CASES: Booster shots and rapid tests are the next front in fighting Covid.

With most of Los Angeles' professional sports teams currently playing and the holidays nearing, LA County health officials say FDA-approved rapid tests could be used as an extra layer of protection.

The county is still seeing substantial transmission and health officials are asking community members to remain vigilant to avoid a devastating winter surge.

"I think it's a personal choice, but rapid tests...make sure you're using one that's approved by the FDA. I think we have an important role to play as we're going to be doing a lot more gathering," Director

CELEBRATION: On Friday, the Santa Monica community was invited to a closing ceremony for the city's first Hispanic Heritage Month celebration. The event was held in front of City Hall. Community members experienced Latin-inspired music, food, clothes and jewelry. There was also a DJ and photo opportunities.

Public Safety report sunk by poor attendance

DANIEL FARR
SMDP Staff Writer

The Public Safety Reform and Oversight Commission (PSROC) has submitted a draft report regarding recommendations to reform public safety in the city despite failing to formally endorse the work.

The Commission has been working on a document that incorporates recommendations made by the OIR group following last year's riots, responses from SMPD and follow-up plans by the Commission itself. However, a persistent lack of participation has made it difficult to take formal votes.

Commission chair George Brown still submitted the draft report Friday morning.

"Last night the Commission voted 5-4 in favor of the draft Report to City Council re OIR Group Findings on May 31, 2020 Protests," Brown said in a letter to the city council. "Because our Commission has 11 members, and

School supplies lawsuit could conclude in November

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

A multi-year court case over fees in local schools could come to an end in November if a judge adheres to a recently published schedule.

Attorney Kevin Shenkman initiated the lawsuit in 2017 on behalf of parents Vivian Mahl and Gina de Baca, claiming that SMMUSD required families to pay for field trips, uniforms, and school supplies in violation of the constitutional guarantee to a free education.

The suit originally included 626 claims totaling $1,632,424 with an average of $1,650 per claim. Seven claims exceeded $10,000, maxing out at $15,535.81. An additional claim demanded reimbursement for $552,257.21.

The District has disputed the suit from the start saying it already had a process in place that allowed parents to file for reimbursements but the two sides reached a settlement in 2019. However, final approval of the settlement was delayed as the parties could not come to an agreement regarding more than 300 disputed claims, the court-ordered referee to adjudicate the process quit and the courts began experiencing Covid related shutdowns.

Earlier this month, Superintendent Dr. Ben Drati sent a letter to parents with an update on the case. In his letter, he said the decision to settle was a financial one.

"Both the initial decision to settle the lawsuit and the decision to approve a resolution

About 99% of court employees fulfill vaccine mandate

After notifying employees they had 45 days to get fully vaccinated on or before October 7 as a condition of employment, approximately 99% of the nation's largest trial court's employees have provided proof of full vaccination or requested a medical or religious exemption as required under the Court's mandatory vaccination policy – and the number continues to rise hour-by-hour, Executive Officer/Clerk of Court Sherri R. Carter announced.

"I am extremely proud that our employees have prioritized their own health as well as the well-being of co-workers and the public who rely on them to access justice," Carter said. "Court employees have done their part to help Los Angeles County public health officials get as many people vaccinated as possible as we work together to one day end this pandemic."

The vaccine mandate, which took effect August 23, did not include judicial officers, as they are state Constitutional Officers and not employees of the Court. However, Presiding Judge Eric C. Taylor indicated that judicial officers are equally supportive of the vaccination effort, and that most judges are participating by voluntarily reporting their vaccination status.

The Court was one of the first public sector employers in the state of California to announce a mandatory vaccination policy for its workforce.

"Since the start of the pandemic, the Court has strictly followed public health and CDC guidelines to protect those who enter its courthouses and provided all of this information on our website since the pandemic's onset at this link: http://www.lacourt.org/newsmedia/ui/AccessLACourtYourWay.aspx," Presiding Judge Taylor said. "The Court continued to require face coverings in all public and private spaces even when other agencies and businesses stopped doing so. The summer Delta surge demonstrated the prudence of the Court's protective approach."

Led by Presiding Judge Taylor, the Court advocated for court staff, as well as the Court's justice partners, to be prioritized early this year for the COVID-19 vaccination.

Santa Monica Place/Macerich Provide Philanthropic Match to Inspire Donations Dollar-for-Dollar Match

Santa Monica Place and Macerich will match up to $15,000 in donations to the Santa Monica Education Foundation. This marks their eighth year of supporting the Ed Foundation. The matching funds will be offered from October 18-22, 2021, coinciding with the Ed Foundation's Pledge Week, a week-long campaign to encourage families and the community to invest in Santa Monica's public school students.

"We are honored to support our local public schools with a gift to the Santa Monica Education Foundation," said Julia B. Ladd, Assistant Vice President, Property Management at Santa Monica Place. "Nothing is more important than a good education, and we are thrilled to be a part of this community's effort to educate its students. With this matching gift, we hope to inspire others to join us and invest in our youth."

This matching gift brings Santa Monica Place/Macerich's total commitment to Santa Monica schools to $157,500 over the last eight years. Their commitment goes beyond financial contributions, having shown support through many meaningful and in-kind gifts as well.

Money raised during Pledge Week will fund arts programs, elementary classroom aides, STEM, and student health and wellness programs in Santa Monica public schools. During the week, Ed Foundation staff and Board members, as well as school leaders and volunteers, will be at many Santa Monica schools to encourage families to join the community-wide effort of supporting students.

"We are excited to kick off Pledge Week with this generous matching gift from Santa Monica Place and Macerich," said Alison Havel, President of the Ed Foundation's Board of Directors. "It is wonderful that they have continued their years-long financial support of the Ed Foundation, even during challenging times like this. We are grateful for their inspiring commitment to excellence in Santa Monica schools."

of the disputed claims were financial and operational decisions," he said. "Stated simply, this negotiated resolution will cost the district less than proceeding with the dispute resolution process, and will not force district and school administrators and staff to divert their attention away from their day-to-day commitment to district students and families."

In his letter, Drati said the case would be back before a judge on Oct. 12. However, at the October hearing, the judge again delayed a ruling until November.

According to SMMUSD, the judge postponed the hearing after asking that the plaintiff amend the proposed court order granting final approval of the settlement, and to file the amended proposed order with the court. The length of the postponement was based solely on the availability of hearing times on the judge's docket.

October is more than ADHD Awareness Month for me. It's also a reminder of the struggles I've overcome with my own mental health, and why I committed my career to helping others that struggle as I did.

As a child with ADHD, I was very disorganized in school—so much so that I would lose not only my homework but also my backpack. Teachers would admonish me by saying "you need to focus" and "you could do well if you applied yourself" without knowing what I was going through. At the time, I didn't know what I was dealing with either.

Those comments, and my own lack of understanding about my condition, had a negative impact on my mental health. I wasn't having the same experience or receiving the same support as other kids; I knew I was different. Because of that, I went through bouts of depression beginning in middle school and throughout my life.

When I was tested and diagnosed as an adult, the psychologist said I had the worst case of adult ADHD she had seen in her practice.

My struggle with ADHD, however, is not unique. The disorder impacts roughly 10.5 million adults in the United States. Many of those cases stem from the disorder persisting in children who go undiagnosed.

Picture ADHD. Often what comes to mind is a young boy bouncing off the walls. But the cases often overlooked are those children that seem to be paying attention, even when they're not—words go in one ear and out the other. This inattentive subtype contradicts our preconceived notions of what ADHD is "supposed" to look like and has led to it being severely underdiagnosed in many cases.

Adults that struggle with ADHD, particularly when undiagnosed or untreated, are more likely to develop addictions or substance use disorders. A 2020 ADDitude Magazine survey found that more than 15 percent of adults with ADHD relied upon alcohol and drugs during the past year—nearly triple the rate when compared to adults without ADHD.

Many adults with ADHD may also have problems regulating their emotions, and may display anger, impatience, an inability to get along at work, self-doubt and have difficulty managing stress. I endured depressive episodes for years during my own struggle with ADHD. I tried different medications, but any symptom relief was negated by drastic weight gain and other severe side effects.

My own mental health struggle helped me find my passion in the world of neuroscience, where I was first exposed to alternative treatment methods. These cutting-edge treatments included transcranial magnetic stimulation (TMS), ketamine infusion and neurofeedback, among others, all of which have shown to be effective at alleviating symptoms of ADHD, depression, Bipolar Disorder, PTSD, OCD, insomnia and more.

Many people have endured struggles similar to mine but aren't aware of the alternative treatments available to them. Because of this, it's important to continue raising awareness about how ADHD presents itself and how we can best treat it.

It's not necessary to have a story like mine to help someone struggling with ADHD or other mental health disorders. However, I'm grateful every day that my journey led me here, and that my team at TMS & Brain Health gets to help those struggling with these life-changing treatment methods.

Ben Spielberg is the CEO and founding neuroscientist of TMS & Brain Health, an innovative brain health center based in Santa Monica and Los Angeles. two were absent, we were unable to achieve the six-vote threshold required for official action. Nevertheless, the Draft Report reflects the Chair's intended plan for the direction of the Commission and I believe it is useful to share it with the City Council."

A majority is required to formally accept the draft report which would have been six votes. Commissioners Miranda McLaughlin-Basseri and Samantha Mota were missing resulting in the split decision.

According to Brown's letter, one unnamed member has several unexcused absences and the lack of participation made finalizing the report harder than it should have been and PSROC members took notice.

When the Commission debated calling the missing members to ask for their vote, some questioned if they would be able to do so.

"I don't want to draw any conclusions as to whether or not we've reached out to the commissioners that are not here today," Commissioner Jamie Cruz said. "Perhaps they thoroughly went over the report. Think it's already been said that, you know, they may not have. So all in all, with people's cameras off, I don't even know if they're there. As you know some commissioners have their cameras off. So, you know, I think it's just important to be consistent."

The two newest members of the Commission, Joseph Palazzolo and Luis Ramirez voted against the Draft Report but did not offer an alternative for the Commission to meet its obligations. George Centeno and Manju Raman were also among the no votes. The main differences sprouted from the language used in the latest draft.

"I disagreed with the term using 'opportunistic' to describe the looting that took place. I have three quotes here from the OIR report that sort of poo poo that idea, that it was opportunistic," Commissioner Joseph Palazzolo said.

Palazzolo said the report cited small factions of unlawful protesters who were engaged in scattered acts of aggression while some of the looting was decidedly organized. He said the OIR report specifically cited social media posts prior to the incident as evidence the crimes had been pre-planned.

Commissioners will try yet again to hammer out a finalized draft pertaining to the riots of 2020 later this month. For more information on the PSROC, visit: https://www.santamonica.gov/public-safety-reform-and-oversight-commission

NOTICE OF A PUBLIC HEARING BEFORE THE SANTA MONICA CITY COUNCIL

SUBJECT: Adoption of Master User Fee Resolution and Resolution Modifying Credit Card Convenience Fee for Utility Payments

PROJECT DESCRIPTIONS
The City Council will conduct a public hearing on the proposed adoption of new fees and revision to existing fees charged by the City's Community Development Department, Department of Transportation, Public Works Department, Community Services Department, and Fire Department for the provision of a variety of services including, but not limited to: construction permits on private property and in the public right of way, voluntary pre-submittal plan reviews, recreational services, emergency medical services, Airport related services, parking signage, and other permit and user fees for services provided to or for the benefit of particular individuals rather than the general public.

The City Council will also conduct a public hearing to hear anyone wishing to speak regarding a proposed resolution which revises certain convenience fees pursuant to Government Code 6159(h) for credit or debit card payments to the City for utility-related payments. These convenience fees are paid to third-party merchant processing companies, and the City will not retain any portion of the proposed convenience fees. The revised convenience fees will continue to be at or below the City's costs.

The proposed fee revisions are intended to more fully recover the City's cost of providing services and processing applications. The proposed fee schedules will be available online at http://www.smgov.net/departments/clerk/agendas no later than October 21, 2021.

A public hearing will be held by the City Council to consider this request:

RAPID TESTING

Barbara Ferrer said. "And we still have a large number of children that will be unvaccinated so yes, I think adding layers you know, I'm a big believer in adding in those layers that are appropriate to create as much safety as possible."

This month, the FDA issued an emergency use authorization (EUA) for the ACON Laboratories Flowflex COVID-19 Home Test, an over-the-counter (OTC) COVID-19 antigen test, which adds to the growing list of tests that can be used at home without a prescription.

It is also important to test yourself as close to the event or gathering as possible, but health officials cautioned not to wait for results inside venues or homes.

"You're negative at the point you tested the closer you are to the point and tested, the better off you are at, you know, knowing that as you're walking in the door you're negative. I mean, many of us who have gone to events where even if you're vaccinated is required that you have a negative test prior to going into an indoor setting, have actually done the testing right facility entered because obviously that's the closest interval that you're going to get to entering in to a specific event so yes there's, there's nothing wrong with, you know, testing, right before you go in," Ferrer said. "I just want to caution people that it does take a few minutes to get the test results. We have had situations where people have tested themselves and then waited indoors, you know, at their party, or at events for their test results and that's actually not a coping strategy at all. So if you're testing right before you go, please wait until you get your test results, make sure you're negative before you enter into the event."

Since March 2020, the FDA has authorized more than 400 COVID-19 tests and sample collection devices, including authorizations for rapid, OTC at-home tests.

According to the FDA, all tests can experience false negative and false positive results. Individuals with positive results should self-isolate and seek additional care from their health care provider.

Individuals who test negative and experience COVID-like symptoms should follow up with their health care provider as negative results do not rule out a COVID-19 infection.

Community Members are Invited to Observe the City of Malibu's Multi-Agency Virtual Wildfire Evacuation Exercise on October 20

Community members are invited to observe the multi-agency virtual wildfire evacuation exercise organized by the City of Malibu in partnership with the Los Angeles County Fire, Sheriff's and Animal Care and Control Departments, and California Highway Patrol on Wednesday, October 20 at 6 p.m.

"Wildfires and evacuations are a very real possibility in Malibu, and we all have to be ready," said Mayor Paul Grisanti. "I hope everyone in the community will join us and observe this exercise so that they have a realistic idea of what to expect during a major wildfire and evacuation, and ultimately, be better prepared."

The exercise is part of Malibu's efforts toward community-wide wildfire preparedness. Residents, businesses, employees, students, schools and organizations are encouraged to observe the exercise, which is based on a scenario of a major wildfire burning through eastern Malibu.

The exercise is an excellent opportunity to learn about the decision processes, timeline and roles of the responding agencies during a large-scale evacuation. The exercise will be followed by a Q&A session.

The Zoom link will be posted in the Fire Safety webpage. www.malibucity.org/firesafety.

To learn more about evacuations in Malibu and to review the City's Evacuation Plan, evacuation zones, maps and terminology, visit the webpage at www.MalibuCity.org/Evac.

LA City Attorney files 35 criminal counts alleging failure to stop work in Santa Monica Mountains

City Attorney Mike Feuer announced that his office has filed 35 criminal charges against developers for alleged numerous building and safety violations stemming from continuing construction on five partially built, three-story, 5,000 square-foot single family homes on Woodstock Road in Laurel Canyon. The five hilltop homes, adjacent to the Mulholland Drive overlook, were originally built in the late 1990's as part of a planned 21-home development and subsequently ordered torn down in 2003 following a court decision upholding the requirement for an environmental impact report that was never conducted. The structures were never removed, however, and in the past year, neighbors reported a resurgence of alleged construction at the homes. City officials have ordered the developers to comply with the order already in effect - to demolish the five structures and clean up the properties - which they allegedly have failed to do.

"Developers must follow the City's rules, just like everybody else," said Feuer. "These unpermitted structures in the Santa Monica Mountains were supposed to be demolished nearly 20 years ago, and yet we allege the current developers have been ignoring the City's order and continuing to work on structures that should no longer be there. The rules have to mean something, and we're taking action."

Between 1998 and 1999, permits were issued for the five Laurel Canyon homes on Woodstock Road - located at 2505, 2509, 2513, 2521 and 2529 - which were to be the first stage of a large scale development of 21 similar-sized houses. In 2002, the Court of Appeal upheld the L.A. Planning Commission's decision to place a 6-month moratorium on the project and require the original owners to conduct an appropriate environmental impact assessment.

That environmental review did not occur, and one year later, all five homes were ordered to be removed and the sites ordered to be cleaned up under the City's vacant structures abatement ordinance. The City recorded the order with the County of L.A., notifying all future buyers of these responsibilities.

Under the standing order, the five homes were to remain secured until removal and no further construction was allowed. In years since, subsequent owners have tried to restart the project, but none were able or willing to remove the properties and start over again in accordance with the law.

Late last year, concerned neighbors reported an alleged resurgence of building activity at the homes and alerted the L.A. Department of Building and Safety (DBS). Inspections immediately followed, resulting in the City learning that the developers, Shahram and Ester Ghalili, had acquired the properties and were planning construction at all five sites. The City issued new orders for the owners to stop all work and to comply with the abatement order still in effect.

The City Attorney's Office is pursuing misdemeanor criminal charges against the developers for alleged failure to obtain permits before resuming construction, failure to obey the City's subsequent orders to comply, and failure to remove the vacant unfinished structures. The Office will seek to have the developers stop all construction and to comply with all laws and standing orders related to the safe removal of the homes without causing harm to the surrounding hillside and neighborhood.

Richard Kim and Dennis Kong, both Deputy City Attorneys with the Code Enforcement and the Animal Protection Unit, are the assigned prosecutors.

New Study Details L.A. County Neighborhoods At Highest Risk of Extreme Climate Impacts

More than half of L.A. County residents live in a community deemed highly exposed to impending and severe climate impacts, according to a study released today by the County's Chief Sustainability Office (CSO).

An estimated 56% of County residents - nearly 5.7 million residents – face high risk to such climate hazards as extreme heat, wildfire, inland flooding, extreme precipitation, coastal flooding, and drought. The Climate Vulnerability Assessment evaluate both present-day risks and projected changes in exposure by 2050.

The report highlights 47 communities of concern that face dual dangers – an increased exposure to climate hazards and high susceptibility to negative impacts. Low-income and communities of color face a disproportionate amount of climate vulnerability as well as limited capacity to withstand and weather future threats, the study finds. Nearly 17% of the population live in high-vulnerability tracts.

Among the communities facing multiple high-risk climate threats: East Los Angeles, South Gate and Bellflower; Long Beach and San Pedro; Santa Clarita; Reseda and Winnetka in the San Fernando Valley; Montebello; Westlake and Crenshaw districts; and North Lancaster, Hi Vista and Roosevelt in the Antelope Valley.

The report takes an innovative approach by tackling difficult-to-analyze factors that increase vulnerability, like homelessness or employment conditions, in addition to other more geographically-specific data. The more holistic approach considers factors like employment in warehousing jobs, where workers are typically indoors but are still exposed to climate-related hazardous conditions like heat.

Among the most severe climate impacts predicted to disrupt the daily lives of County residents by 2050:

A tenfold increase in extreme heat waves

A doubling of the population highly vulnerable to extreme heat

Megadroughts lasting multiple decades

Nearly 20% of properties at risk of flooding during a large storm event

More extreme swings between droughts and rain, likely leading to flash floods and landslides

Seas rising by 2.5 feet at local shorelines

A 40% increase of wildfire burn areas in the San Gabriel Mountains

The vulnerability assessment acts as a companion piece to the Our County Sustainability Plan, the nation's most ambitious regional blueprint for community sustainability. Its findings will guide future priorities for implementation of the Plan, such as increasing the tree canopy in low-income urban areas. The County will also seek out new opportunities to increase climate resilience, such as infrastructure spending.

The state government has provided nearly $15 billion over the next three years to help California communities prepare for extreme weather and climate-related disasters. The funding includes investments to build wildfire resiliency, address drought impacts and bolster water resilience, and protect vulnerable communities from climate risks.

"This study demonstrates the County's leadership on climate change and environmental justice," said Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors Chair Hilda L. Solis, Supervisor to the First District. "By identifying the people and places who stand to suffer the worst impacts of climate change, and highlighting the urgency of making our communities more resilient to climate change, it will spur real action among County departments, our many community partners, and jurisdictions across the region."

"This assessment highlights the urgent need to do all we can to lessen the impending harms caused by climate change that will disproportionately impact low-income communities and communities of color" shared Supervisor Holly J. Mitchell. "We have an opportunity to apply the findings shared towards our strategies for proactively strengthening our infrastructure and protecting our most vulnerable neighborhoods and residents."

"The devastating consequences of climate change are already here and we know they could continue to worsen over the years to come," said Third District Supervisor Sheila Kuehl. "This report, while deeply disturbing, gives us an invaluable planning document with the analyses we need to act now to mitigate and avoid the possible negative impacts on our local county communities."

"While we know places like Long Beach and San Pedro will face rising tides and Bellflower and its surrounding communities will experience extreme heat, we also know that by taking action today to reduce emissions and prepare our communities, we can avoid the worst impacts" said Fourth District Supervisor Janice Hahn. "This report reminds us we must renew our efforts."

"The assessment of the vulnerability and criticality of our electricity infrastructure was an interesting finding in this comprehensive study, further emphasizing the need for partnership and collaboration in our efforts to strengthen grid reliability," said Supervisor Kathryn Barger, 5th District.

"This is report is a sobering assessment of the profound challenges that climate change poses for our communities," said Fesia Davenport, Chief Executive Officer for Los Angeles County. "These findings will be a critical tool as we work to mitigate these impacts and make sure our most vulnerable and historically disadvantaged populations can withstand the climate impacts that we know will come."

"With this study, Los Angeles County has conducted a comprehensive and equity-focused assessment" said Nuin-Tara Key, Deputy Director for Climate Resilience at the Governor's Office of Planning and Research, "and this work is vital to informing future policies and programs to protect people and infrastructure from the devasting impacts of climate change."

"This report really brings to light the dangers that immigrant, low-wage workers and other vulnerable populations face not just once in a while, but on an increasingly regular basis," said Nancy Zuniga, Workers Health Program Manager with the Instituto de Educación Popular del Sur de California, who served on the study's Advisory Committee. "This information will help us organize around the issues in a new way and prepare our community members so they can stay safe and healthy now and into the future."

Review: 'Halloween Kills' is a gruesome mess

LINDSEY BAHR
Associated Press

The poor folks of Haddonfield, Illinois, are having the worst and longest Halloween ever. It seems one movie wasn't enough to contain Michael Myers' 40th anniversary rampage.

" Halloween Kills " picks up at the moment David Gordon Green's 2018 "Halloween" ended. Deputy Frank Hawkins (Will Patton) is bleeding out from a neck wound. Michael Myers is burning in a basement and Jamie Lee Curtis' Laurie Strode is riding in the back of a pickup truck to the hospital with her guts literally spilling out alongside her daughter Karen (Judy Greer) and granddaughter Allyson (Andi Matichak).

The big problem is that "Halloween Kills" is less of a sequel than a half-baked interlude before the finale. It is a bloody, violent, chaotic and cynical mess and not even in a good or particularly scary or insightful way. Poor Laurie Strode is stripped of anything exciting to do and is instead confined to a hospital where she's recovering from having her organs put back together.

While it is admirable of Green and his co-writers Danny McBride and Scott Teems to commit to the reality of Laurie's injury and not have her conveniently, immediately and miraculously recover, it is still a bummer that Jamie Lee Curtis doesn't have more to do, especially if this is her penultimate showing in the role.

"Halloween Kills" attempts to tie the present to the past once more, often reflecting on the events of 1978 (there is probably a dangerous drinking game to be played for every time someone says "40 years ago"). This is done through flashbacks to 1978, where a young, more skittish Deputy Hawkins (Thomas Mann) botches a chance to kill Michael, and by bringing back minor characters who evaded his knife the first time around.

So they have Kyle Richards, who has gone on to "Real Housewives" infamy, back as Lindsey Wallace, and Nancy Stephens as Marion Chambers. Tommy Doyle, the little kid Laurie babysat in 1978, has been recast again and this time is played by Anthony Michael Hall, who has a little support group going with his fellow survivors. They gather at a dive bar on Halloween to remember and pay tribute to the victims, but soon their ritual is interrupted by breaking news: He's back and making his way through the town. Tommy rallies a vigilante mob to ensure that "evil dies tonight."

The previous film was smart to delve into the idea of the generational trauma for characters like Laurie and her family. But this installment botches its loftier ambitions. As Michael racks up an remarkable kill count, "Halloween Kills" tries to get us to consider whether (asterisk)WE'RE(asterisk) the real monsters.

This would all theoretically be fine if we were following humans that we either cared about or who were at least entertaining to watch. These characters talk exclusively in trailer-ready quips that sound like parody. Aside from Laurie, the only people that I cared to know more about were the couple who live in Michael's house and spend Halloween night watching John Cassavetes' "Love Streams," smoking marijuana and eating charcuterie. But like most everyone we meet in the film, Big John (Scott MacArthur) and Little John (Michael McDonald) are not long for the world.

It's hard to overstate just how cluttered and ugly the film is too. How could it possibly be from the man who made lyrical and poignant indies like "George Washington" and "All the Real Girls"? But perhaps the biggest sin is that it doesn't feel like a movie. "Halloween Kills" is a board-clearing pit stop.

"Halloween Kills," a Universal Pictures release in theaters and on Peacock Premium Friday, is rated R by the Motion Picture Association of America for "language, grisly images, some drug use, strong bloody violence." Running time: 105 minutes. One and a half stars out of four.

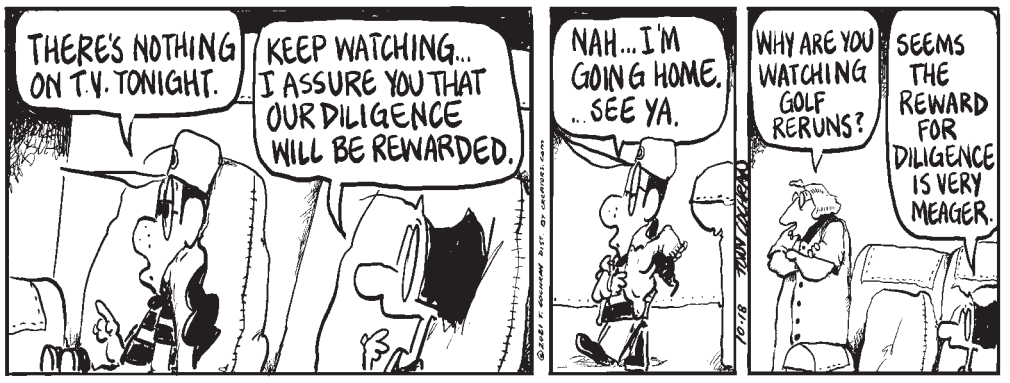

MPAA Definition of R: Restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (OCTOBER 18)

No matter what you have been led to believe about your talent, you can be sure that it's much bigger. You are a knight on behalf of your kingdom. You'll feel ill-equipped, but the right tools fall right into your hands when you most need them. You'll pick up your sword and shield, vanquish the dragon and be celebrated. Aquarius and Virgo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 32, 40, 1 and 7.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You lost something irreplaceable back there; knowing this is a sign that you're living right. To recognize and celebrate the specialness of things while you have them, knowing that someday you will mourn, is to live fully.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll be pitching and persuading. The best presentations you'll ever make are the ones no one asked you to make. Ideas drop in from on high, and the impulse to follow through comes straight from your heart.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You know when you're onto a good idea and you don't need anyone else to affirm it. In fact, any opposition you hear will only serve to steel your resolve.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You're working for smiles today. When the smiles happen, you're among them. There is one person in particular whose happiness will have you sweating. All hard work pays off.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You're a part of this — the only part of this you have complete responsibility for. Taking care of yourself is taking care of those around you. Self-love is one of the most essential things you can do to put love into the world.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You're supportive, but you don't allow yourself to be taken advantage of. You keep them alert to your gifts. Otherwise, they will get spoiled and be robbed of the pleasure of fully experiencing what you do.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). As you serve the needs of others, keep in mind that there are people who have no sensor to tell them when they've crossed a line or are being greedy. Draw and enforce the boundaries they cannot intuit.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). People tell you their life stories. Neither of you know why it happens. It has to do with something happening on the subconscious level. You naturally orientate yourself toward others, and they open up to you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You practice and you get better, though it doesn't always feel that way. Every mistake, obstacle and problem improves you. Eventually, you'll reach a point of diminishing returns, but you haven't reached it yet.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Love makes you happier and better behaved. You find deep wells of patience and compassion for the world because you have found them first for the one you adore.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). People who want your contributions may not be able to repay you. Consider all aspects of the deal before you get into it; you can save yourself from future regret or resentment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The spiritual aspects of love reign supreme. What happens on the spiritual level will guide all other aspects. The logic of scientists or the reason of scholars cannot predict the heart's path.
