Three weeks ago, Jennifer Pust said, she was a normal person. And she still is. She's a 38-year-old English teacher at Santa Monica High, she's married with two kids and she enjoys reading, cupcakes and the Dodgers.

Only now she has breast cancer, a diagnosis she is facing with a combination of courage, hope and steady support from the campus community.

top Division I golfers in the country.

And he probably never would have had a chance to turn pro.

"He was the inspiration for me to even start playing golf," Wax said.

Wax is among hundreds of former Samohi students and athletes whose lives were touched by Lacy, a beloved coach and athletic director who died of a heart attack in 2010 at the age of 56.

And Wax is now trying to honor Lacy's legacy with a charity golf tournament, proceeds from which will be split between a memorial scholarship fund for local athletes and the Vikings boys golf team.

The tournament is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. Monday, Nov. 16, at Robinson Ranch Golf Club in Santa Clarita.

The inaugural tournament, which Wax hopes to make an annual event, came about after the 2004 alumnus spoke with current Samohi boys golf coach Bart Burdick about paying tribute to Lacy.

"You don't have to be a die-hard golfer," Wax said. "We want to celebrate his life, raise money and make it a community-bonding event. You've got to start somewhere, and hopefully it grows from there."

Tickets cost $175 per person or $600 for a group of four, and they include golf fees and raffle tickets as well as food. Raffle prizes include tickets to Lakers and Clippers games, golf memberships and credit for golf equipment, food and massages.

Wax, who studied business administration and entrepreneurship in college, seems uniquely positioned to organize the event. The company he launched earlier this year, Forelinx, partners with golf courses in the region to offer players course time at multiple sites for a monthly fee.

"We wanted to find a more affordable way for people to play more golf," he said. "It's kind of like gym membership for golf."

Golf was a pastime and a mentorship vehicle for Lacy, a Texas native and Pacifica-Terra Nova product who was an offensive lineman at USC in the mid-1970s before pursuing a career in teaching and coaching.

After serving as an assistant football coach at Samohi, Lacy led St. Monica Catholic to a CIF Southern Section title in 1998. He then returned to the Vikings as head coach and helped them win a football championship in 2001. He also coached golf at the high school.

Whether on the gridiron or on the greens, Wax said, Lacy inspired students to see their own potential.

"He was just extremely encouraging," he said. "He'd do anything [he] possibly could to help you get better. He was not only a presence on the golf course, but he was a natural motivator. ... You think of golf as this laid-back sport where everyone whispers, but he really pushed you forward because you can beat yourself up out there."

And Lacy's support didn't fade after Wax earned his diploma at Samohi.

"You have those friends for a really long time where you can go two years without speaking, and then you see them and it's like no time has passed. That's how it was with Lacy," Wax said. "He made a conscious effort to stay in communication after you graduated. That's a rare dynamic for any mentor or coach because once you leave their sphere, you think they're onto the next. But he always remembered you, always had a story to tell you, always had a very personal approach."

Barrister Brookman braves the waves

SOME ARE SAYING FALL IS IN THE AIR. Frankly, I'll believe it when I'm finally able to put away my collection of electric fans strategically place around my apartment. I've got so many one could say my interior decorating style is "early American fan."

I've lived in Santa Monica for 41 years and I can't remember a heat wave like the one we've experienced the past two months. For example, last week, while making notes for a column, drops of perspiration actually landed on the page. I've heard of "sweating a deadline" but this was ridiculous.

Mark Twain observed, "Everyone talks about the weather but no one does anything about it." Does complaining count? My friends are so irritated with my griping they're giving me the same look Kenny Rogers gets when he sings "The Gambler" in the GEICO Insurance commercial.

But some friends are enjoying the hot weather, especially beach goers. Take Daniel "Danny" Brookman who's been surfing for over 50 years. A long time Venice resident with his wife and three boys, and with an office on Main Street in Santa Monica, Danny has been practicing law since 1972. He has represented thousands of clients, including the late drug guru, Dr. Timothy Leary, and actor Robert Downey, Jr.

But Danny's primary focus is as an acknowledged expert in alcohol and drug related crimes, rehabilitation and intervention therapies. For those in legal trouble with drug and alcohol addiction his goal is to keep them out of the already overcrowded prison system and get them proper treatment to hopefully get their lives back on track. It's serious and emotionally draining work for which surfing provides a much needed escape.

Personally Danny's traveled extensively through Europe, Asia, Central and South America. Professionally he's appeared in national magazines such as GQ, People and U.S. Weekly and on TV, including the "Today Show." (He also "appears" for coffee every morning at Starbucks, which is how we met.)

Surfing offers Danny balance. After frustrating days in court, surfing ties him to nature and fosters his concern for the environment.

While surfing in Venice a few years ago, Danny helped save two swimmers from drowning. In his work, he's also been fortunate in saving many clients from the ravages of drug and alcohol addiction. It long ago became obvious to Danny that at the root of much crime (i.e. drunk driving, domestic violence, etc.) are issues of substance abuse.

Addiction and abuse affects an entire universe of the individual. Family members, friends, jobs - are all impacted. And the truth is, just about everybody has a parent, child, sibling or friend who's experienced addiction.

Danny notes that fortunately our court system has finally begun to recognize drug usage as a social and medical issue rather than just a legal one. In many areas of criminal law, rehabilitation, intervention and counseling have begun to replace incarceration.

And politically there's a reform groundswell brewing. As a country we seemingly can't agree on anything, but sentencing reform is getting support from both sides of the aisle. And with good reason.

While the U.S. accounts for 5 percent of the world's population, it accounts for 25 percent of the world's prisoners. We have more people in prisons than China. We have more prisons than universities and, in some states, more prisoners than college students.

In the U.S.,we spend $80 billion a year on mass incarceration. And a substantial percentage of inmates are in prison for non-violent crimes connected to addiction.

Senators Rand Paul (R-Ky.) and Cory Booker (D-N.J.), at opposite ends on the political spectrum, are teaming up to reform sentencing guidelines. To his credit, President Clinton criticized his own 1994 Crime Bill. "We wound up putting so many people in prison that there wasn't enough money left to educate them."

As Danny notes, substance abuse reaches across all strata of society, rich and poor, privileged or not. But, he's ever inspired by the adage that to save a life is to save the universe.

And I'm ever inspired, if fall is really here, that I can finally put my collection of fans into my storage locker. Ah, to be able to write a column by hopefully filling it with humor instead of sweat.

REVIEW:

'Back to the Future No. 1'

It's about time. Well, it is and it isn't. IDW's Back to the Future No. 1 hit shelves on Wednesday Oct. 21, to coincide with Back to the Future Day - the exact date that Marty travels to in the second film of the trilogy.

And so, 30 years after the release of the first film, we get our first fully vetted issue of the comic book. This is more like a trip down memory lane than a continuation of the story that went on to dominate the box office during the 1980s.

The miniseries will serve as a way to fill in the backstories of the characters we know and love, fleshing out their motives and personalities. As such, our first issue is divided into short stories about Marty meeting Doc Brown for this first time and how Doc Brown came to be involved in the Manhattan project. Remember, Doc got himself in trouble during the first film by selling a false nuclear weapon to Libyan terrorists in order to keep the plutonium for himself.

It was very intriguing to learn more about the series' main characters and I suspect that future issues will delve into other characters in much the same way. While not filled with a ton of action, having the layers of Marty and Doc's respective back stories makes for an enthralling read for major fans.

The lighthearted tone of the movies is still there, with the stories written by Erik Burnham and John Barber and a long note written by Bob Gale, the original screenwriter and shepherd of the movie, the affection for the characters and the universe is felt throughout.

Art duties for both stories are split between Erik Schoonover and Dan Schoening. Schoonover's are is tight and nice to look at, which helps to guide the reader through the first story where we get introduced to Doc and Marty's initial introduction. Dan Schoening's art is more frenetic, but no less pleasing, adding a looseness that one would imagine that Doc Brown would share in his later years.

I highly recommend this issue for any readers out there who have a love for the films. Reading issue No. 1 will feel like coming home again, providing a sense of comfort and familiarity that's easily enjoyable. If you've not had much exposure to the films before, and I find it hard to believe there's many people out there that fit that criteria, I would say it's at least worth picking up and flipping through to see if your curiosity is piqued.

PENTAGON:

American killed in raid to free Iraqis held by IS

BY ROBERT BURNS & BRAM JANSSEN
Associated Press

IRBIL, Iraq Acting on word of an "imminent mass execution" by Islamic State militants, dozens of U.S. special operations troops and Iraqi forces raided a northern Iraqi compound Thursday, freeing approximately 70 Iraqi prisoners in an operation that saw the first American killed in combat in the country since the U.S. campaign against IS began in 2014, officials said.

The raiders killed and captured a number of militants and recovered what the Pentagon called a trove of valuable intelligence about the terrorist organization.

The U.S. service member who died was not publicly identified pending notification of relatives. Officials said this was the first American combat death in Iraq since the U.S. began its counter-IS military campaign in August 2014.

Pentagon press secretary Peter Cook said the target of the raid was a prison near the town of Hawija and that the raid was undertaken at the request of the Kurdish Regional Government, the semi-autonomous body that governs the Kurdish region of northern Iraq. He said U.S. special operations forces supported what he called an Iraqi peshmerga rescue operation.

The peshmerga are the Kurdish region's organized militia. The U.S. has worked closely with them in training and advising roles, but this was the first known instance of U.S. ground forces operating alongside Iraqi forces in combat since launching Operation Inherent Resolve last year.

"This operation was deliberately planned and launched after receiving information that the hostages faced imminent mass execution," Cook said, adding later that it appeared the hostages faced death "perhaps within hours" and that freed hostages told authorities some had been killed at the prison recently, prior to the rescue.

Cook said Defense Secretary Ash Carter approved the U.S. participation in the mission. Cook called it "consistent with our counter-ISIL effort to train, advise and assist Iraqi forces."

U.S. combat troops have rarely, if ever, participated directly in combat against IS fighters on the ground since the U.S. mission began in 2014. The U.S. has mostly limited its role to training and advising Iraqi and Kurdish forces, airdropping humanitarian relief supplies and providing daily airstrikes in IS-held areas of Iraq and Syria.

Cook said it was a "unique" circumstance for the American military in Iraq, although he would not say that it was the only time U.S. forces have engaged in a form of ground combat in Iraq as part of Operation Inherent Resolve. He said it was in keeping with the parameters of the U.S. military's role in Iraq.

"They are allowed to defend themselves, and also defend partner forces, and to protect against the loss of innocent life," Cook said. "And that's what played out in this particular operation."

In a separate statement, the Kurdish government said the operation lasted about two hours and was led by its counterterrorism forces, with support from coalition troops. It made no mention of intelligence indicating the captives were in imminent danger of being killed, as asserted by the Pentagon.

The Kurdish statement said more than 20 IS fighters were killed in the operation about four miles north of Hawija. It said 69 hostages were freed, none of whom were Kurds, and it thanked the Americans for their bravery.

The Islamic State group released a communique late Thursday dismissing what it called "a failed operation by the crusader coalition" since peshmerga fighters were not among the rescued hostages. The statement could not immediately be verified, but it was distributed on Twitter accounts with links to the group.

The circumstances in which the U.S. military member was killed were unclear, but one U.S. official said the American had been shot in a firefight at the scene. Cook said the service member was wounded during the mission and died after receiving medical care. Cook said four peshmerga soldiers were wounded.

Another U.S. defense official, who spoke on condition of anonymity to provide other initial details, said the U.S. role in the rescue mission was mainly limited to four areas: transporting Iraqi soldiers to the scene in five U.S. special operations helicopters; providing airstrikes before and after the mission; advising Kurdish fighters and Iraqi security forces; and providing the Iraqis with intelligence for the operation.

The U.S. defense official said the number of IS members killed was not to be made public immediately but that it was more than 10.

Cook said that of the approximately 70 prisoners freed, more than 20 were members of Iraqi security forces. He did not say who the others were.

Cook said five IS members were detained and "a number" were killed.

"In addition, the U.S. recovered important intelligence" about IS, Cook said without elaborating.

Hawija, located about 15 miles west of the oil-rich city of Kirkuk, is home to vast wheat fields. Officials say the militant group is selling the crop to generate revenues. Iraqi forces recently moved to take the nearby city of Beiji, which is home to the country's largest oil refinery.

Iraqi forces said Tuesday that they had driven Islamic State militants out of Beiji and were in full control of the town. But coalition officials said Thursday that the mission has not been completed.

"Beiji city is contested," Maj. Michael Filanowski, operations officer for the U.S.-led coalition told journalists in Baghdad on Thursday, saying it would take time to completely clear the city of booby traps and eliminate remaining resistance.

U.S.-led coalition forces also carried out a large-scale attack on Syria's Omar oil field as part of its mission to target the Islamic State group's ability to generate money, Filanowski said. Airstrikes struck IS-controlled oil refineries, command and control centers and transportation nodes in the Omar oil field near the town of Deir el-Zour. Coalition spokesman Col. Steven Warren said the attack hit 26 targets, making it one of the largest set of strikes since launching the air campaign last year.

The refinery generates between $1.7 and $5.1 million per month for the Islamic State group.

CANCER

"When I told my colleagues, they said, 'Are you sure you want to be upfront? It's OK to keep that private,'" Pust said. "I think I want to show my students that there are different ways we can handle crises. Life is going to throw difficult stuff at us. If you're part of a community and invest in it, others will rally around you. So, as painful as these three weeks have been, they've also been beautiful."

Beauty is what Pust saw when students who know her for her "weird shoes" recently gave her white sneakers that had been signed by members of the Samohi community.

Beauty is what she saw when football coach Ramsey Lambert asked her to be an honorary captain at the Vikings' home game Oct. 16, which capped Think Pink Week at the school as students participated in national Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

And beauty is what she saw when a student set up a GoFundMe crowd-funding page that pooled more than $15,000 from 240 donors in just eight days.

Pust, who plans to continue teaching until expected surgery early next year, said she's been humbled and surprised by the outpouring of support.

"I'm so incredibly grateful," she said. "I wouldn't wish it on anybody, but it really has a beautiful side to it. I'm just trying to stay as optimistic as I can.

"People are really, really, really, really great. I can't imagine what it would be like to go through an illness like this alone. We hear so many things that are wrong with our young people, our schools, our communities. But it's incredible what can happen when people decide to join together."

The online campaign has drawn donations from students, parents and teachers, as well as friends and family. Many of the donors, including several Samohi alumni, added messages of encouragement.

"you're the reason I'm even at ucla right now," wrote Eric Stocker, a recent graduate who is studying electrical engineering. "I hope you have a swift recovery."

Added alumna Claudia Marin: "i would not be at Berkeley if not for your hard work and dedication."

Another former Samohi student, Danielle Shapiro, wrote, "Mrs. Pust has been such an inspiration to me and I know I would not be where I am today without her kindness and help."

Pust said she has health insurance but added that the donated money will help her and her family pay for the myriad out-of-pocket costs associated with her diagnosis. In addition to financial assistance, she said, people have offered meals, rides, childcare and more.

"It's amazing how big and small the world is all at the same time," she said. "It's really meant a lot to me and my family. The fact that this community would encircle me, it's everything."

Pust, whose parents attended Venice High, grew up in Beaumont west of Palm Springs. She met her now-husband, Michael, as a student at UC Riverside, and they took jobs in San Diego before moving to L.A. about 10 years ago.

That's when Pust started working as a teacher at Samohi, where she became the English department chair about seven years ago. She has a son in 2nd grade at Grant Elementary School and a 3-year-old son in preschool.

"This is my home," she said. "This school district has meant so much to me."

Pust said she knew something "wasn't quite right" when she went to her doctor for an annual exam Oct. 1. She underwent a battery of tests the following day and was soon diagnosed with inflammatory breast cancer, a rarer and more aggressive form of the disease that accounts for less than 5 percent of all diagnoses in the U.S., according to the National Cancer Institute.

Pust, whose aunt and grandmother both had breast cancer, had a scare about 10 years ago. But she said it wasn't taken as seriously at the time because she was in her 20s and because the diagnoses in her family were on her father's side.

"I wasn't even having annual mammograms," she said.

Doctors have told Pust her cancer is serious but treatable. She recently began a 6-month cycle of chemotherapy and expects to have surgery in February, after which she'll likely undergo extensive radiation treatment.

In the days after being diagnosed, Pust began telling her close friends and family. On Oct. 9 she told her students, a few of whom asked for permission to start a crowd-funding campaign to help her. Briana Gomez had it up and running a few days later.

Pust said she saw the GoFundMe link on her Facebook feed before having the chance to inform all of her friends and family. The timing, she said, encouraged her to be open about her diagnosis.

"My goal in this is to be as public as possible with everything that's going on," she said. "The only thing that's going to help me through this is the love of the community around me."

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A-F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Sudoku

Fill in the blank cells using numbers 1 to 9. Each number can appear only once in each row, column, and 3x3 block. Use logic and process of elimination to solve the puzzle. The difficulty level ranges from (easiest) to (hardest).

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Scientists have somehow determined that rats dream about where they want to go in the future. Dr. Hugo Spiers of University College London (and colleagues) inferred as much in a recent eLife article based on how neurons in the rodent brain's hippocampus fire up in certain patterns. They discovered similar patterns when a rat is asleep just before conquering a food "maze" as when he awakens and actually gets to the food (as if it plotted by dream). (Buried Lede: Rats have dreams.)

■ (1) Miami-Dade (Florida) police arrested Eddy Juan, 52, two weeks after someone matching his description was reported at a library at Florida International University, crawling under tables and sniffing women's feet. He was charged with violating a previous sex-offender registration order. (2) In what was originally a domestic disturbance case, Britain's Cambridge Magistrates' Court handed Nelson Nazare, 45, a six-week suspended sentence in September -- for the photo on his seized cellphone of a man having sex with a large fish (plus two woman-dog sex photos). http://www.sun-sentinel.com/local/ct-florida-library-foot-sniffer-20150915-story.html

Watch out, Phonies!

by Megan Tambio

Amazon is taking a bold stance against those creative types who've turned to The Dark Side. The online behemoth is suing more than 1,000 people for offering to write fake reviews for five bucks a pop.

I know, shocking. The Internet has always been such a model of honesty and transparency! Besides being straight-up illegal, being a creative reviewer-for-hire is toxic to people who actually make things.

In theory, the concept of online reviews are great. It makes it easier than ever for people to voice their unfiltered opinions about restaurants, books, vacuum cleaners ... everything! However, the other end of the double-edged Internet sword is anonymity, a cloak so many reviewers hide within.

CBS News estimates that between 15-20% of all online reviews are fake! When the percentage is that high, it poses legitimate diminishing returns on the benefits of having online reviews.

Amazon ran an in-depth investigation to verify the process of the fake reviewers, even hiring some themselves. Amazon didn't have to do this. They could have let the false reviews stay and it would still be the top online retailer, so this was really a matter of principle. I'm not saying that Amazon is ethically pristine, but this is definitely a good move that will benefit creators and producers on various online platforms.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You'll start a conversation, but you might not be up to finishing it, as it could go on and on. You also have other matters on your mind, and you'll want to delve into those thoughts. Let others know that you have something to do, and excuse yourself. Tonight: Say "yes."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ You might want to dive into a situation or take the lead in a heartfelt project. Note how someone you care about closes down on you. You can't change this person's attitude, but you can remain courteous. A friend pulls you out of the doldrums. Tonight: Let the weekend begin.
