HARD RUNNING: St. Monica running back Sean Martinez (center) runs for a gain against Bellarmine-Jefferson on Saturday at Corsair Field. St. Monica won the Santa Fe League game, 16-8. St. Monica improves to 5-3 overall and 1-1 in league play.

St. Monica survives scare from Bell-Jeff

Special to the Daily Press

CORSAIR FIELD Halloween came a night early for St. Monica's football team.

The St. Monica Mariners beat Bellarmine-Jefferson 16-8 on a Saturday night filled with plenty of spooky calls and plays in the form of penalties and turnovers, not to mention a scary moment where the second-string quarterback went down with an injury.

Back-up Sam Holguin, however, would return after just a play on the sideline and the Mariners went on to win the game, improving to 5-3 overall and 1-1 in Santa Fe league play. The Guards fall to 2-7 overall and 0-3 in league.

Senior Michael Doherty saved the game for the Mariners with an interception in the endzone with 48 seconds remaining, denying Bell-Jeff a potential tying touchdown.

"I just read it well, I guess," said Doherty after the game.

"That was a key interception. Thank God for that play," Head Coach Larry Muno said.

St. Monica, who did not score after the first quarter, had plenty of chances to build a hefty lead, however, with a pair of interceptions returned for touchdowns being called back on penalties. Also, a pass to senior Jamal Young was wrestled out by Bell-Jeff's senior Micah Shirley to force a fumble, one of St. Monica's eight, at the goal line.

"I think we should have scored a lot of

Samohi tops Morningside

INGLEWOOD – Santa Monica High School's football team improved its Ocean League record to 1-2 with a 27-0 shutout of Morningside on Friday at Coleman Stadium.

Samohi is now 4-4 overall. Morningside falls to 1-7 overall and 0-3 in Ocean League play.

Next for Samohi is a league matchup with Culver City (5-3, 2-1) at Santa Monica College's Corsair Field on Friday. The game is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m.

Negative ads a part of local election season

BY NICK TABOREK
Daily Press Staff Writer

DOWNTOWN As negative television ads targeting candidates for statewide and national offices blare non-stop during the final days before the election, local races in Santa Monica seem comparatively civil.

Still, this laid-back beach town is not immune to election year bad vibes.

Take, for example, the low-growth group the Santa Monica Coalition for a Livable City, which is backing three City Council candidates: Kevin McKeown, Ted Winterer and Susan Hartley. In recent days, SMCLC has been distributing fliers urging voters to spurn Pam O'Connor and Terry O'Day, two sitting council members who are seeking new terms.

It's latest ad is headlined, "Meet Terry O'Day, a big developers best friend" and includes the ominous sounding warning, "He's never opposed a big development in the past, why would he start now?"

The group, which in 2008 strongly supported Measure T, the failed initiative that would

Man dies when boat overturns near pier

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SM BAY Authorities say a man died and another was injured when their boat struck a breakwater and turned over near the Santa Monica Pier.

Santa Monica Police Sgt. Thomas Burgess said Sunday both men were thrown into the water and attempted to swim ashore Saturday night.

Harbor patrol officers responded and retrieved the men but were unable to resuscitate 52-year-old Lewis Anderson of Anaheim. He was pronounced dead at a hospital.

The Los Angeles Times reports the other man, also in his 50s, was treated for hypothermia. His name was not released.

Senate candidates campaign in the last few days of race

KEVIN FREKING
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Showing that politics and religion often do mix, Sen. Barbara Boxer spent the final Sunday before the election courting black voters Sunday at a church near downtown Los Angeles.

Boxer was introduced to members of the West Angeles Church of God in Christ, although neither she nor the other political candidates in attendance spoke.

The senator is seeking her fourth term in the U.S. Senate and faces Republican Carly Fiorina, who spent her morning meeting voters at a restaurant in Palm Desert.

Boxer, who clapped and swayed to the booming sound of the all-men's choir, is hoping the black community goes to the polls on Tuesday with nearly as much enthusiasm as they did two years ago when Barack Obama was elected president.

Church leaders didn't endorse any of the candidates, but encouraged the several hundred in the congregation to vote.

One member of the congregation said he had already voted and predicted a good turnout in this year's midterm election despite reports of voter apathy among Democrats.

"Everybody I've run into is still very excited about voting," said 53-year-old McKinley Perkins, who said he supports Boxer. "She's been straightforward and consistent with what she's been doing. Her work has been on target from what I've seen."

Both candidates are spending the final days of the campaign asking supporters to take nothing for granted in the remaining two days before the election because whichever campaign does the best job of getting supporters to the polls should win.

It's particularly important for Fiorina to keep supporters optimistic because the latest Field Poll showed her trailing by a 49 percent to 41 percent margin.

Fiorina intended to travel to Fresno in the afternoon and the eastern San Francisco Bay area city of Walnut Creek. Boxer, who only had one campaign event on Saturday, is scheduled to greet volunteers in the working class city of El Monte, east of Los Angeles.

The final days of the California Senate race also have been dominated by jobs.

Republican challenger Carly Fiorina is trying to place the burden of the state's 12.4

'Saw 3D' kills at the box office

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES Psychokiller Jigsaw has come back to life at the box office.

Lionsgate's "Saw 3D," billed as the final installment in the series about Jigsaw's legacy of bloody terror, debuted as the Halloween weekend's No. 1 movie with $24.2 million, according to studio estimates Sunday.

That was $10 million more than the debut of last year's "Saw VI," the first dud in the annual horror franchise.

"Last year, a lot of people said, 'OK, that's it. Put a fork in it, it's done,'" said David Spitz, head of distribution for Lionsgate. "The following week, we were all disappointed and thought, what can we do to reinvigorate the franchise? So we shot the movie in 3-D and said this is the final chapter."

It paid off, though "Saw 3D" still brought a modest return compared to earlier chapters in the "Saw" series, whose second, third, fourth and fifth movies all topped $30 million over opening weekend.

"Saw 3D" also had a soft debut compared to the previous weekend's No. 1 movie, Paramount's "Paranormal Activity 2," a newer fright franchise that opened with $40.7 million. "Paranormal Activity 2" slipped to No. 2 this weekend, raising its total to $65.7 million.

"Seven years into it, obviously, that's a long time for one franchise to hold up year after year," said Paul Dergarabedian, box-office analyst for Hollywood.com. "Other types of horror movies have come into vogue. 'Saw' is part of that whole torture-porn genre, which has gone from great success to lesser success. But they've had a good run. There's nothing to complain about here."

"Saw 3D" also had the benefit of premium prices for 3-D screenings, which cost a

One vote against Y and YY

Editor:

I have never voted against a measure to support schools, but I'm voting against Measure Y. It doesn't bother me to pay the extra money, and I know the schools need it. But I just can't condone the sleazy, dishonest campaign Measures Y and YY supporters have run.

Anyone who follows Santa Monica City Council meetings knows that police, paramedic, and firefighting services would be the last ones cut to balance the city budget. Yet a whole raft of mailers would have us believe that paramedics will arrive too late to save our mothers if Measure Y fails.

Voting for change

Editor:

This article ("Group dodging campaign disclosure," Oct. 27, page 1), plus [the recent] disclosure from Santa Monica Coalition for a Livable City, is further confirmation that voting for a City Council incumbent on Nov. 2 does nothing more than condone the sneaky, under-the-table, self-serving politics and resultant accelerated development we've been experiencing for the past several years!

We have an opportunity to clean house and replace the tired "same ol' same ol'" selfish players with a fresh, compassionate, energetic and transparent approach to city government.

We deserve officials who see our beautiful seaside community as their home, not a financial/development opportunity!

Joanne Curtis
Santa Monica

Why Y?

Editor:

Santa Monicans desperately need more taxes. The City Council is brilliantly attacking problems that so many Santa Monicans face: free choice, free will, and freedom in general. Santa Monicans just aren't equipped to care for their kids or handle their own affairs. Passage of Measure Y will definitely help relieve us of more of our money and freedoms.

Measure Y will also help the City Council in so many ways. The council's voracious appetite for gobbling up private property throughout the city will be able to continue at a stronger rate. The city is spending millions upon millions to buy up buildings in Downtown and we need that to continue. Only the government knows best. Private individuals definitely don't need real estate opportunities in Santa Monica.

The City Council was brilliant in attaching their money quest to the school children without legally guaranteeing anything to them. All those well meaning moms and dads out there campaigning for City Hall will be shocked in a couple of years when the Measure Y money goes to paying for city employee pay obligations and free after-school programs only for welfare kids. Sorry, no SMMUSD music programs or teachers are obligated to be provided. You moms and dads meant well, but you will see how you failed your kids by not taking care of them yourselves. Your kids lose when you turn their welfare over to people who have their own best interests at heart.

Make your vote count

Tomorrow is election day; vote if you haven't already.

There are some important issues to be decided — like Measure Y. Should voters approve a permanent half-cent increase in the city's sales tax? City Hall claims it needs the revenue. But, with no Social Security increase next year (for the second year in a row), it's not good news for any tax measure.

Y is the kind of ballot measure you'd think the Santa Monica Chamber of Commerce would be against, however the chamber's Board of Directors is conflicted. On one hand are the merchants who think that a 10 1/4 percent sales tax will hurt their businesses. On the other hand are powerful chamber leaders who say City Council members promise they'll share Y's revenue gains with the always financially distressed school district, which apparently counters any qualms about lost business by merchants. Therefore, the chamber took a "No Position" on Y.

There are five seats open on City Council. Incumbents Kevin McKeown, Pam O'Connor and Bob Holbrook are running for four-year terms. Ted Winterer is the leading challenger. Five others are also in the race.

The incomplete terms of two council members who died while in office are open. Interim City Council appointees Terry O'Day and Gleam Davis are being challenged by Robert Kronovet and Susan Hartley, who are campaigning hard.

I urge you to study up on all the candidates and see who is for slow growth, financial responsibility, curbing waste and using city resources wisely to benefit residents.

When it comes to school board candidates, who will be good stewards of taxpayer money? Have incumbents Barry Snell, Ralph Mechur and Oscar de la Torre made the right decisions in the face of reduced support from Sacramento? Who has a viable plan for finding new revenue sources? Who will select a good superintendent of schools and bring real leadership and stability to the district? Key challengers are Chris Bley, Nimish Patel, Jake Wachtel and Laurie Lieberman.

FARMERS' MARKET CHANGES NOT FOR THE BETTER

Seven weeks ago, I wrote about the changes coming to the Pico, Main Street and Downtown Farmers' Markets after Oct. 1. After complaints primarily from Main Street restaurants, City Hall spent three years developing an application and evaluation process for removing "older" vendors and bringing in new, local suppliers.

The changes only applied to purveyors of products such as breads, coffee, baked goods, snacks and prepared foods but did not apply to purveyors of cheeses, canned goods, honey, plants and florists. Another problem involved the criteria for selecting new purveyors such as sustainability and source of ingredients (Vendors can't buy raw ingredients from Arizona?) over price and quality. At the Pico market, the new paella vendor lasted only one week. Paella at Pico? City staff has no concept of who its market customers are.

Old Town Bakery sold bread and cakes at the Pico Market for 15 years. After being replaced by Pico Boulevard baker Le Pain du Jour, bread prices nearly doubled from $4 to $7 and $7.50 a loaf — all while a whole slew of proper food handling practices were ignored. I guess the higher prices helped pay for their H2 Hummer.

On Oct. 23, when this was written, they were a "no show." The higher bread prices, "sustainable" H2 and possible food handling violations makes City Hall's selection process idiotic, hypocritical and a complete failure. At Pico, the changes have ticked-off many vendors and resulted in substantial declines in both foot traffic and revenues, vendors tell me.

At the Main Street Market, where Richard "The Breadman" Schackne was booted, he told me he's received hundreds of calls from customers who miss him. "The Breadman" and other long-term Main Street Market vendors were replaced with local suppliers including a neighborhood restaurant that now has two spaces in the market. Schackne is considering legal action against the city.

Even worse is the City Hall market supervisor telling disgruntled market customers that their favorite purveyors quit when they were clearly terminated.

The turnover was due in part to City Hall's "Buy Local" campaign that favors local merchants and requires out-of-town vendors to pay higher booth rents. Like a lot of "Buy Local" schemes, it always seems to cost me more. I'm not patronizing Le Pain du Jour because it's a pain in my wallet.

I'll occasionally visit Avila and Sons at Pico because they have the best walnuts. For everything else, I'm heading to Gretna Green Way for the Sunday morning Brentwood Farmers' Market where a good loaf of Challa is $4.75, there's a much wider assortment of both farm and prepared food products and the kind of non-food items (crafts, jewelry, skin care, clothing) that were eliminated from the Pico Market a couple of years ago.

Best of all, in Brentwood there are no City Hall meddlers to screw things up.

Judge orders test on Halliburton cement in BP well in Gulf of Mexico

BY CAIN BURDEAU
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS A federal judge is ordering tests to be performed as soon as possible on cement Halliburton Co. used to seal the BP well that later blew out catastrophically in the Gulf of Mexico.

U.S. District Judge Carl Barbier said some of the components may be "deteriorating over time" and that tests should be done "as soon as reasonably practicable."

The cement components had been subpoenaed by federal investigators looking into what caused the April 20 blowout of a BP well being drilled by the Deepwater Horizon rig. Halliburton was hired to seal the well with cement. The explosion aboard the Deepwater Horizon killed 11 workers and led to a spill of more than 170 million gallons of crude in the Gulf.

Halliburton's cementing work on the well has jumped to the forefront of investigations into the explosion. On Thursday, the president's oil spill commission said tests performed before the blowout should have raised doubts about the cement used to seal the well.

The cement mix's failure to prevent oil and gas from entering the well has been identified by BP and others as one of the causes of the accident.

Barbier, who is overseeing lawsuits filed after the April 20 explosion, ordered tests on the same batch of cement used by drillers in the hours before the explosion. Halliburton said it expected government investigators to retrieve the batch of cement components next week, said Cathy Mann, a company spokeswoman. She declined further comment.

Officials with the Coast Guard and U.S. Department of Interior did not return messages seeking comment.

Kenneth E. Arnold, a member of the National Academy of Engineering who served as an adviser to the U.S. Department of Interior during its probes into the Deepwater Horizon explosion, questioned the importance of doing the tests on the cement components.

"The samples are old now," Arnold said. "Whatever tests they do now are going to be open to interpretation." And he added that it would be hard to simulate the cement foam's properties in a laboratory and compare them to what happened inside the well.

He said the more critical piece of the investigation would be to figure out why the engineers and drilling crews on the rig believed the cement job had sealed the well. Before the blowout, crews performed a "negative pressure" test, a procedure that reduces the fluid pressure in the well to ensure there are no gas leaks.

"They interpreted the data to say they had a valid test, which was a misinterpretation," Arnold said. "The real problem here is not whether it was stable or unstable (cement), the test was not proper ... What's critical is to understand why the people on the rig made the decisions they made."

BP acknowledged in a September internal report that its engineers and employees of Transocean Ltd., the company running the rig, misinterpreted the negative pressure test.

> "THE SAMPLES ARE OLD NOW. WHATEVER TESTS THEY DO NOW ARE GOING TO BE OPEN TO INTERPRETATION."
> Kenneth E. Arnold
> Member of the National Academy of Engineering

But on Thursday, Halliburton came under increased scrutiny when investigators from the president's oil spill commission revealed that tests performed by the company before the deadly blowout showed the cement to be unstable. Independent tests conducted for the commission by Chevron on a nearly identical mixture also concluded that the cement mix was unstable.

In a statement Thursday, Halliburton said it was unable to give the presidential commission the cement mix used on the Deepwater Horizon rig because that batch was being held as evidence for the ongoing federal investigation. Barbier's order released Halliburton to hand over some of the mix to federal investigators.

Specifically, Barbier wants tests on 1 quart of ZoneSeal-2000 and 2 gallons and 1 quart of SCR-100 in Halliburton's possession.

On its website, Halliburton describes SCR-100 as a "cement retarder" that helps make a "uniform slurry consistency from batch to batch." SCR-100 is "synthetically manufactured, which guarantees product uniformity," the company says.

ZoneSeal is the product name for Halliburton's foam cement, a slurry created by injecting nitrogen into cement to secure the bottom of the well. The decision to use foam cement has been criticized by outside experts.

SUSTAINABLE THREADS Merino wool, derived from Merino sheep in New Zealand and produced under a strict set of sustainability and ethical treatment standards, is revolutionizing outdoor wear while helping manufacturers and consumers lower their impact on the environment.

Growing better materials

Dear EarthTalk

Merino wool undergarments tout themselves as being kinder to the environment than other wools or synthetics. How is this so?

Stella Cooley
Bangor, ME

SINCE THE 1970S, PROFESSIONAL athletes and weekend warriors alike have sworn by base layers made out of synthetic "fibers" that would let sweat-based moisture escape, dry fast and be easy to care for. But such garments don't come without trade-offs: They tend to get stinky when mixed with bodily odors and, like so many modern technological marvels, are derived from petroleum. Merino wool-based garments function just as well or better — and without the olfactory stigma or carbon footprint increase.

The soft and pliable cousin to the traditional wool our grandparents wore, Merino wool is revolutionizing outdoor wear while helping manufacturers and consumers lower their impact on the environment. This natural fiber, derived from Merino sheep in New Zealand, is soft on the skin, wicks sweat effectively, dries out quickly, is naturally odor-resistant — and is machine-washable to boot. And since Merino can be easily spun into different weights, it is used in a wide variety of clothing types (underwear, shirts, coats) making it a natural choice for layering.

Some of the leaders in the Merino underwear revolution include Ibex Outdoor Clothing, SmartWool and Patagonia, each which sources its wool through Zque, a New Zealand-based certification for Merino producers that adheres to a strict set of sustainability and ethical treatment standards. Qualifying ranches must feed their sheep natural grass and spring water and maintain a low "head-to-hectare" ratio. Upwards of 170 New Zealand Merino ranches have been certified accordingly by Zque as "ethical wool" producers.

Unhappy with synthetic base layers that made him "sweat like a gorilla," cross-country skiing enthusiast John Fernsell teamed up with sheep farmer and mountaineer Peter Helmetag to start Ibex in 1997. "Everything looked the same and didn't work," says Fernsell. "It was all either Gore-Tex or polyester fleece." The duo set out to find a better choice. With its inherent functionality, style, comfort and sustainability, Merino emerged the victor. Today Ibex sells several different cuts of Merino wool undergarments, including a line of underwear for men and women, long johns for men and women, and boxers for men.

SmartWool, better known for its Merino socks, also makes highly regarded Merino undergarments, such as the mens' Microweight Boxer Brief and three long johns for men and women of varying weights. Patagonia also sells a full line of Merino under- and outerwear. Additionally, many more companies have jumped on the Merino bandwagon, so consumers interested in trying it out now have more styles and varieties than ever to choose from. These products are available directly from the manufacturers' websites or through outdoor retailers including REI.

While Merino undergarments have a lot going for them, they are still expensive compared to the alternatives. But Merino converts insist that the rugged material lasts much longer than synthetic or cotton clothing without sacrificing comfort, style or fit. Scratchy old wool has come a long way indeed.

Pot prop leaves some guessing

LISA LEFF
MARCUS WOHLSEN
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO Imagine it's the day after the election, and California awakes to a brave new state where marijuana is the same as alcohol, at least legally.

Does that mean anyone over 21 can head to the nearest medical marijuana club and buy pot for personal pleasure? Will police set up sobriety checkpoints to snare stoned drivers? Can Giants fans step outside a sports bar for a quick sidewalk toke or nibble on cannabis-infused cocktail munchies?

If voters approve a ballot initiative to legalize and allow the taxing of recreational marijuana, these are some of the new social scenarios that could play out in the days, weeks and months ahead. Proposition 19 would take effect immediately, although the drug will remain illegal under federal law.

"I CAN IMAGINE SOMEONE SETTING UP A STARBUCKS THAT HAS VAPORIZERS SITTING ON TABLES ALONG WITH ALL THE USUAL STUFF YOU SEE AT STARBUCKS."

Justin Hartfield
Founder
WeedMaps.com

Though the measure has recently fallen behind in the polls, its passage would mean that starting Wednesday adults could carry around up to an ounce of their own marijuana and related paraphernalia without fear of arrest by state and local authorities. They could also tend a home garden up to 25 square feet big and consume its fruits in a "nonpublic place," but not in parks, near schools or on the street.

Beyond that, the future gets hazier. The proposed law leaves it up to local governments to license businesses that want to allow onsite pot use by patrons, to authorize commercial cultivation and retail sales, and to reap revenue from the newly legalized drug through taxes and fees.

"We are going to see the whole gamut, the liquor store on the corner potentially, but there will also be some smoke-easy type of establishments where the hipsters hang out and members-only clubs," predicted Omar Figueroa, a criminal defense lawyer who specializes in marijuana cases. "Some of them will be very upscale, and some will be more like opium dens."

But if California's experience with medical marijuana is any indicator, even the state's most liberal enclaves are in for a long process of figuring out what they will allow and of marijuana advocates testing the boundaries.

For starters, the state's tough anti-smoking laws ban smoking in bars and restaurants. Any establishment that wanted to make itself an exception without operating underground would face regulatory hurdles.

Yet that does not discourage enterprising pot enthusiasts like Justin Hartfield, the founder of an online medical marijuana directory called WeedMaps.com, who draws inspiration from Amsterdam, where marijuana is sold and smoked at coffee shops.

Hartfield has visions of Los Angeles becoming a hub for clubs, art galleries and restaurants where patrons can use herbal vaporizers that allow them to inhale marijuana without creating smoke.

"I can imagine someone setting up a Starbucks that has vaporizers sitting on tables along with all the usual stuff you see at Starbucks," Hartfield said.

But even in San Francisco, cafe and bar owners question the Amsterdam comparison. Janet Clyde, co-owner of Vesuvio, the famous watering hole for beatniks like Jack Kerouac and Neal Cassady, said bars like hers would not likely add another intoxicant to their menus.

The city well-known for its liberal politics is also famous for its red tape, and Clyde said she believed San Francisco officials would stick to allowing retail sales only at the city's 30 or so medical marijuana dispensaries, which have already undergone an elaborate permitting process.

"We figure we'll just do what we do well and let other people do what they do well," Clyde said. "As business people we really have no interest in changing it up."

In Humboldt County, a world-famous hub of marijuana cultivation, the Board of Supervisors has endorsed Proposition 19. And some growers already are working with county officials to establish environmental standards for their operations.

"We want to welcome and work with those who want to daylight the industry and help us address needed regulations," said Supervisor Bonnie Neeley.

Credit Card Debt?

Solutions that can help you get out of debt.

Tom Hill
CGA STAFF WRITER

Every three minutes another person falls behind on credit card debt. It's no wonder, since every major credit card company has nearly doubled the minimum monthly payment on consumers' bills. Federal Regulators forced the change because of their concern about the growing mountain of consumer debt, which stands at $2.17 trillion. Many consumers can only pay the minimum payment, which can take up to 30 years to pay off. Now, relief is in sight for millions of Americans.

CreditGUARD of America, a non-profit licensed debt management service provider, is making a new program available to lower debt payments and become free of all credit card debt in only three to five years. Consumers need only $2,000 or more in total credit card debt and falling behind on any account, to cut their payment by 35% to 50%, and reduce or eliminate interest charges altogether.

Over 200,000 families, located throughout the U.S. have regained financial independence with CreditGUARD's licensed, bonded and insured service. CreditGUARD of America has received high marks in consumer surveys showing high consumer satisfaction and confidence. The CreditGUARD debt management program can lower your monthly payments by hundreds and save you thousands!

One such case is Sandra L. who proclaimed "CreditGUARD cut my monthly payment by $656 and saved me over $29,206.53 in interest. They saved my way of life and gave me back my piece of mind! Now I can see myself on my way to becoming debt free." or Jeffery C. who said "CreditGUARD of America helped me consolidate 3 of my credit cards into one affordable payment. They are now saving me nearly $200 a month. Now I will be debt free in 2 years or less"

Supreme Court to hear violent video game case

DERRIK J. LANG
AP Entertainment Writer

LONG BEACH Before picking up any Wii games or downloading apps on her iPhone for her two daughters, Lillian Quintero does her homework. She'll first read reviews online and in magazines, then try them out for herself. If she thinks the games are engaging and educational enough, 4-year-old Isabella and 2-year-old Sophia are free to play.

"I know there's going to be a point where they get these things on their own," said the 35-year-old mother from Long Beach, Calif. "We're not going to be there to monitor everything. That's why the most important thing is communication, instilling morals and values in them and helping them to understand certain boundaries. There's only so much you can do."

Quintero and her husband, Jorge, are some of the parents who support a California law that seeks to ban the sale and rental of violent games to children. The law, which has bounced around the legal system like a game of "Pong" since Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger first signed it in 2005, was declared unconstitutional last year by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.

The U.S. Supreme Court will hear arguments Tuesday about the federal court's decision to throw out California's ban on violent games, marking the first time a case involving the interactive medium itself has gone before the Supreme Court. It's another sign that the $20 billion-a-year industry, long considered to be just child's play, is now all grown up.

California's measure would have regulated games more like pornography than movies, prohibiting the sale or rental of games that give players the option of "killing, maiming, dismembering, or sexually assaulting an image of a human being" to anyone under the age of 18. Only retailers would be punished with fines of up to $1,000 for each infraction.

The federal court said the law violated minors' constitutional rights under the First and Fourteenth amendments and the state lacked enough evidence to prove violent games cause physical and psychological harm to minors. Courts in six other states, including Michigan and Illinois, have reached similar conclusions, striking down parallel violent game bans.

Under California's law, only adults would be able to purchase games like "Postal 2," the first-person shooter by developer Running With Scissors that features the ability to light unarmed bystanders on fire, and "Grand Theft Auto IV," the popular third-person shoot-'em-up from Rockstar Games that allows gamers to portray carjacking, gun-toting gangsters.

The Quinteros, like most supporters, believe the law will protect children from buying such violent titles, while gamers and free speech advocates think California's ban could lead to strict federal regulation on the content of games and other media. All agree, however, that the graphically rich medium has come a long way from 8-bit tennis matches.

The average age of gamers is 34, according to the Entertainment Software Association, and many are paying close attention to the Supreme Court case. The Entertainment Consumers Association, which lobbies on behalf of gamers, is organizing a rally outside the Supreme Court building Tuesday as "a way of sending a strong message and uniting gamers."

"It's not so much a video game case as a First Amendment case," said George Rose, chief public policy officer at Activision Blizzard Inc., the Santa Monica, Calif.-based publisher of the popular "Call of Duty" and "Guitar Hero" gaming franchises. The gamemaker filed a friend-of-the-court brief opposing California's ban, which was never enforced.

Other allies in the fight include Xbox manufacturer Microsoft Corp., "Star Wars" publisher LucasArts, The Recording Academy, Motion Picture Association of America, as well as the Entertainment Merchants Association and Entertainment Software Association, which sued to block California's ban, calling it "unnecessary, unwarranted and unconstitutional."

Opponents of the ban have called the measure unnecessary because virtually all major game publishers and retailers employ a universal voluntary rating system, much like movie studios and theaters, that assigns one of eight age-specific ratings to games, then blocks the sale of games that are rated M for "mature" and AO for "adults only" to children.

The gaming industry has actually done a better job of preventing minors from buying entertainment not intended for their age group than the music and film industries, according to the Federal Trade Commission. In a report released last year, the FTC found that 20 percent of minors were able to buy M-rated games, down from 42 percent three years earlier.

In contrast, 72 percent of minors were able buy music CDs with explicit content warnings, 50 percent were sold R-rated and unrated DVDs and 28 percent purchased tickets to R-rated movies. The FTC noted there were gaps in enforcement of age-based sales restrictions, specifically with the use of gift cards in online purchases and unrestricted mobile games.

The Parents Television Council, which supports California's ban on violent games, conducted its own secret shopper campaign this year with children between the ages of 12 and 16 attempting to buy M-rated games at 109 stores in 14 states. The group found 21 instances of retailers, including Target, Kmart, Sears and Best Buy, selling M-rated games to minors.

Leland Yee, the Democratic state senator and child psychologist who originally authored the law, contends the gaming industry's rating system is not effective because of the sweeping scope of games, which are longer and more intricate than movies. Yee said he believes violent games are more harmful to children because of the medium's interactive nature.

"This isn't an attack on the First Amendment," said Yee. "This is about not making ultra violent video games available to children."

Santa Monica-Malibu schools provide an excellent education, but it is in jeopardy.

This year the school board voted to eliminate 58 teachers and other specialists who work directly with students. More than 80% of the board's budget cuts were made at the student-serving level. How can we stop this decline?

Chris Bley has solutions:
- Eliminate excess spending in non-classroom areas.
- Insist that the SMMUSD generate more revenue on its own.

have placed a strict limit on development, has a particular vendetta against O'Day, who co-chaired the campaign to defeat the proposal.

"I don't believe the voters in Santa Monica go for negative campaigns," O'Day said on Friday. "Time and time again we've seen them turn away from it. It's too bad that people in town feel that they need to resort to that."

Representatives from SMCLC could not be reached by deadline Friday.

In another notable instance of negative campaigning, local political powerhouse group Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights, usually content to stay above the fray and simply back its own slate of candidates, has sent out a campaign mailer that tells voters: "Don't be fooled! Vote no on Kronovet. Republican landlord Robert Kronovet is no friend of tenants and rent control."

SMRR co-chair Patricia Hoffman said the group thinks carefully about putting out negative campaign ads and has only opposed a handful of candidates in its 30 years. Kronovet's campaign, she said, presented a special circumstance for SMRR.

"Because he's running as a Rent Control Board Commissioner, rather than as a real estate broker, we wanted to make sure that our constituency knew that he was not a pro-tenant candidate," she said.

Kronovet won his Rent Control Board seat 2008, making him the first non-SMRR supported commissioner in the board's history. He is opposed to Measure RR, which would bolster eviction protections for renters, and regularly criticizes Santa Monica's rent control law and its affordable housing construction policy.

> Patricia Hoffman
> SMRR co-chair

Defending the anti-Kronovet ad, Hoffman said SMRR takes care to make sure its negative campaign messages aren't personal attacks.

"On the occasions that we've done [negative ads], we have always made factual statements and then encouraged our constituents to not vote for that person based on the facts," she said.

Regardless of intention, Kronovet, reached on Friday, seemed to be taking it personally.

"It's ugly, first of all," he said of the ad. "But I know my opponents. My opponents are ugly when it comes to dehumanizing people."

He was also quick to strike back.

Asked if he thought SMRR's attack would hurt him in the election, he replied: "Are you kidding me? It's not going to hurt at all because this kind of nonsense makes them look like the fools they are."

Alley Renewal Program

The alley south of Pico Boulevard between 22nd and 23rd streets will be resurfaced starting on Monday, Nov. 1, 2010. Work will include grinding and asphalt overlay. Please be advised that resurfacing operations will generate noise despite best efforts to keep the disturbance to a minimum. The estimated completion date is Tuesday, Nov. 9, 2010.

Parking Structure No. 2 Seismic Retrofit

The parking structure will remain open throughout the construction project; however, the work requires the closure of up to 50 parking spaces per day. The lanes exiting to Second Street will be closed until late October. During this time, all exiting traffic is being re-routed to the alley behind the parking structure. Some of the construction requires workers to be in close proximity to the drive aisles. Please use extreme caution while driving in the structure. The estimated completion date for the project is February of 2011.

points, but we didn't," Muno said. "We turned the ball over a ton and we had a ton of penalties, the things we emphasized in practice this week."

Doherty attributed the turnovers to playing under a different offense with starting quarterback Matthew Partyka out after being knocked unconscious in last week's loss to league rival Salesian. Holguin got the start, but normally plays wide receiver.

"That's small school football," Muno said, citing St. Monica's small student population. "You have to put guys in positions that they're normally not used to playing."

Also keeping St. Monica from building momentum and continuing potential scoring drive was an unusually high number of penalties, especially holding and unsportsmanlike conduct calls.

Senior Solomon Niumataevalu was ejected from the game for an unsportsmanlike conduct call, his second of the game, early in the fourth quarter.

Niumataevalu had been having a busy night, on both sides of the ball. Late in the first quarter, Muno pulled Holguin and ran two back-to-back direct snaps to Niumataevalu. The 250-pounder rumbled down the field for 13 yards on his first attempt and another 15 on his second.

After a two-yard rush by junior Sean Martinez, Holguin took a keeper 20 yards to the endzone for St. Monica's second touchdown of the game.

With seconds to go in the first, Niumataevalu sacked Bell-Jeff quarterback Chris Issakanian in the endzone. Niumataevalu's safety was St. Monica's final score of the game.

Holguin, who actually played quarterback two years ago, had a rough game, Doherty said.

"He stepped into a difficult situation," Muno said. "I thought he played well."

Muno added that Partyka will be back next week.

Holguin also threw for a touchdown midway through the first quarter. The 19-yard pass found senior Kyle Farber in the endzone. Farber also had an interception, one of the St. Monica defense's five.

Bell-Jeff's only touchdown came in the third quarter on an 8-yard pass to Shirley. Shirley took the pitch to the outside on the next play for a two-point conversion.

With their first league win, St. Monica keeps their hopes for their first playoff since 2003 alive. Next week, the Mariners will face St. Genevieve, currently second in the league. And with their starting quarterback suiting up for this week's practice, St. Monica will have its offense back in order.

Summit Entertainment's action comedy "Red" continued to hold up well, finishing at No. 3 with $10.8 million and lifting its total to $58.9 million.

Another franchise playing in 3-D for the first time, Paramount's "Jackass 3D," crossed the $100 million mark, coming in at No. 4 with $8.4 million. The stunt and prank comedy raised its haul to $101.6 million.

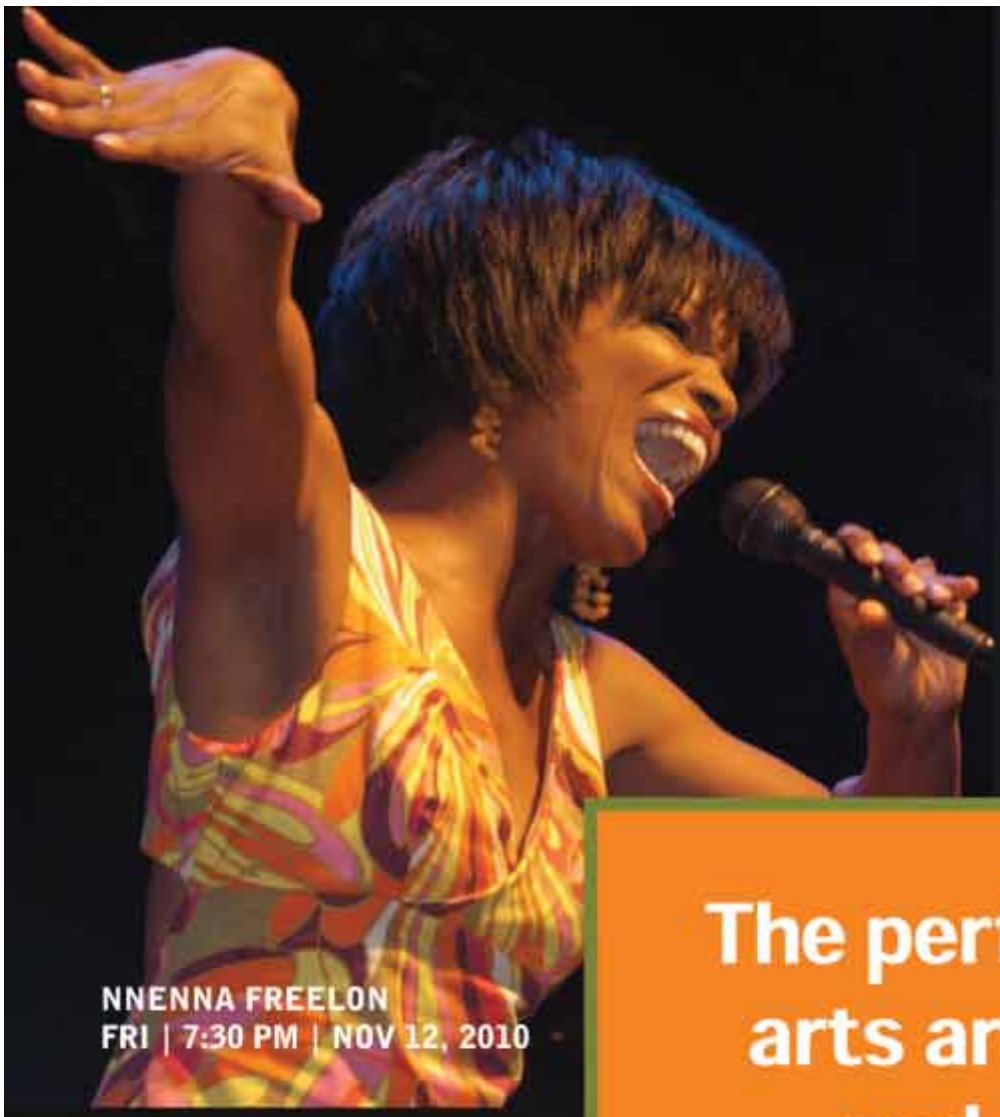

In narrower release, Fox Searchlight's legal drama "Conviction" broke into the top-10 after two weeks in a handful of theaters. Starring Hilary Swank in the real-life story of a woman who put herself through law school to free her brother on a murder rap, "Conviction" was No. 10 with $1.8 million, playing in 565 theaters and averaging a modest $3,230 a cinema.

That compared to an $8,618 average in 2,808 theaters for "Saw 3D."

Gambling slumps, but hotels do well in Atlantic City

BY WAYNE PARRY
Associated Press

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. Finally, some good news after four years of slumping revenues: Even though fewer people are coming to the nation's second-largest gambling resort, they're spending more cash on things that don't involve gambling.

Spending on hotel rooms, meals, concerts and nightclubs has increased even as the gambling take has dropped for Atlantic City's 11 casinos, where the number of total visitors fell from 34,534 in 2006 to 30,381 last year.

The amount of money gamblers have lost at slot machines and card and roulette tables is down 23 percent since 2007, according to a study by Gaming Industry Observer, a publication by Spectrum Gaming Group, an Atlantic City-area casino consulting firm. But gamblers' spending on hotel rooms is up 21 percent and food and drink is up 6 percent.

Herney Nisimblat, a Darien, Conn., retiree, said a promotion linked to the HBO series "Boardwalk Empire" drew him to Resorts Atlantic City for a $19.20 straight-razor shave, just like the ones that real-life Prohibition-era political and rackets boss Enoch "Nucky" Johnson used to get.

"To me, it brought back nostalgia," said Nisimblat. "I come from Colombia, and my father used to get that when I was a kid. I remember watching him get a shave. It was like a dream to get one myself. I wish I could do it every day."

A former marketing director with Colgate-Palmolive, the 69-year-old Nisimblat comes to Atlantic City every other month, and not just to gamble.

"I'm retired, so now is the time to spend the money I've been saving my whole life," he said. "I love to go out and have a good time. I love the Boardwalk, I love to go shopping, to go to a nice restaurant, and to the casinos. Whatever they're offering, I'll do."

People like Nisimblat are a silver lining in an otherwise dark, cloudy sky in Atlantic City. They're making some casinos rethink their entire way of measuring success, with the bottom line no longer solely relying on slot machines and table games.

Atlantic City has been saying for years that it needs to focus less on day-tripping senior citizens who come to play slots for a few hours, cash in their free buffet coupons, then ride the bus back home. Instead, casino executives say, the city needs to become a destination resort where top concerts, gourmet restaurants, shopping and spas attract more upscale customers willing to pay cash for their fun.

The change in thinking started around 2007, a few months after the Philadelphia suburbs got their first slots parlor. There are now 10 in Pennsylvania, and the beating they have put on Atlantic City by stealing many of the resort's best customers is profound.

That competition ramped up just as the economy tanked: a devastating one-two punch for a resort that for decades had most of the eastern United States to itself in terms of gambling customers.

Atlantic City feels it still has a big advantage in that most of its neighboring competitors lack hotel rooms, fancy restaurants and entertainment.

"We're still the second-biggest gaming market in the country, but when you lose a billion dollars of revenue that's not coming back, you have to change your business model," said Don Marrandino, eastern division president of Harrah's Entertainment Inc., which owns four casinos here. "That's what we're doing."

percent unemployment rate on three-term Democratic Sen. Barbara Boxer. Meanwhile, Boxer is fond of reminding voters that the former Hewlett-Packard Co. chief executive laid off 30,000 workers during her five-and-a-half year tenure at the technology company.

Both candidates seem to think they have the winning hand in this particular debate and are intent on raising it as often as they can over the coming days.

Fiorina is using the jobs debate to make the case that policies promoted by Congress and the Obama administration have created the state's economic problems. She says in her campaign stops that while California has 2.3 million people out of work, the federal government has added 100,000 "bureaucrats" in the last 12 months and that the federal debt has grown by $2.3 trillion over the past two years.

"When a job gets destroyed, we're not just destroying a paycheck, we're destroying someone's opportunity to live the American Dream, we're destroying their ability to build a better life for themselves and their families and in many cases we're undercutting their sense of dignity and self worth," Fiorina said to supporters in Sacramento.

She also makes the case that the state needs a senator who would be friendlier to the state's small businesses.

"We are crushing them with a burden of taxation and regulation and uncertainty," Fiorina told about 250 people in Orange County.

Boxer fixes blame on the administration of former President George W. Bush, and says that she and fellow Democrats are trying to fix the economic problems Republicans created when they controlled the White House and — for most of Bush's two terms — the Congress. Her latest and perhaps final TV ad of the campaign was released over the weekend and focuses exclusively on Fiorina's tenure at H-P.

"Carly Fiorina, as CEO she shipped American jobs to China," the ad states.

In Seal Beach on Saturday, Fiorina supporter Judy Duvall said she shared Fiorina's emphasis on jobs as the campaign's top issue. She said she wasn't bothered by criticism that Hewlett-Packard outsourced jobs to other countries because it was in the best interest of the company and its shareholders at the time.

"Now she will work for us," Duvall said. "She has seen both sides of the picture."

Fiorina acknowledges the layoffs, but she also said she increased the number of employees overall. She says the increase was beyond the number added when the company merged with Compaq Computers.

Pontiac rolls into history

TOM KRISHER
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT Pontiac, whose muscle cars drag-raced down boulevards, parked at drive-ins and roared across movie screens, is going out of business on Sunday.

The 84-year-old brand, moribund since General Motors decided to kill it last year as it collapsed into bankruptcy, had been in decline for years. It was undone by a combination of poor corporate strategy and changing driver tastes. On Oct. 31, GM's agreements with Pontiac dealers expire.

Even before GM's bankruptcy, Pontiac's sales had fallen from their peak of nearly one million in 1968, when the brand's speedier models were prized for their powerful engines and scowling grills.

At Pontiac's pinnacle, models like the GTO, Trans Am and Catalina 2+2 were packed with horsepower and sported colors like "Tiger Gold." Burt Reynolds and Sally Field fled the law in a Firebird Trans Am which raced through the 1970s hit movie "Smokey and the Bandit."

By the late 1980s, though, Pontiacs were taking off their muscle shirts, putting on suits and trying to act like other cars. The brand had lost its edge.

Bill Hoglund, a retired GM executive who led Pontiac during its "We Build Excitement" ad campaigns in the 1980s, blames the brand's demise on a reorganization under CEO Roger Smith in 1984. That overhaul cut costs by combining Pontiac's manufacturing, engineering and design operations with those of other GM brands.

"There was no passion for the product," says Hoglund. "The product had to fit what was going on in the corporate system."

Although the moves were necessary to fend off competition from Japanese automakers with lower costs, they yielded Pontiacs that looked and drove like other GM cars.

By 2008, the last full year before GM announced Pontiac's shutdown, sales were 267,000, less than a third of those sold in 1968.

Formed in 1926, Pontiac made cars for the working class until a sales slump in the 1950s nearly killed it. GM revived the brand by connecting it to auto racing. From then on, each Pontiac sales boom was driven by speed; each bust generally featured outdated or boring rides.

The brand's most storied muscle car, the GTO, came about when some GM engineers took a small car called the Tempest and put a powerful V8 engine under the hood. The letters stood for "Gran Turismo Omologato," Italian for "ready to race."

Sparked by the GTO, the Pontiac brand thrived, making up 17 percent of the 5.4 million cars and trucks GM sold in the U.S. in 1968. The GTO even spawned its own 1960s hit song.

"C'mon and turn it on, wind it up, blow it out GTO," was the chorus of the tune by Ronny and the Daytonas.

Pontiac's decline stemmed from a lack of a consistent strategy or leadership. Executives rotated through every few years on their way up the corporate ladder, each with a different vision. Some even tried to make Pontiac a luxury brand.

Cast Your Vote for Four Year Term Candidates

Bob Holbrook
As an incumbent council member and former mayor, Bob Holbrook is driven by residents' priorities and concerns. He is committed to keeping the community safe by having the strongest police and fire department. He has a proven track record in making sure public safety has the tools to provide a high level of quality service.

Pam O'Connor
As current Mayor Pro-Tem, Pam O'Connor has proven leadership skills and has worked hard to protect and conserve Santa Monica neighborhoods. Pam O'Connor demands strong fiscal management from government - ensuring that through these tough times Santa Monica maintains high quality services - especially public safety.

Kevin McKeown
Kevin McKeown has strongly supported the Santa Monica Police and Fire Departments. Kevin was instrumental in the restoration of local fire dispatch for faster responses. He was also an advocate in maintaining police officer staffing to keep the public safe.

Cast Your Vote for Two Year Term Candidates

Terry O'Day
Terry O'Day believes that local government's first responsibility is to protect the safety of its residents. While the city faces new challenges to balance its budget during these tough economic times, Terry is not willing to sacrifice the city's excellent police, fire or paramedic services.

Gleam Davis
In Councilmember Gleam Davis' term she has been supportive in keeping the public safe. She has shown true leadership in the defense of maintaining police staffing, steering kids away from gangs, promoting pedestrian safety and overall public safety.

Some DC voters cast ballots elsewhere

JESSICA GRESKO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON Alex lives in Washington but votes at a church in Virginia. Kathleen signed a lease here but casts her ballot in Pennsylvania. Nicolas moved to the nation's capital a year ago, but his polling place is in Connecticut.

Washington may be a home for some city dwellers, but it isn't where their vote will count during Tuesday's midterm elections. Some residents eligible to vote in the city choose to vote in another place they have a tie to, saying one reason not to vote in Washington is it would mean giving up their vote in Congress.

People who live in the nation's capital can vote for president and local offices like mayor. But they have no senators representing them, and their one House member can't vote on the House floor. Close races in November are virtually unheard of in the overwhelmingly Democratic city. So some of the city's 600,000 residents go out of their way to vote somewhere they think they can make more of a difference. It may seem like manipulating the system — but it can be legal, depending on a person's circumstances and the laws in the states where they vote.

"I can't think of any of my friends who vote in D.C.," said Kathleen Danielson, 22, who graduated from George Washington University earlier this year and now lives in the city's Columbia Heights neighborhood, about two miles from the White House.

Danielson hasn't changed her voter registration from the Pennsylvania town where she grew up, where corn grows in local fields and there are dairy farms nearby. She says she just hasn't gotten around to switching her residency since graduating and doesn't like that she'd lose her representation in Congress if she switched.

For people like Danielson, just out of school or perhaps in a temporary job, it can be hard to know where it's OK to vote. In Michigan, for instance, state law suggests a person must regularly sleep in the state and keep their possessions there to be eligible to vote.

Other states have broader definitions, saying people can vote there if they intend to return or haven't decided that their new residence will be permanent. Figuring out intent can be subjective and tricky, though where a person gets a driver's license, pays taxes and owns property are telling clues.

A voter's intent can also change over time, said Myrna Perez, a lawyer at the Brennan Center for Justice in New York whose work focuses on voting access and election law. But Perez said election laws are "not supposed to be exploited and used for gamesmanship purposes."

"They're supposed to be a true reflection of where the voter intends at that time to be a part of," she said.

For voters, the effort required to cast a ballot elsewhere varies. Some out-of-state voters have an absentee ballot sent to their family's house, and a relative then sends it to them. Others have absentee ballots sent directly to their D.C. address.

Some, like Virginia voter Alex Bea, 27, don't have to travel far and simply go back to their hometowns.

"I knew that if I moved into D.C. ... I wouldn't want to lose that voice in Congress, that representation," said Bea, who has had a D.C. address for about a year and does advocacy work for an environmental campaign.

Ilir Zherka, the executive director of D.C. Vote, which advocates for voting members of Congress for D.C., said he runs into people several times a year that have a D.C. address but vote elsewhere. Sometimes, he said, they may just be lazy in not switching addresses, but the fact D.C. doesn't have representation in Congress provides an incentive not to switch. That may make the issue more pronounced in D.C.

"I don't know how prevalent the problem is," he said. "It does not seem to be on anyone's radar screen."

For voters who do bend the truth to register elsewhere there is likely little consequence. Ballots can be challenged and votes disqualified, but that's rare and punishments rarer still. For voters themselves, knowing if they are in the right can be difficult, and many just go with their gut.

"For the time being, seeing as I've bounced around so much, I still consider Connecticut home," said Nicolas Curdumi, 24-year-old sales representative who still has a Connecticut driver's license and is on his family's cell phone plan, with a Connecticut area code.

He has some company voting out of state. Both his roommates do — one in Michigan and the other in Pennsylvania. Curdumi is particularly interested in the Connecticut senate race this year between Republican Linda McMahon, a former wrestling executive, and Democrat Richard Blumenthal, the state's attorney general, but he said he is unsure how long he'll vote in the state.

"I don't know what's to stop me," he said. "One day I'll show up to vote somewhere or send in my absentee and they'll say, 'Sorry.'"

Generation gap divides troops on gays in military

KRISTIN M. HALL
TOM BREEN
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. If you want to know what a member of the armed forces thinks about repealing "don't ask, don't tell," you could start by asking how old they are.

Generational differences appear to play a prominent role in whether soldiers, airmen, Marines and sailors are worried about repealing the policy that has barred gays from serving openly since 1993 but faces a possible court-ordered end. Generation may also influence how a change is implemented, if the courts or Congress ultimately lift the ban.

"Younger soldiers wouldn't have a problem with it, but older soldiers are the ones that enforce Army regulations," noted Jason Ashley, 43, a former Army first sergeant who served with the 101st Airborne Division based at Fort Campbell, Ky.

There is no comprehensive survey of military-wide views of gays in the ranks — yet. The Pentagon is set to release a study of the issue in December after questioning 400,000 service members and 150,000 relatives, an effort ordered by Defense Secretary Robert Gates to determine how to repeal the policy without hurting the military.

Officials familiar with its findings told The Associated Press this week that the survey found most U.S. troops and their families don't care whether gays serve openly and think "don't ask, don't tell" could be done away with. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because the results of the survey have not been released.

Details on the findings were still scarce. But in conversations with troops and veterans, the idea repeatedly emerges that younger recruits, who make up the bulk of combat troops in Afghanistan and Iraq, are indifferent while older ones, including many officers, don't want the ban lifted.

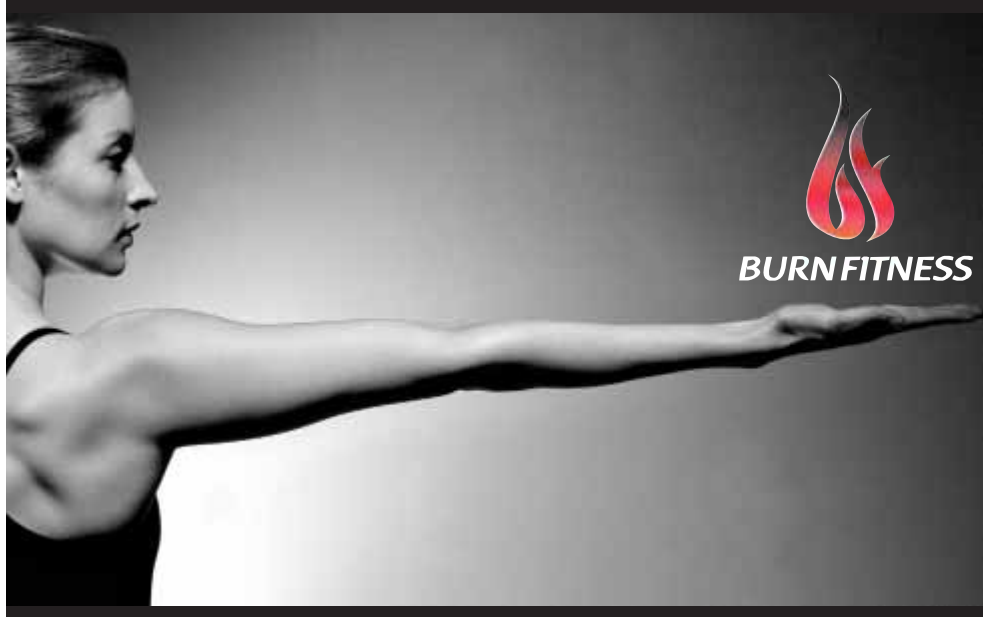

Many veterans of the current wars use terms like "archaic" and "old-school" to describe the viewpoint they see from higher-ranking officers and others who support the ban.

"You can't expect a 60-year-old colonel who was reared in the 1950s to have the same opinion about homosexuality as a soldier who was reared in the 1990s," said Abel Trevino, who served in the Army from 2003 to 2008.

Justin Little, 30, is a National Guard medic who asked that his unit not be identified, because he serves with a gay soldier.

Lance Shults, 25, a master at arms at Naval Base San Diego, said he was in boot camp with gay men and women, and that serving alongside them isn't a concern. Shults believes his attitude is common among younger members of the military, who have grown up with portrayals of gays in the media and who may be likelier to have openly gay friends or relatives than older officers and enlistees.

Oregon remains No. 1, Auburn creeps on Boise

RALPH D. RUSSO
AP College Football Writer

NEW YORK Oregon tightened its grip on the top spot in The Associated Press poll Sunday, while No. 3 Auburn closed the gap on No. 2 Boise State.

In their third consecutive week as No. 1, the Ducks reached a new high for first-place votes (49) and points (1,487) from the media panel after a decisive 53-32 victory at Southern California on Saturday night.

Boise State received seven first-place votes and 1,403 points after four voters switched from the Broncos to the Ducks.

Auburn also lost a first-place vote to Oregon. The Tigers got two votes as No. 1 after beating Mississippi 51-31, but are now just seven points behind the Broncos. Boise State beat Louisiana Tech 49-20 on Tuesday.

No. 4 TCU also received two first-place votes. Idle Alabama moved up a spot to No. 5 and unbeaten Utah climbed to two places to sixth.

The Utes host the Horned Frogs in the first game in Mountain West Conference history to match top-10 teams.

The rest of the top 10 is Wisconsin, Ohio State, Nebraska and Stanford.

Missouri and Michigan State both took big tumbles after losing for the first time this season. The Tigers dropped seven spots to No. 14 after losing 31-17 at Nebraska.

The Spartans dropped 11 places to 16th after losing 37-6 at Iowa. The Hawkeyes moved up three spots to No. 15.

The loss to Oregon dropped USC out of the rankings for the second time this season and Miami is also out again after being upset 24-19 at Virginia.

Moving back into the Top 25 were No. 23 North Carolina State and No. 25 Nevada.

Oklahoma is No. 11, followed by LSU and Arizona.

No. 18 South Carolina, Oklahoma State and Virginia Tech round out the first 20.

Joining N.C. State and Nevada in the final five were No. 21 Mississippi State, No. 22 Baylor and No. 24 Florida State.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

★★★★★ Where others fuss and do all they can to trim their budget, you tap into your ingenuity. Others will be thrilled by the even better idea that pops out of creative brainstorming. Honor your financial needs. Tonight: Acting as if it is still the weekend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ You can be concerned about details, losing sight of the concept you are working with. It is part of the liability of Virgo's penchant for details. Today, you could choose to do both simultaneously. Why not give it a shot? Tonight: Whatever makes you smile.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ You feel an uneasiness that might be difficult to identify. You are unlikely to say anything as you attempt to work through certain issues. The wise Libra will go within and identify the problem before taking any action. Tonight: You might want to chat with a dear friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Zero in on what you feel is significant in a meeting. Perhaps shifting others to your type of thinking could be a powerful tool. Others might express much more of what they are thinking when they can walk in your shoes. Tonight: A meeting could evolve into a happening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You are proud of your leadership abilities. When you take a stand, many respond. They often could be very challenging -- not so much in disagreement, but challenging your commitment. Good will starts to flow back and forth. Tonight: In the limelight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Walk away from conventional thinking. At the same time, dump restrictions you place on your thought process. You want to open up all doors. A friend might be very powerful, identifying many of your preconceived and restrictive thoughts. Tonight: Go where you can relax.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ You value friendship, but what happens when a loved one becomes demanding? Your commitment is tested. For some of you, this situation could be intolerable. Relax and think of this person as a friend in need. Suddenly, relating becomes easier. Tonight: A close encounter.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You have some very strong ideas that often isolate you from others. Right now, let boundaries melt as you walk with others through their fields of life. You will gain a new respect and understanding for the people you do this exercise with. Tonight: Go with another person's plans.

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year, you will get what you want. The key to your success will be a strong group of supporters who help you back up when you are down. You have unusual allure and magnetism. If you are single, you will have to work to maintain this status. So many admirers! If you are attached, your sweetie finds you unusually appealing and often goes along with your way of thinking.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

ARITHMO™

CrossMath + × − ÷

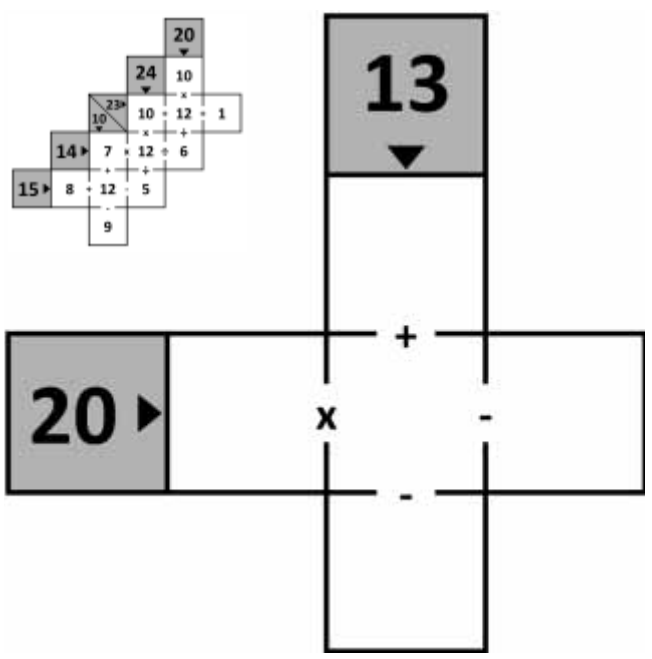

- Fill the grid with the set of given numbers (1 to 12) to satisfy the Equa demands (7 to 24) in the shaded boxes. The Equa demands represent the sum of the digits that you will insert into the empty squares.
- Each horizontal row has one Equa demand to satisfy; each vertical column also has one demand to satisfy. Each empty square in the grid dictates the math operation (addition +, subtraction -, multiplication X, and division ÷) that must be performed to meet the demands.
- You must follow the given math operations for each square and you must make sure all the numbers satisfy the demands in the shaded boxes when connected in adjacent threes and calculated together from left to right, and top to bottom.
- The numbers you insert into the grid must satisfy the Equa demands both horizontally and vertically.

For more games, go to www.arithmo.com

Fill in the empty fields with the given numbers so when calculated together they satisfy all Equas in the gray boxes:

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Modern Mummies: New York City artist Sally Davies offered in October the latest evidence of how unattractive today's fast foods are to bacteria and maggots. Davies bought a McDonald's Happy Meal in April, has photographed it daily, and has noted periodically the lack even of the slightest sign of decomposition. Her dog, who circled restlessly nearby for the first two days the vittles were out, since then has ignored it. (Several bloggers, and filmmaker Morgan Spurlock, have made discoveries similar to Davies'.) Food scientists "credited" a heavy use (though likely still within FDA guidelines) of the preservative sodium propionate but also the predominance of fat and lack of moisture and nutrients -- all of which contribute to merely shrinking and hardening the burger and fries.

■ Maybe Just Safekeeping It for a Friend: Raymond Roberts, 25, was arrested in Manatee County, Fla., in September after an ordinary traffic stop turned up a strong smell of marijuana. At deputies' behest, Roberts removed a baggie of marijuana from his buttocks, but when the deputies saw another plastic bag right behind it (containing a white substance believed to be cocaine), Roberts said, "The weed is (mine)," but "(t)he white stuff is not ...."

TODAY IN HISTORY

1950 Pope Pius XII claims Papal Infallibility when he formally defines the dogma of the Assumption of Mary.

1951 Operation Buster-Jangle: 6,500 American soldiers are exposed to 'Desert Rock' atomic explosions for training purposes in Nevada. Participation is not voluntary.

1952 Operation Ivy – The United States successfully detonates the first large hydrogen bomb, codenamed "Mike" ["M" for megaton], in the Eniwetok atoll, located in the Marshall Islands in the central Pacific Ocean. The explosion had a yield of 10 megatons.
