the family business. Making a movie about her disapproval, she says, was "exquisitely uncomfortable." But she hasn't given up a happily-ever-after ending.

"I really do mean well," Disney says. "You can say a lot of things about me, but I mean well."

Bills would curtail objections at future Jan. 6 vote counts

MARY CLARE JALONICK
Associated Press

Members of Congress have officially objected to the results in four of the last six presidential elections, a partisan practice that has been legal for over a century but became much more fraught after a violent mob of then-President Donald Trump's supporters attacked the U.S. Capitol last year.

In an effort to prevent another Jan. 6, 2021, bills moving through the House and the Senate would make it harder to lodge those objections when Congress counts the electoral votes in a joint session after every presidential election. The move to curtail the objections is part of a larger effort to overhaul the 1800s-era Electoral Count Act and safeguard the integrity of the vote after Trump tried to persuade his Republican allies in Congress to vote against Democrat Joe Biden's victory and overturn his 2020 defeat.

Under current law, only one member of the House and one member of the Senate has to challenge a state's results to trigger votes on that state's electors in each chamber. If a simple majority in each chamber votes to sustain the objection, that state's votes can be thrown out.

The House and Senate bills would each raise that threshold substantially, with the House bill requiring a third of each chamber to object and the Senate bill requiring a fifth of each chamber to object. The House legislation, passed last week, would also lay out new requirements for the grounds for an objection.

"It is just too easy to trigger an objection when it only requires one person in each chamber," says Maine Sen. Susan Collins, a Republican co-sponsor of the Senate version. Eleven GOP senators have signed on to the legislation, which is up for a vote in a Senate committee on Tuesday.

If the bills are consolidated into one measure that becomes law, it will do away with a tradition that has become increasingly popular as Congress has become more polarized.

Democrats have objected the last three times that Republicans were elected — twice against George W. Bush and once against Trump — but in each of those cases the Democratic candidate had already conceded the election.

The stakes were raised considerably in 2021, when Trump and his allies were actively trying to thwart Biden's win, with a strategy to throw out Biden electors in Congress and the support of a violent mob that broke into the Capitol, interrupted the joint session and threatened the lives of lawmakers and Vice President Mike Pence.

House Administration Chairwoman Zoe Lofgren of California, the Democratic sponsor of the House bill with Republican Rep. Liz Cheney of Wyoming, said the bill would protect the voters' will from "frivolous" objections and more sinister efforts.

"If you want to object to the vote, you better have your colleagues and the Constitution on your side," Lofgren said just before the bill passed. "Don't try to overturn our democracy."

At the 2021 joint session, two GOP senators — Ted Cruz of Texas and Josh Hawley of Missouri — joined a larger group of House Republicans in objecting to Biden's electoral votes in Arizona and Pennsylvania, two swing states that Trump had won in the 2016 election but lost in 2020. Both the House and the Senate voted to certify Biden's win in those states in the hours after the rioters had injured police officers, rampaged through the Capitol and sent lawmakers running for their lives. But eight senators and almost 140 members of the House voted to sustain the objections.

Congress had only held such votes twice since the enactment of the Electoral Count Act 135 years ago. In 1969, two Democratic senators joined a member of the House to object to the vote of one elector in North Carolina during the certification of Republican Richard Nixon's victory. In 2004, Democratic Sen. Barbara Boxer of California and Rep. Stephanie Tubbs Jones, D-Ohio, objected to President George W. Bush's electors in Ohio over what they said were voting irregularities.

In both cases, the House and the Senate rejected the objections.

In several other instances, members of the House have lodged objections without the support of a senator. In 2000, several members of the Congressional Black Caucus objected to Bush's electors in Florida after the Supreme Court had forced a halt to vote-counting in that state and decided the election. Vice President Al Gore, whom Bush had defeated, gaveled the objections down as he presided over the session.

In 2016, several Democrats stood and objected to Trump's win over Democrat Hillary Clinton but no senator joined, and Vice President Joe Biden dismissed them. Like Gore, Clinton had already conceded defeat.

Members on both sides of the Capitol have been working on the revisions to the Electoral Count Act since the 2021 insurrection, saying the law's vague language was not robust enough protection against Trump's overt attempts to subvert the will of the people. The bills would also clarify that the vice president's role is solely ceremonial and try to prevent states from creating slates of illegitimate electors, as Trump's allies tried to do.

The House bill is more expansive than the Senate bill, and the two sides will eventually have to resolve their differences into a single measure. That includes the House language with new grounds for any objection, which would restrict the process even further.

Under the House legislation, no member could make an objection unless it fell under a strict set of parameters that relate to the Constitution — that the state is not validly a state, if the state submits too many electoral votes or if a candidate is not eligible, for example.

House Republicans argued against the legislation by saying it was a political attack on Trump, noting the frequent Democratic objections over the years. It only received nine Republican votes, all from members who are not returning to the House next year.

Rep. Jamie Raskin, D-Md., responded that if lawmakers believed there had been too many objections in the past, "you should absolutely be supporting this legislation."

After the police left, Zheng didn't want to leave her store unattended with the broken door so she stayed there alone for several hours until the police returned to do forensics and several friends came to help her clean up. She said customers, nearby business owners and even strangers who heard about what happened have been reaching out with messages of support and some have sent flowers or come by to buy bags.

"A lady came in who lives near here – she was in my store before and she had bought a bag for her sister-in-law – she came in and she was crying." Zheng said. "I was really touched and she said 'don't leave please, we love you, and we love your store - it's beautiful.'"

Zheng first opened Susu on Main Street in December 2021, but has been designing and selling the bags online for over a decade. She said she has no plans of leaving the area but does intend to beef up her security. When she fixes the door, which is currently covered by a bolted-on wooden plank, she said she is going to add a metal sliding feature which she can close at night.

The investigation into the robbery is ongoing. An SMPD spokesperson said there are "no details of the suspect(s) at this time" and that the police report on the incident has been forwarded to Criminal Investigations Division detectives to follow up.

scheduled to open next year.

There is a vague proposal to contribute $20 million of the Measure SMC bonds to build a joint use Performing Arts Center at Malibu High School.

Speaking during a Malibu Measure M Bond Oversight Committee meeting last week, Foster called that "insulting" to Malibu taxpayers.

"For the Malibu High School Performing Arts Center, we could do it ourselves and keep 100% of our bond money," Foster said. "So, they sort of annoyingly said, 'Well, $20 million is more than nothing,' but paying $125 million of Malibu residents' money to get a $20 million tip from Santa Monica College is one of the reasons why I characterize this as insulting."

At the same meeting, Malibu Mayor Paul Grisanti said he wants SMC to pay for a performing arts center for joint use by the college and Malibu High School to be located at Malibu High.

Grisanti, like Foster, pointed out that the bond would have $125 million flowing from Malibu to Santa Monica College and only $20 million coming back for Malibu projects.

"They came up with a number they were talking about the neighborhood and things like that," Grisanti said, "and it was explained to them that was not a realistic contribution towards what we were looking for."

Measure SMC would increase property taxes in both Santa Monica and Malibu by 2.5 cents per $100 assessed valuation per year.

Malibu-based KBUU News reported there had not emerged any outspoken support for the bond anywhere in Malibu and could not locate a source to speak in favor of the bond in Malibu.

On Thursday, a mailer arrived at Malibu mailboxes from the "Yes On SMC" committee.

Not one name from Malibu was endorsing it, though it did name the Malibu-Pacific Palisades Chamber of Commerce as being in support.

Foster, who announced earlier this summer that he would not be seeking re-election for a third term on the SMMUSD School Board, said he would urge Malibu voters to vote against the Santa Monica College bond issue and instead work toward a Malibu-only school bond down the line.

"We can pass our own bond and build our own Performing Arts Center where 100% of the funds are spent here," Foster suggested. "So, it's highly problematic from my point of view. I'm counting in my head but I am pretty sure that in addition to me saying 'No' to the SMS bond, every single city council member has also said that they are 'No' on the Santa Monica bond. This will be something that I will be communicating very clearly to the Malibu voters."

A version of this story was broadcast by KBUU News.

California governor rejects mandatory kindergarten law

SOPHIE AUSTIN
Associated Press/ Report for America

Beyond what they learn academically in kindergarten, students learn everyday routines: how to take care of class materials and how to be kind to their peers, according to Golden Empire Elementary School kindergarten teacher Carla Randazzo.

While developing those skills became more difficult for students going to school online during the pandemic, occasionally, a student entering first grade at Golden Empire didn't attend kindergarten at all, Randazzo said. Nearly two-thirds of students at the Sacramento school are English learners.

"Those kids just start out having to climb uphill," she said. "They need a lot of support to be successful."

Randazzo always thought it was "peculiar" that kindergarten is not mandatory in California. For now, though, California won't join 20 other states with mandatory kindergarten.

Gov. Gavin Newsom, a Democrat, vetoed legislation Sunday night that would have required children to attend kindergarten — whether through homeschooling, public or private school — before entering first grade at a public school.

As he has with other recent legislative vetoes, Newsom cited the costs associated with providing mandatory kindergarten, about $268 million annually, which he said was not accounted for in the California budget.

Newsom has supported similar legislation in the past. Last year, he signed a package of education bills, including one transitioning the state to universal pre-K starting in the 2025-26 school year. But the state's Department of Finance opposed the mandatory kindergarten bill, stating it would strain funds by adding up to 20,000 new public school students.

Proponents of mandatory kindergarten say it could help close the academic opportunity gap for low-income students and students of color, as well as help children develop important social skills before the 1st grade. The bill was introduced after K-12 attendance rates dropped during the pandemic and some students struggled with online learning.

Kindergarten enrollment in California dropped nearly 12% in the 2020-21 academic year compared to the previous year, according to the state Department of Education. Nationwide, public school enrollment dropped by 3 percent in 2020-21 compared to the previous school year, with preschool and kindergarten enrollment dropping at higher rates, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

Samantha Fee, of Citrus Heights, said her 7-year-old son could solve practically any math equation during the 2020-21 school year, while he attended kindergarten online. But by the end of the school year, he still couldn't read and didn't know all his letters.

She said the family made the difficult decision to have her son, who attends Golden Empire, repeat kindergarten to prepare him for first grade.

> "They learn a lot in that first year — how to sit at their desks, and how to raise their hand and all that they're expected to know in the first grade - Samantha Fee

"They learn a lot in that first year — how to sit at their desks, and how to raise their hand and all that they're expected to know in the first grade," Fee said. "Without kindergarten, they don't have that."

Research from the Economic Policy Institute shows that disparities in academic opportunity begin as early as kindergarten. Children who develop their social and emotional skills by the time they reach kindergarten age can be more likely to go to college, according to a 2015 study by the American Public Health Association.

"The pandemic led to a startling drop in K-12 enrollment, raising concerns about a widening opportunity gap," said Jessica Lall, president and CEO of the Central City Association of Los Angeles.

While the legislation to make kindergarten mandatory passed overwhelmingly in both houses of the Legislature, Sen. Brian Jones of San Diego County opposed it, saying the state should focus instead on education reform.

Newsom also vetoed separate legislation that would have required every school with kindergarten to offer at least one full-day class option, saying it "will create one-time and ongoing costs in the hundreds of millions of dollars," noting that the 2022-23 budget included $4 billion in funding for expanded learning opportunities.

Fall brings summer-like temperatures to Southern California

The first full week of fall brought summer-like temperatures to Southern California on Monday along with an increased risk of wildfires.

Excessive heat warnings and advisories were issued for inland areas through midweek, with maximum temperatures predicted to reach 103 in foothills and valleys.

The National Weather Service said so-called sundowner winds around dusk on Monday and Tuesday could gust to 45 mph. The heat will elevate the risk of wildfires and the strong winds have to the potential to create erratic conditions for flames.

The weather service urged residents to avoid strenuous outdoor activities, stay hydrated and check up on elderly neighbors and those without air conditioning.

Temperatures in the mid-90s were possible throughout the Central Valley into inland Northern California.

It won't be as scorching as it was earlier this month, when California and some other Western states experienced one of the hottest and longest heat waves on record. Nearly 54 million people were under heat warnings and advisories across the region in the first weeks of September as temperature records were shattered in many areas.

California man sentenced to 4 years for COVID-19 loan fraud

A Southern California man was sentenced Monday to four years in federal prison for fraudulently obtaining more than $5 million in COVID-relief loans for three shell companies, prosecutors said.

Raghavender Reddy Budamala, who was arrested in February while trying to cross the border into Mexico, was also ordered to pay $5.15 million in restitution, the U.S. Attorney's Office said in a statement.

Budamala, 36, pleaded guilty in June to one count of bank fraud and one count of money laundering. As part of his plea agreement, the Irvine resident agreed to forfeit real estate in Orange and Los Angeles counties, as well as approximately $4.1 million in funds from bank and investment accounts and in cryptocurrency, the statement said..

Following the outbreak of the COVID-19 pandemic, Budamala submitted seven applications for pandemic-relief loans for three shell companies with no operations, prosecutors said. Budamala falsely represented that his companies employed dozens of individuals and earned millions of dollars in revenue, and that he needed the money for payroll and business expenses, according to court papers.

The addresses listed for the companies were bogus, nonexistent or residential, prosecutors said.

He used the money to buy three homes, including a $1.2 million home in Los Angeles and a property in Malibu worth nearly $600,000, court documents said.

Adult female P-65 is the first mountain lion in study to die of complications from mange

Adult female mountain lion P-65 is the first mountain lion in a two-decade-long National Park Service (NPS) research study to have died of complications from notoedric mange, a highly contagious skin disease caused by a mite parasite.

P-65 was found dead by biologists on March 4, 2022, near a stream in the central Santa Monica Mountains, where she lived. She was estimated to be around five years of age.

Her case of mange was severe, evidenced by hair loss and skin encrustation, especially on her face and head. She was also extremely emaciated. After death, she was taken to the California Animal Health and Food Safety Lab (CAHFS) for a full necropsy and testing. Toxicological tests revealed that she was exposed to five different anticoagulant rodenticides, also known as rat poisons, and to bromethalin, a neurotoxic rodenticide.

The five anticoagulant rodenticide compounds detected in P-65's liver, brodifacoum, bromadiolone, difethialone, chlorophacinone, and diphacinone, included both first-generation and longer-lasting and faster-acting second-generation compounds.

"We've had several radio-collared mountain lions that have contracted mange in the past, although in previous cases we were able to treat them with a topical anti-parasitic medicine," said Jeff Sikich, a wildlife biologist with the park who leads the fieldwork on the mountain lion project. "All of these animals recovered from their mange disease as best as we could tell from remote camera photos or later examination.

However, in P-65's case, we did not know about her disease until after she had died."

Notoedric mange is a skin disease resulting from infection by mites in the genus Notoedres which affects wild cats such as bobcats and mountain lions, as well as other wildlife species including squirrels and rabbits.

Through long-term NPS research on bobcats in the Santa Monica Mountains and Simi Hills, notoedric mange was found to be a major source of mortality since it was first documented in late 2001. This research has shown a strong correlation between severe mange and the level of exposure to anticoagulant rodenticides, and through collaboration with colleagues at UCLA, AR exposure was associated with multiple impacts on bobcat immune systems at both physiological and genetic levels.

These impacts of toxicant exposure on an animal's immune system may in turn make them more susceptible to contracting mange disease.

Mountain lions that we were able to test that have been documented with mange have also been exposed to ARs, although virtually every mountain lion tested overall has also been exposed. In mountain lions, six collared animals and seven animals overall have been documented to have died from the direct effects of the poisons, specifically bleeding to death internally after the toxicants prevented their blood from clotting.

Biologists say that P-65 was an interesting cat to study.

She was first captured and collared in the central portion of the Santa Monica Mountains in March 2018. She survived the Woolsey Fire in November 2018, and based on her GPS locations, her home range was found to be entirely within the overall burn perimeter, although during this time she largely used the southeast corner of the burn where there were some sizable, unburned islands.

In August 2019, P-65 became the second radio-collared female mountain lion to cross the 101 Freeway in the study's history. She moved northward into the Simi Hills from the Liberty Canyon area of Agoura Hills, where the Wallis Annenberg Wildlife Crossing is currently under construction.

Biologists believe P-65 most likely ran across the actual roadway. She eventually crossed the freeway again, returning to the central Santa Monica Mountains in the following weeks.

In the summer of 2020, P-65 gave birth to a litter of three kittens, P88, P89, and P90. Last year, biologists captured the two remaining kittens – males P-89 and P-90 – to place GPS radio collars on them.

Interestingly, both P-89 and P-90 had mange when captured. The two cats were both treated for mange, and remote camera photos later indicated that they had likely recovered. Unfortunately, both P-89 and P-90 were killed on local roads after dispersing from their mother.

P-89 recently died on the 101 Freeway in Woodland Hills in July 2022 and P-90 died several weeks ago on Highway 33 just south of Ojai in Ventura County.

NPS has been studying mountain lions in and around the Santa Monica Mountains for the last two decades to determine how they survive in a fragmented and urbanized environment. CDFW is responsible for overseeing the management and conservation of mountain lions in the state.

Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area (SMMNRA) is the largest urban national park in the country, encompassing more than 150,000 acres of mountains and coastline in Ventura and Los Angeles counties. A unit of the National Park Service, it comprises a seamless network of local, state and federal parks interwoven with private lands and communities. As one of only five Mediterranean ecosystems in the world, SMMNRA preserves the rich biological diversity of more than 450 animal species and 26 distinct plant communities. Capitol ahead of last year's joint session, said in an interview that he is "skeptical" of the effort to change a law that has been in place for so many years.

"My concern is that it's going to look like to Republican voters that Democrats can object as much as often as they want," the Missouri Republican said, noting the objections in 2000, 2004 and 2016.

"As soon as Republicans do, they change the law," Hawley said. "I can promise you, that will be the perception."

Still, 11 Republican senators have signed on to the Senate bill, enough to break a filibuster and pass the bill in the 50-50 Senate.

Pennsylvania Sen. Pat Toomey, who is retiring, was the latest GOP senator to sign on to the legislation last week.

"The poor drafting of the 1887 Electoral Count Act endangered the transition of power from one Administration to the next," Toomey said when he announced his support.

"Unfortunately, in the over 100 intervening years, individual Democratic and Republican members of Congress have occasionally attempted to exploit the ambiguities in this law to cast doubt on the validity of our elections, culminating in the debacle of January 6, 2021," he said. "It is past time Congress act."

victims agreed to socialize with the suspect off-campus. While off-campus, the suspect drove the victims to secluded areas within the Malibu Canyon area, where he sexually assaulted them. After assaulting the victims, the suspect drove them back to their homes."

After his arrest at the college, Griddine was booked at the South Los Angeles Sheriff's Station where he remains in custody in lieu of $1 million bail. Griddine is set to be arraigned on Sept. 28 at Van Nuys Courthouse.

LASD data show deputies for the Malibu/Lost Hills Station in Calabasas arrested Griddine earlier this year on March 8 for an unspecified citation; he was held on $35,000 bail before being released the following morning.

SMC Police declined to comment on the investigation and referred all questions to LASD.

"We strive to be one of the safest colleges in California and ... the alleged actions of this arrested individual are not indicative of the behavior or conduct of those in our community," according to a statement provided by SMC Police. "Santa Monica College is a safe, inclusive and dynamic learning environment that supports academic programs and services intended to serve diverse individuals from local, national and global communities."

Detectives investigating the alleged string of crimes believe there may be additional victims who have not come forward. LASD and SMC Police reported they were seeking the public's help to identify additional victims in the ongoing investigation.

"The Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department – Special Victims Bureau is tasked with investigating the sexual and physical abuse of children and felonious sexual assaults involving adult victims," according to the LASD information. "Anyone with information about this incident is encouraged to contact the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department, Special Victims Bureau toll free tip line"

LASD Special Victims Bureau can be reached at (877) 710-5273 or by email at specialvictimsbureau@lasd.org. TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Sept. 27)

A beautiful relationship sets the tone. You understand each other with minimal efforts within the magic world you co-create. New ways of organizing your life will have you accomplishing more with your days with greater pleasure. More highlights: a stellar invitation, a view from above and a cash prize for your special skill. Libra and Aquarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 2, 22, 18, 39 and 1.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You'll try new things and enjoy the process of becoming. Being driven to improve is not a rejection of who you are, rather it's a gift to yourself — a vote of confidence in your power to walk the world in your preferred way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll expand your circle. Barriers between you and those you don't know will melt away. You'll feel as relaxed and easygoing around strangers as you do around your nearest and dearest.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Sometimes you want things but are afraid to ask. Make a conscious effort to be direct and to voice your interest. If you're not asking the right person, it's better to find that out quickly so you can redirect.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You're getting mentally prepared to do a job even as you prepare your physical surroundings. This entails sharpening your tools so you're ready with what's needed. Your motivation and your skill will grow together.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Despite being unable to control other people's happiness, you can contribute to it. Take into account what the others expect and play with that expectation. You'll delight in their smiles knowing you had something to do with it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You can still be independent without making things harder than they need to be. Use the help you're given and avoid redundancy. You'll start where the last person left off and build ever higher.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Laziness isn't always a fault; sometimes it's a skill. Those who don't want to work too hard often think of an easier way to do things. Also, overworking can cause injury that can be avoided by a more relaxed approach.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The ease of life is largely determined by how well we are getting along with our nearest and dearest. Tend to relationships. Stick up for your friends. Take everyone's opinion with a grain of salt.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Some goals take longer to realize, and it would be pointless and ineffective to rush them. There's no need to be frustrated over processes you cannot control. You're better to trust the timing of the universe.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The term "friendly competition" can be a descriptor or an oxymoron. Some people's serious drive to win prevents them from playing around. To them, every game is war. Recognize and avoid these types now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The lake may appear calm from the shore, but it teems with activity under the surface. There is always more to know if you care to go a little deeper. Whether or not you need to or should, that will be the point to ponder.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Just by being you and doing the next right thing, you'll have the impact you wish to have on the world. You can't change anyone, but you might make them want to change, thereby affecting destiny.
