In high-tax states, worries about pain from GOP tax plan

BY DAVID PORTER & GEOFF MULVIHILL
Associated Press

Homeowners in high-tax states like New Jersey, where a modest house within commuting distance of New York City can easily carry property taxes of over $15,000 a year, are wondering whether the Republican bill being sold as a tax cut would actually result in higher bills for them.

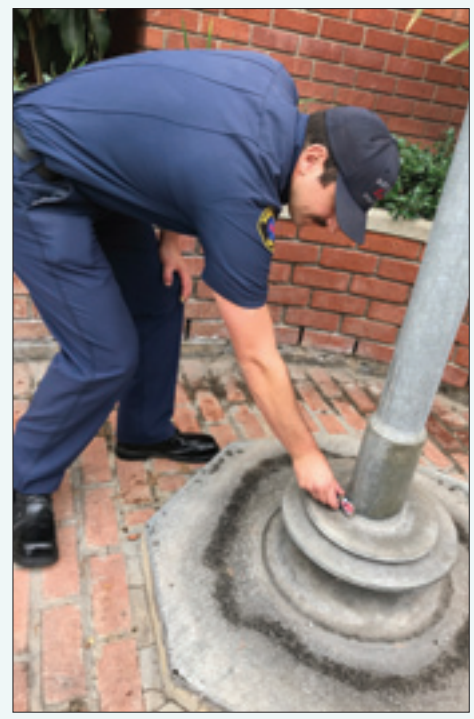

At issue are provisions that would end deductions for state and local sales and income taxes and would cap the property tax deduction at $10,000.

There's a lot of junk left lying on the ground and aside from the occasional quarter, most of it is better left in the gutter than your pocket but keen eyed locals can find some diamonds among the rough thanks to a new interactive art project.

"Santa Monica Rocks", launched in the beginning of October. It was created by Lynne Clark and Debra Bard, two artists from Ten Women Gallery on 1128 Montana Ave in Santa Monica.

Ten Women Gallery originally opened on Main St. in 1994 and later opened a separate branch in 1995, showcasing original handmade art from local female artists. The project aims to bring the community together through painting and hiding rocks around Santa Monica to be found and hid again.

The original idea came about over the summer during Clark's family trip to Winnipeg in Canada.

"My husband's a local Santa Monica teacher and we go up every summer with our two boys. We started hearing about these rocks in Winnipeg," said Clark. "My kids, being boys, it's hard to get them to go on a hike with me, but when they found out they might find rocks along the way then the whole story changed. They spent a good part of the summer not only searching and finding rocks, but also painting their own rocks."

Clark and Bard found that this idea was not exclusive to Winnipeg, but was also being practiced around the world and so they decided to start it up in Santa Monica. All that is required of somebody who wants to join in is that they find a rock, decorate it, find a place to hide it and post a hint online through the Facebook page the two created.

The person can then find a rock, replace it with another and then hide their newly-found rock somewhere else.

"I just love watching people get involved

In 1981, Susan Burton's life was forever changed when her five-year-old son was accidentally killed in an auto accident in their neighborhood. Turning to drugs to numb the pain of her grief, Burton fell into a spiral of addiction and imprisonment for her drug use. After numerous return trips to prison, Burton decided to take charge of her life and put herself back on the road to recovery, notably starting her journey at Santa Monica's CLARE Foundation. Inspired by her own success, Burton founded A New Way of Life, an organization designed to assist incarcerated women break the cycle of imprisonment and put themselves on a similar path towards success. Her efforts have aided hundreds of formerly-incarcerated women in reentering society, and resulted in Burton winning a CNN Hero Award, a Harvard Citizen Activist Award, a Purpose Prize, and fellowships with the Women's Policy Insititute, the California Wellness Foundation, and many others. In her autobiography, co-written by Cari Lynn, Burton chronicles her life story, and recounts her remarkable and inspirational path towards redemption.

BROCK

WHEN MIRIAM BROCK STARTED IN Santa Monica Malibu USD 13 year ago, she began as a Special Education Kindergarten teacher at McKinley Elementary. She then moved onto SAMOHI to provide speech-language services to students, as well as to manage the Circle of Friends program. She is currently the Assistive Technology Specialist for the Special Education Department and serves the entire district. Overall she has been teaching for 15 years. Prior to entering the teaching field, she was a Speech-Language Pathologist and Program Director for several in- and outpatient head injury rehabilitation centers in Seattle.

Brock is passionate about allowing ALL of our students to access the curriculum to whatever extent possible using any form of technology possible.

BROCK SPEAKS

There are 2 things I am excited about. First is allowing our non-verbal students a means to communicate through the use of iPads and specialized communication apps. Helping our classroom teachers in integrating language and use of AAC into the everyday curriculum is one of my goals this year.

My second goal relates to our students with more mild learning disabilities. Getting appropriate computer apps and extensions (such as our current program Read&Write for Google) into all of our special education and collaborative classes for students to access. Read&Write for Google is an awesome program that provides reading, writing, and study skills supports to students to access their general education curriculum.

I love working with the awesome staff that I meet at the various school sites. I also enjoy working with a student's family to carryover what they are learning in school to what they use at home. What makes me feel appreciated is when a student tells me how much they have benefitted from technology and how they "only wished they had known about it sooner" (those are our high school students). I have to say that I still get chills when one of our nonverbal students generates their first oral words with the use of their iPad and Proloquo2Go.

I always hope that my nonverbal students continue to use their augmentative communication systems (iPad) in the community and at home.

This is a quote that I found and love. "For people without disabilities, technologies makes things easier. For people with disabilities, technology makes things possible." - MP Radabaugh.

Largest US port complex passes plan to reach zero emissions

Associated Press

The largest port complex in the nation has set goals to drastically reduce air pollution over the next several decades.

The plan approved Thursday at a meeting of the governing boards of the twin ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach outlines strategies for improving equipment and efficiency to eventually move cargo with zero emissions.

The ports estimate that the cost of the efforts ranges from $7 billion to $14 billion, but the plan does not make clear who will pick up the tab. And detailed plans for implementing each program will require approval by each port's harbor commission.

"Collaboration will be critical to our success," Long Beach Harbor Commission President Lou Anne Bynum said in a statement. "Moving the needle to zero requires all of us — the ports, industry, regulatory agencies, environmental groups and our communities — to pool our energy, expertise and resources."

The plan has raised concerns that the enormous cost of the clean air goals could make the two ports less attractive in the face of competition from ports on the East and Gulf coasts.

The Los Angeles Times reported that Pacific Merchant Shipping Association President John McLaurin told commissioners he fears the cost "and its potential negative impacts on port competitiveness and the one in nine jobs in the Southern California region that are reliant on the ports."

The neighboring ports 20 miles south of downtown Los Angeles are the single largest fixed source of air pollution in Southern California, according to the South Coast Air Quality Management District.

Main points of the plan include clean-engine milestones for trucks, creating incentives to speed up fleet turnover to near-zero and zero-emission trucks, and efficiency programs for truck reservations and staging yards. The timeline for achieving a zero-emission truck fleet is 2035.

Other elements include requiring terminal operators to use zero-emission equipment by 2020, if possible, or the cleanest available equipment.

The plan also pursues electrification of terminal equipment and expands on-dock rail, with a goal of moving 50 percent of all cargo out of the ports by train.

The ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach sprawl over more than 23 square miles (60 square kilometers) of land and water. They handle about 40 percent of U.S. container import traffic, about 25 percent of total exports, and together rank as the ninth-largest port complex in the world, according to the ports.

on Facebook and Instagram. I love watching my kids and their friends go for hours painting rocks. We launched it here at the gallery and so many of the rocks are artist-designed and so that's kind of fun if you don't have the budget to buy a piece of art; you can find a piece of art," Bard said.

Jen Goldman, who teaches third grade at Roosevelt Elementary heard about the rock project while visiting the gallery and wants to get her students involved.

"I have artistic children in my classroom and I think that with other classrooms participating, they will be engaged and have fun and it's a community activity which we are working on in our school, so it builds community," said Goldman.

Clark and Bard are planning events in the coming months for people to paint rocks together and are continuing to use social media to reach a wider audience. Visit them online at @santamoniarocks on Instagram or https://www.facebook.com/groups/santamonicarocks.

multiple stab wounds to his upper body area. Santa Monica Fire Department arrived and treated the victim," said Sergeant Rudy Flores. "The victim was then transported to a local hospital and has been listed in stable but serious condition."

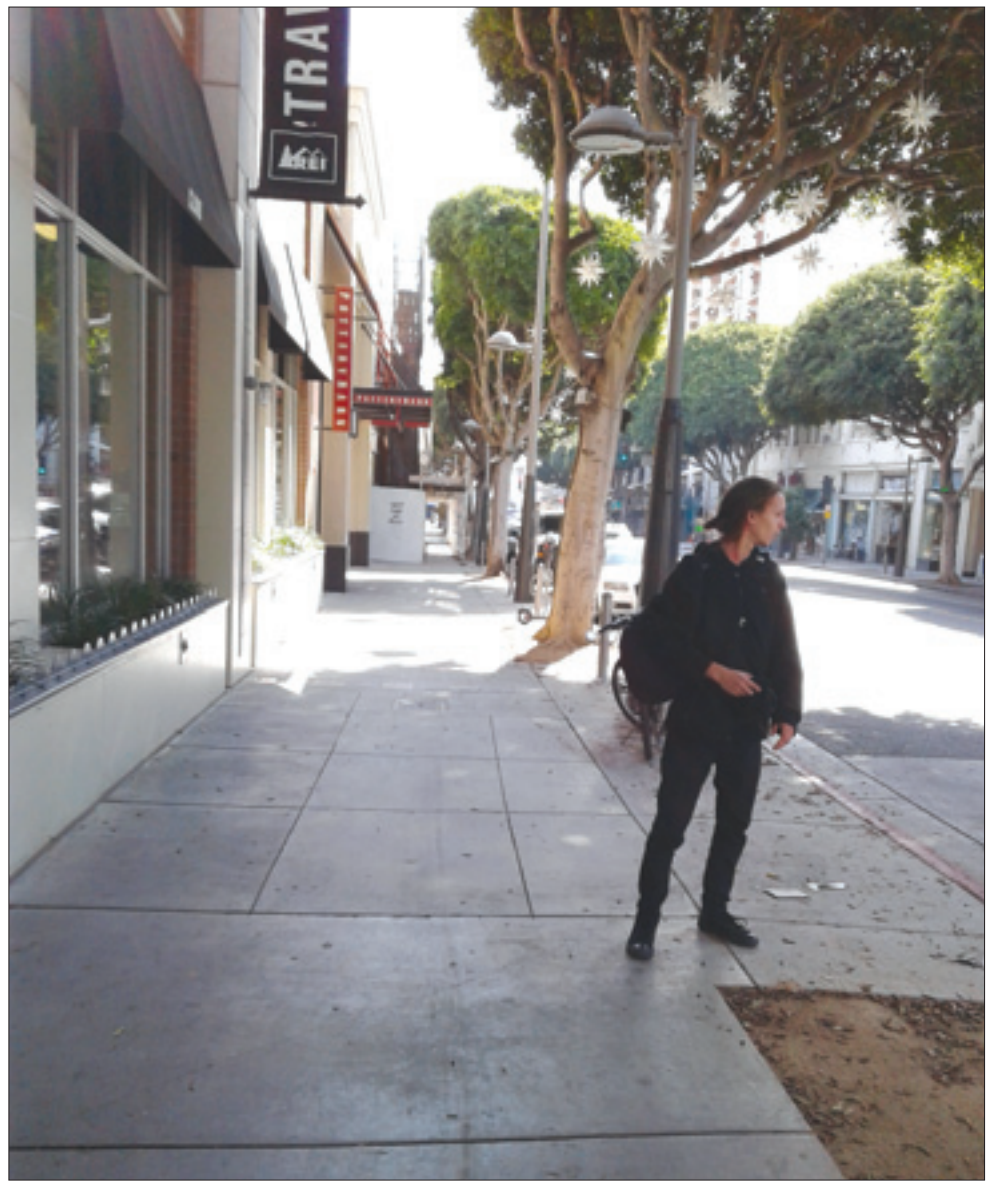

Flores said officers learned the suspect and victim were involved in a confrontation prior to the stabbing. The suspect involved immediately fled the area prior to police arrival.

"The suspect has been described as a Male/White in his 20's - 30's, thin build, long light brown hair in a bun/ponytail, wearing all black clothing, and a black backpack," said Flores. "Weapon used was an unknown stabbing instrument. This suspect should be considered armed and dangerous, as the knife or other stabbing instrument is still outstanding."

The victim took a photo of the suspect that was circulated to local media outlets.

"We are seeking the public's assistance in locating this suspect wanted for attempt murder," said Flores. "If the suspect is located we ask the public to immediately call 9-1-1. Anyone with additional information as to the identification and whereabouts of this suspect is encouraged to contact Detective Larios (310) 458-8937 or the Santa Monica Police Department (310) 458-8491."

and their toddler and is expecting a second child, said he now has $46,000 in itemized deductions — around $19,500 from property taxes, $7,000 in state income taxes and the rest from mortgage interest.

He estimates that losing those deductions would drive up his federal taxes by $4,000 a year — enough to call into question whether they can continue to afford the $630,000 house they bought three years ago.

If not for the mortgage interest deduction, "I would have rented," he said. "We did the math, said, 'Hey, we could afford this. It's a great school district, quiet neighborhood. We'll have a bedroom for each child and a bedroom for ourselves.' It's not an extravagant mansion."

The changes could hit hard in New Jersey and other high-tax states such as New York, Massachusetts and California. Those are places dominated by Democrats. But the deduction changes are giving Republican members of Congress pause, too.

Another major feature of the GOP plan being considered would nearly double the standard deduction to $24,000 for married couples. That would simplify taxes for many people, while also wiping out the benefits of itemizing deductions for some.

In Roseville, Minnesota, Craig Stilen and his wife itemize their tax returns. But in part because of the way the GOP proposal gives with one hand and takes with the other, Stilen hasn't been able to work out what the tax overhaul could mean for his family financially.

"There are a lot of moving parts that me, as Joe Consumer, is trying to digest," said Stilen, a 56-year-old who works in information technology.

Richard Middleton, an accountant in Cherry Hill, New Jersey, said the phone hasn't exactly been ringing off the hook with concerned clients — most of whom are higher-income.

But one member of his firm redid the 2016 taxes for a wealthy client using the proposed changes. The change, Middleton said: a bill $116 smaller.

Middleton said the $10,000 cap on property tax deductions won't have as big of an impact as it might sound in a state where the average bill was $8,300 last year.

That's because many New Jersey residents are now subject to the federal alternative minimum tax. The AMT is intended to keep high-earners from using lots of deductions to reduce their tax bills.

The majority of households that earn more than $200,000 are subject to the AMT, which would go away under the legislation.

Pharmaceutical company scientist Sean Kohler and his wife bought a $380,000 three-bedroom house in the Philadelphia suburb of Voohees, New Jersey, a couple of years ago with plans to stay for good and have kids.

They make about $160,000 but are still paying off student loans and have an annual property tax bill of about $15,000. He said that if the GOP plan goes through, their tax hit could run into the thousands, and they might have to adjust their goals.

"This really changes a lot of things," Kohler said. "That would be a lot of money I feel like we're going to have to come up with in April to make this work."

Mulvihill reported from Haddon Heights. AP reporter Kyle Potter in St. Paul, Minnesota, contributed to this story.

CRIME WATCH

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON OCTOBER 27, AT ABOUT 2 P.M.

Officers responded to the area of the 3rd St Promenade and Santa Monica Bl. regarding an assault that had just occurred. The victim told the officers he was walking on the Promenade when he was approached by the suspect, later identified as Joshua Kalana Hawk. Hawk pushed the victim causing him to stumble. Hawk continued to assault the victim by striking him several times in the head and neck area. Some passersby began to yell at Hawk and he stopped his assault of the victim. When the officers arrived on scene several witnesses to the incident informed the officers to the suspect's whereabouts. Hawk was detained and arrested after the investigation. The victim denied having any injuries and declined medical assistance at the scene. Hawk, 36, homeless, was charged with battery. Bail was set at $20,000.

By supporting minority education, you keep open the possibility of tomorrow's great ideas. Because of all the things that the human mind has created, perhaps the most amazing is the one that has yet to be created. And that possibility is a terrible thing to waste.

UNCF

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Nov. 4)

You'll give your all to projects, so choose them carefully. A brilliant solo mission will end in satisfaction, money and a prize. Once you know what you can handle alone, join a team. In 2018, first safety and security will invigorate you; then travel will ignite a new passion. Capricorn and Aquarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 30, 2, 22, 17 and 9.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
If you fear that you're bothering someone by reaching out, it's a sign that this person hasn't made you feel comfortable and accepted enough to relax. Not your fault. Also, probably not a good match for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
Thinking ahead will help you play your moments better. A lot of moments won't even happen unless you make a plan. Just don't get stuck there. You don't live inside the plan; you live inside the moment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)
You're a very responsible person. You'll take charge of the situation as far as it should be taken charge of, all the while keeping in mind that some things are better left alone.

CANCER (June 22-July 22)
Inspiration will come in the form of people you may feel competitive with. It's something you'll likely keep hidden, and wisely so. Let it burble up in you to be examined and turned into improvement-fuel later.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
You'll look back and laugh at some of the rules you used to give yourself. It's a good time to ask: "Am I doing the same thing now? Is there a rule I'm imposing on myself that is unnecessarily holding me back?"

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
That tough person you admire (but wouldn't exactly want to be exactly) will help you find the courage to cut out a piece of nonsense and get down to what's important to you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)
Your fantasies are the celluloid that will project onto the real world like film to the silver screen. Shift what you think about toward a topic that makes you feel giddy, warm and inspired.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21)
Friends are blessings. You wouldn't take that for granted. And yet, you really should be able to feel free, even a little bit careless around them. Shake off the uptight energy and, hopefully, they will, too.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
Even though you can tell when someone is lying, it's not always wise to call the person out right away. Going along may give you a strategic advantage. You can watch and understand what's really going on today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
You may feel a little bit irritable. Do you need more excitement or less excitement to get back into the zone? Let intuition speak to you and then take action (or inaction as the case may be).

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
You're ready to admit, if only to yourself, what makes you feel secretly superior. Then you can release the belief and let compassion take its place. The more equal and connected you feel to others, the easier life will be.

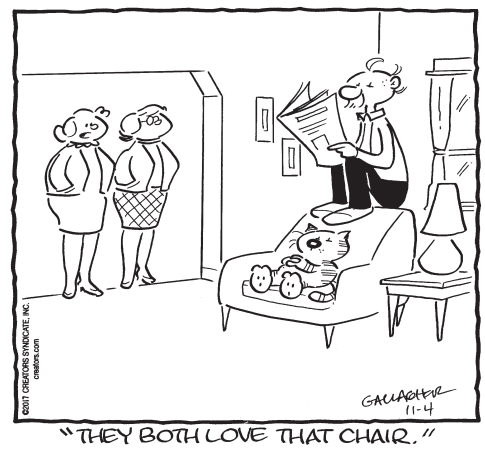

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
Synchronicity happens so often in your life that it's almost de rigueur by now. Nonetheless, it will be a delight to learn the one you think of is also thinking of you. You could even show up randomly at the same place.

Mercury's Hangover Cure

The day after the exciting full moon can feel like a hangover, though a Mercury change will be a revitalizing cosmic tonic. Initially, Mercury boinging through energetic Sagittarius may feel like a pogo stick for the emotions. What goes up must come down — but it's accompanied by sound and movement so silly it can only be considered play.
