Muir Woods mural to remain in place

BRENNON DIXSON

A mural located at the former location of John Muir Elementary School for more than 30 years will remain in place until the community and the artwork's artist decide if the mural will be replaced.

The Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District's Board of Education came to the decision unanimously during Thursday night's board meeting after hours of discussion and input from residents, board members and district staff.

The fate of the Muir Woods mural has been a point of contention for some time now as the "major action item" was tabled for further discussion during the board's previous meeting in Malibu earlier this month.

Citing concerns of erosion, lead paint and environmental hazards, district staff previously recommended that the board order the mural, which is located on the southeast walls of the newly-named Michelle and Barack Obama Center for Inquiry and Exploration, be painted the same color as the exterior of the building where it's located.

"The Muir Woods mural has eroded over time," staff said,

DEVELOPMENT: Changes at the state level might require the city to build taller and denser buildings to meet new mandates.

The city of Santa Monica's Planning Commission says it's time for Santa Monica to reopen the conversation around upzoning in the wake of new state efforts to address California's housing shortage and lack of affordable housing.

Santa Monica will likely have to support taller and denser development in response to recent legislation aimed at boosting housing construction and an upcoming mandate that cities across California build thousands of new housing units, commissioners said at a meeting Wednesday. The city will likely be required to build 4,800 affordable and market-rate units from 2021 to 2029.

City planner Jing Yeo said the Man will get $99,000 after officer deployed K-9 unit

The city of Santa Monica will pay $99,000 to a man who sued after a Santa Monica Police Department officer ordered his canine partner to bite the man's leg during an arrest.

City Attorney Lane Dilg said that the city agreed to settle the case initiated by Jovane Leonard, 43, to avoid the expense of litigation and does not admit liability or wrongdoing.

According to SMPD records obtained by The Daily Press, officer Phillip De Ryck responded to a call at 11:40 am. on June 25, 2018 about Leonard allegedly punching someone in the face and taking a pair of sunglasses from Spokes N' Stuff at 1715 Ocean Front Walk before returning to the store and fighting an employee.

An officer at the scene described Leonard as a black man between 25 and 30 years old, about 6 feet tall and wearing a red t-shirt, gray pants and a green backpack.

When De Ryck arrived at the scene, he said he saw officer Kyle Crane get out of his car and speak with Leonard.

"From where I was I could see Leonard was noticeably

The value of recycling

DEAR EARTHTALK: SINCE CHINA STOPPED ACCEPTING AMERICAN RECYCLABLES FOR PROCESSING IN 2017, IS IT STILL WORTHWHILE FOR US TO EVEN BOTHER RECYCLING HERE IN THE U.S.? – JIM M., NORFOLK, VA

The short answer is yes, it's still worthwhile for us to recycle, even if it's not as easy and more expensive than it used to be—especially when you consider the costly and environmentally dubious alternative of creating new products out of all-virgin materials. That said, China's decision to stop accepting most recyclables from other countries beginning in January 2018 did send shockwaves around the world. For the previous 25 years, China was gladly importing more than half of the world's plastic garbage for reprocessing into new products.

It seemed like a win-win situation, but the Chinese started to tire of dealing with a deluge of soiled recyclables from abroad. Also, years of economic growth and rising consumption means the Chinese are now producing plenty of waste on their own; they no longer need to rely on waste imports to keep their recycling plants humming. It's for these reasons that the Chinese government invoked its "National Sword" policy, banning the import of 24 types of solid waste and setting a much tougher standard for contamination levels on the recyclables it would accept. Waste handlers in the U.S. and other developed countries where landfill space is short were left in the lurch and forced to rethink how to move much of their "feedstock" along now that China is no longer willing to take it.

In the meantime, a few Southeast Asian countries (Malaysia, Thailand, Vietnam, Indonesia and India) stepped up to fill the void by taking larger loads of our waste. But poorly run waste management practices and lack of government oversight lead to conditions where only about 10 percent of potentially recyclable waste sent to these countries gets recycled. According to a recent World Bank report, much of what doesn't get recycled ends up in "unregulated dumps or is openly burned…[creating] serious health, safety and environmental consequences." But more recently, many of these countries are now following in China's footsteps by tightening up their own rules about what kinds of waste they are willing to accept.

These changes have put some U.S.-based recyclers out of business, but it may have strengthened those left standing, since they have been forced to find new ways of dealing with the waste streams they are responsible for collecting and processing. Instead of shipping it all off, they are recycling as much as possible themselves. While China's "National Sword" program may have been a headshot to the American waste industry, the result might just be a greener, cleaner, more self-sufficient United States.

American consumers and businesses can help bolster recycling efforts by sorting waste appropriately—don't mix soiled food containers in with recyclables, keep non-recyclable plastics out of the blue bins, etc.—and encouraging friends and neighbors to do the same so that more of what we do discard can live another day and provide other consumers with a guilt-free way to enjoy whatever came in that plastic bottle or cardboard box.

Affordable Housing: California's State of Emergency

RAY TSE AND REBEKAH HONG
Graduate Students at USC's School of Social Work

A state of emergency. Four daunting words that should catch the attention of our state. On Wednesday, September 25, 2019, the Los Angeles City Council proposed a state of emergency on homelessness. Los Angeles declared a state of emergency four years ago on the same issue – there were 25,000 homeless then. Today, an estimated number of 130,000 people are homeless in California with 36,000 of the population in Los Angeles. That is an increase of 11,000 homeless people in Los Angeles the past four years. It is now an issue for Governor Gavin Newsom to follow through on this recent proposal making sure that California and Los Angeles receive the federal support needed in a state of emergency.

We see them on the streets, living in their vehicles, on the sidewalks, and under freeway ramps. So listen up California. Policy makers. Residents. We have solutions on how to alleviate this emergency. Subsidized housing and building affordable housing are all proven remedies needed now. It's your choice whether to listen, but more importantly, to act.

Let's talk about this and the stigma behind affordable housing. Let's break this stigma and focus on the positive aspects of affordable housing. What if I told you that affordable housing could benefit you? Or that affordable housing benefits whole communities?

Studies have shown that affordable housing leads to an increase in health, education, and neighborhood quality. First, we can focus on the issue of education. Studies suggest that students who experience homelessness or hypermobility are far more likely to drop out of school and suffer from learning disabilities and behavior problems. From the standpoint our children, we can see that this results in an ongoing cycle of poor academic achievement and poverty.

From a healthy community standpoint, increasing affordable housing options would help relieve the constant stress for families working fulltime but still cannot afford the rent. Think about what safe and affordable housing means to you. Many individuals in our community face the fear of losing their home every month. Whether you are rich or poor, we all need housing. By creating more affordable housing, people are able to focus on raising healthy families.

Homeowners will benefit from local income and increased property values. We all want to create an environment that will benefit our futures. Therefore, how about if we start off with not rejecting the idea of affordable housing? It is time to take a look at a resolution that will work for you and your community.

We must address the stigma surrounding affordable housing. For example this summer in California's own state capitol of Sacramento where residents opposed building affordable housing. Neighbors "fear the apartments will continue a trend of concentrating low-income and homeless individuals...."

Ending Homeless is one of our Grand Challenges. As opposition continues, the struggle increases, and this crisis will not get solved. Wake up California, we have an actual state of emergency, an epidemic occurring and as long as we fear change, things will only continue to worsen. It is time to say no to fear and yes to courage. It is time to move on from No In My Backyard (NIMBY) to Yes In My Backyard (YIMBY). It is time to speak up at city council meetings and say yes to building affordable housing. We know that affordable housing will not hurt our society, but will benefit it. Let's step out with courage and embrace change. Let's change California.

Ray and Rebekah are graduate students at USC in the Suzanne Dworak-Peck School of Social Work program. This is an important issue to them as future social workers and concerned residents of Southern California. They hope that from this op-ed piece it will be a wake-up call for action to the government and residents.

MURAL

describing how the mural painted in the 1970s possesses lead paint that's peeled, contaminated the planter and risks going into the stormwater system out to the ocean. "Painting the walls will enable the complete removal of lead paint, and allow for the building to look suitable for a school environment as the district engages with the community in a collaborative and inclusive process that will lead to a new mural."

Board Vice President Jon Keane said during the meeting Thursday that he spoke directly to the mural's artist Jane Golden, who expressed interest in leading a selection process in partnership with community stakeholders.

Local residents were open to the idea, but some who spoke during the meeting said they feel a decision will be made with or without their support.

"You must remember this — unless that unique mural covers this unique wall space from top to bottom and sweeping around the corner, you've destroyed it," said Charles Andrews, stating there wasn't enough time to share all the reasons why it should remain in place.

Marissa Rubin said she recently received a call from a former John Muir Elementary School student who said she loved the mural and couldn't understand why anyone would want to tear it down. "She said she moved to Northern California because she was so inspired by the mural," Rubin said.

Emotions were high as one community member after another went to the podium to share their reasons for saving the mural, which included, among others, Barrack Obama's environmental record and the need to educate children about climate change and John Muir.

Sarah Braff, who has resided in the city for more than 30 years, said during the meeting she drives by the mural every single day, "and it has not brought me joy. And it has not brought me excitement."

"And moving forward does not mean we are relinquishing our past, but enhancing our future," Braff added, mentioning the need to include all of the community and not just those who support the mural remaining in place.

"I just don't think there's a right answer or a wrong answer to this," board member Laurie Lieberman said, adding she supports conducting a process that involves all of the district's stakeholders.

"From everything that we have heard from staff, the mural as it stands now cannot (remain) — because of the remediation that had to be done, it has left the existing mural in a state of disrepair," which is a disservice to everyone, Kean said after he motioned to make an amendment to the original staff recommendation.

Kean admitted he doesn't know what will go on the wall in place of the mural.

"I do know that the next step has to be a remediation of the existing wall. And no matter what we do — if we recreate the (Muir) Woods mural identically to what it is now — we still have to remediate that wall," Kean added. "So I don't know what comes next but I promise you that I am dedicated to a process that hears the community. I just think we do not have the option of building on that existing wall right now as it stands."

Nearly two full hours after the item was first brought forth for discussion, board members unanimously agreed that no painting would take place until the public has been able to engage in a selection process led by the artist.

REQUIREMENT

state's Regional Housing Needs Allocation will require that Santa Monica build a relatively higher number of units because of its proximity to jobs and transit and past record of producing new development — or face financial penalties. The city will receive its final allocation next October.

"When we do get whatever the number is, we will have to figure something out, because the consequences of not complying with your housing element are increasingly severe," Yeo said.

While only the City Council has the final say on changes to local housing policy, most members of the Planning Commission said upzoning is somewhat inevitable in order to meet the state mandate for new housing. In particular, they supported allowing affordable housing developers to construct buildings one or two stories over the height limit in certain neighborhoods.

The recent state housing bills make denser development, particularly affordable development, easier than ever. But increased density is politically risky in Santa Monica, where 45% of local voters supported a 2016 ballot measure to put any new buildings more than two stories tall to a citywide vote. The city currently allows taller buildings only along transit corridors and in the downtown area.

"We have to have a conversation about upzoning in this city," said Commissioner Elisa Paster. "It's not going to be popular, but we can't have density in only a few corners of the city."

Commissioners said the city will have to consider different strategies to increase housing production, such as adding townhomes and accessory dwelling units to single-family neighborhoods and instituting a "no net loss of units" rule, i.e. preventing small condominiums from replacing apartment buildings.

While they agreed that areas near transit need to densify in response to the housing shortage, Commissioner Mario Fonda-Bernardi warned that building more housing around transit will not necessarily address the city's affordability crisis.

"Building around transit is a great thing, except the buildings tend to be expensive and therefore the people who rent them are going to be rather well-heeled, which means they'll have cars and may not avail themselves of the mass transit at their doorsteps," he said.

Commissioners Leslie Lambert and Richard McKinnon said the city will have to tackle affordability by requiring that new development include more units restricted to middle-class households. Santa Monica's Proposition R requires 30% of all new units to be affordable, but the mix of affordable units prioritizes low-income households.

"We're hollowing out the middle class here," McKinnon said. "What we have now is people who are millionaires because they own houses or are extremely well paid enough to afford the $4,000, $5,000, $6,000, $7,000 a month rent and people who are being supported by rent-controlled or affordable housing, and less and less in the middle, and that's an unsustainable city going forward."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (OCTOBER 21)

It's taken awhile to get to the point where you're so happy with yourself that truly no one else's opinion matters. You'll confidently dive into a fascinating and risky venture and see profits. Love follows you everywhere, taking different forms – affection, support, camaraderie, passion and even responsibility. Scorpio and Cancer adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 3, 33, 28 and 45.

A ARIES (March 21-April 19). Before you can become more powerful in a situation, it is important to figure out where the power already lies. Note what or who is dominating the environment or setting a tone for interactions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). The success won't come from working on tasks; it will come from completing them. Even so, it's the working on the tasks that you'll find the most fun, so don't let that seduce you into leaving things undone. Finish!

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). It's better to purge and prune your to-do list than to have a bunch of wishful thinking weighting down the bottom of it. Heavy lists are no fun to pick up! Set yourself up to win by being more selective with your plans and energy.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You need just a few more friends, preferably observant and responsive ones who will tell you about yourself in greater detail and highlight the qualities that familiar people aren't seeing today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You'll gain much from osmosis today, so don't worry too much about trying, striving or even learning. It's all about with whom you surround yourself. People with big dreams and desires they aren't afraid to go for will strongly influence you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You don't have to do everything right (or anything at all) to be worthy of love and support, including and especially your own. Reinforce that concept, and you'll be lucky today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). It's totally impossible for you to fail at being you. If you occasionally let yourself down, it's only because you don't yet know yourself well enough to find the leverage and inspiration you need to steer the wilder side of you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Worry is just bad feelings about unrealities. Why bother to weave stress around an idea? It's not that none of the worries could ever happen; it's just that usually life is more inventive and surprising than that.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). There's a point in which you'll want to give up; however, once you push past that, you'll be able to go twice as far. You're basically training your mind today, and this will hold you in good stead in the weeks to come.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). If you knew you would get what you focused on, what would you focus on? Choose carefully today because you're way too powerful to waste your talents on meager distractions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You won't meet a single person today from which you can't learn something. The art is in figuring out what there is to learn, and you might not come up with it right away. Some lessons will come in retrospect.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You set the bar pretty high for a project and you'll definitely get into the ballpark if you keep at it. Don't let the others tell you what success looks like. Define it on your own terms.

Visionary Vibes from Venus and Neptune

e don't have to invent products, write novels or create amazing change in the world in order to be visionaries. Visionary moves can be as simple as picturing a potentially delicious sandwich or imagining you'd like to ride a train someday. Venus and Neptune currently favor visions of all shapes and sizes.

HALLOWEEN PANTHEON

GOBLINS AND GHOULS: Goblins are like elves or sprites, only disgusting and with an agenda that ranges from mischievous to malevolent. Tales of goblins rose from European folklore in the Middle Ages and the story never got old, as they are widely featured as an integral part of media from video games to "Harry Potter." These unpleasant creatures have many unattractive qualities and among the most common threads is insatiable greed. They covet and steal, sometimes thuggishly indiscriminant in their tastes and other times gravitating toward the precious treasures most likely to cause sadness in their loss. Since greed is a symptom of lack, embodying the goblin persona for Halloween may put a person in touch with their own sense of lack, the knowledge of which is the first step to fulfillment. Ghouls, on the other hand, focus less on material and emotional lack and more on the issue of decay. These grotesque flesh-eaters come to us from Arabic mythology and are not unlike demons in many regards, with roots in the underworld and Satan himself somewhere along their family tree. As a metaphor, ghouls offer the opportunity to face whatever perceived evil is "eating" you.

COUPLE OF THE WEEKEND

Socialite and reality television star Kim Kardashian was born on the cusp of Libra and Scorpio and has planets in both influences. Her sun, Saturn and Pluto are in Venus-ruled Libra, indicating a highly developed visual style and a natural talent for enchantment. Mercury and Uranus in sensual Scorpio add a dash of sizzle to the mix. Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis.com.

larger than Officer Crane," he said in an internal memo describing the incident. "Leonard was also wearing baggy clothes and carrying a large backpack. Based on my training and experience suspects can conceal weapons within their baggy clothing and backpacks."

De Ryck then retrieved his canine partner, Kai, from his vehicle. While he did so, he said he could see Crane and officer Jason Olson struggling with Leonard and trying to get his hands out of his waistband. He said Leonard appeared to be overpowering the two officers.

"I was giving Leonard commands to stop resisting and to comply, but I could hear him saying he did nothing wrong," De Ryck said. "Based on the violent nature of the robbery, the level at which Leonard was resisting Officer Crane and Officer Olson and the possibility Leonard was armed I determined it would be reasonable to direct Kai to control his leg by latching on with his mouth. Once Kai latched onto Leonard it appeared to end his desire to resist."

De Ryck said he activated his body camera during the incident and determined from watching the footage that Kai was attached to Leonard's leg for about 20 seconds.

The two officers handcuffed Leonard and De Ryck removed Kai from his leg, he said. The officers then requested an ambulance for Leonard and transported him to Santa Monica Emergency Hospital.

Leonard sustained a laceration four inches tall and two inches wide on the front of his right calf and four lacerations and a puncture wound on the back of his right calf.

Court records show that Leonard was booked at the Santa Monica Police Station at about 6 p.m. on the same day, June 25. He was released on July 14, 2018 after posting bond and was arrested again by SMPD on July 18 for resisting a police officer.

Leonard filed a lawsuit against the city of Santa Monica on Nov. 20, 2018.
