

Olympic voters weigh Trump effect on Los Angeles 2024 bid

BY GRAHAM DUNBAR
AP Sports Writer

Donald Trump's election as U.S. president has the potential to influence Los Angeles' chances of hosting the 2024 Olympics. For better or worse.

Some International Olympic Committee members — who will choose among Los Angeles, Paris and Budapest, Hungary, in a vote next September — cited possible pros and cons on Wednesday of Trump's role in the American bid.

As a polarizing presidential candidate, Trump's words on Muslims,

Mexicans and other issues could have offended some of the 98 IOC members from around the world who will select the host city.

"It may have," the IOC's longest-serving member, Dick Pound of Canada, told The Associated Press.

At the same time, Pound did not rule out the possibility that Trump could help win votes if he travels to Lima, Peru, in September to pitch the Los Angeles bid in person to the IOC ahead of the secret ballot.

"If he is there, and evidently he

Election complaints increase this year

BY MATTHEW HALL

The contentious election didn't leave Santa Monica unscathed and reports of potential wrongdoing were rife on Election Day.

Reports are circulating on social media that a man was attacked in Santa Monica by Trump supporters, however the story has not been verified. The Santa Monica Police Department said it did not respond to an assault call Tuesday night/Wednesday morning and there's no record of an assault within the department at this time.

"The Santa Monica Police Department and the City of Santa Monica have not received any information indicating this crime occurred in the City of Santa Monica," said Lieutenant Saul Rodriguez.

"We encourage the alleged victim to come forward and work with us if a crime did in fact take place. A check of local hospitals revealed there was no victim of any such incident admitted or treated as well."

Officers did issue citations to two individuals outside City Hall. According to Lieutenant Rodriguez, two individuals were campaigning/protesting outside City Hall at about 3:55 p.m. The two were on opposite sides of Measure LV and got into a heated argument over their proximity to the entrance of the polling place.

The law prohibits campaign activities within 100 feet of the polling place and at one point, County officials were called to measure the precise distance from the entry way.

During the course of the afternoon, the argument between the two subjects escalated and Rodriguez said they both pushed each other.

"Neither subject was injured, but both demand prosecution of the other," he said. "The suspects

SMC
SMC Corsair wins 10 National Pinnacle Awards

The Santa Monica College (SMC) student newspaper The Corsair won 10 national Pinnacle Awards—including first place for Best College Media Outlet of the Year among two year-colleges—in a nationwide contest organized by the College Media Association (CMA). The awards were announced during the national CMA convention in Atlanta on Oct. 29. SMC students competed against their counterparts from more than 340 colleges and universities, including UCLA, Penn State University, and Loyola Marymount University.

SMC journalism students September Dawn Bottoms and Christian Monterrosa won first place for Best Viral Video for their coverage of a Trump rally in Costa Mesa, CA. Monterrosa and Bottoms spent more than 14 hours covering the rally and the ensuing chaos. The YouTube video (available on “TheCorsairOnline” channel) now has more than 220,000 views.

“We went into it just wanting to cover every angle of the event—and we didn’t expect our coverage to have all this success.” said Monterrosa. While Bottoms filmed near a line of police on horseback, a police horse nudged her back. She said she was focused on documenting the chaos to inform her audience. “This is what I want to do with my life, 100 percent,” said Bottoms, speaking of journalism, “I don’t want to do anything else.”

The Corsair also won second place in the Two-Year Website of the Year category for the online newsroom (www.thecorsaironline.com). In addition, Jose Lopez won second place in the Best Breaking News Photo category for his photo of a police officer jabbing a Trump protester with a baton in San Diego; Jacob Hirsohn won second place in the Best Column category for his column on how the music industry learned to embrace streaming.

Hirsohn, now editor-in-chief, credits Nik Lucaj—who was the Corsair’s editor-in-chief during the Spring 2017 semester—with pushing student journalists to produce top-quality content. “We all dedicated as much of our time and energy as we could,” said Hirsohn. “We really want to publish stories that matter.”

A COMPLETE LIST OF SMC CORSAIR AWARDS AT THE 2016 CMA NATIONAL CONFERENCE FOLLOWS:

Unfrozen Music: Architects in Concert

On Nov. 12, the eighth annual Unfrozen Music concert, performed by a mix of LA area architects, takes the stage at the Santa Monica Public Library from 7:30 - 9:30 p.m. The free show is open to the public as a reverie of music and architecture. The program features five acts ranging from classical piano to indie rock, giving these multifaceted architects an opportunity to showcase their creativity in an arena unlike their day jobs.

The concert’s namesake is a play on a quote from nineteenth century German theorist, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, who stated, “I consider architecture frozen music.”

Unfrozen Music will be held on Nov. 12 at the Santa Monica Public Library (Main Library), 601 Santa Monica Blvd. from 7:30 - 9:30 p.m. Open seating for 140 guests. Admission is free.

Laughing Matters

Jack Neworth

Send comments to editor@smdp.com

Crying Matters?

LAST WEEK, I JOKED THAT IF DONALD TRUMP became President I would change my column banner from "Laughing Matters," to "Crying Matters." Apparently, the joke is on me.

It's election night 2 a.m., and just about everything I value politically has been thoroughly rejected. All the progress we made in this country during the last eight years will likely be reversed. Sigh.

I try to remind myself that, as my late mother used to say, "It's not the end of the world." With Trump, however, it just might be. Just consider Trump's thin-skinned volatility and imminent proximity to the nuclear button. Yikes!

No, I haven't been drinking, though I very much wish I had. Throughout this nightmarish evening, I phoned progressive-minded friends to commiserate. Fellow columnist Charles Andrews was down but seemingly not as low as I am.

Charles attributes his even keel, compared to me that is, to the two stiff drinks he was compelled to consume watching the election results. I would ride my bike over the few blocks over to Charles and Diane's condo' for a couple of shots but it's 2 a.m. And he was going to sleep. Lucky dog.

So how did this catastrophe happen and what can we do about it now? Hopefully, by next week I'll have some suggestions, or at least some better jokes.

Instead of phoning, I emailed Dr. Justin Frank, a prominent and wise psychotherapist in Washington D.C. I'm a big fan of Dr. Frank's books, "Bush on the Couch," and "Obama on the Couch." In fact, our friendship began with my suggesting he write "Trump on the Couch." (Or perhaps "Trump on the Tanning Bed?")

Given all his expertise and experience, surely Dr. Frank would have some comforting words of wisdom. And he very well might have but it's 5 a.m. there now.

Actually, earlier in the evening Dr. Frank sent me an email, "Am very worried for the nation." (The same could be said for more than half the country.)

I suppose I should try to look on the bright side. I just wish I could find one. (If/when I do you'll be the first to know or feel free to email me with your yucks about the upcoming Trump presidency, should you have any.)

When the outcome of the election became painfully clear, I went to the gym to work out. Frankly, I'm not fond of working out. To be more specific, I'm fond of it, only after I've worked out.

To pass the time while exercising, I watch

TV but all the stations had election results. Fortunately, the Lakers were on. Unfortunately, they lost. (The Lakers, at four wins and three losses, were above .500 for the first time in three years but no longer!)

It's difficult to accept or understand that the country has suddenly swung so far to the right. The future seemed so promising for diversity and equal rights, not to mention a female president. Now it will be at least 100 years after women's suffrage before we elect our first female president, if then. As of 2014, sixty-three countries have had a female head of state. We just aren't one of them. It's embarrassing.

While I'm down in the dumps, a lot of groups are ecstatic. Misogynists, bothered by women in power, clearly must be pleased. And narcissists must feel proud a kindred spirit will occupy the White House. And then there's the bigots.

This election marks the first time in my life that the KKK and the Nazis Party have openly celebrated a presidential victory. While it's "Mourning in America" for me, it's truly "Morning in America" for white supremacists. Those "Make America Great Again" hats, that were made in China by the way, judging from all the bigots celebrating might be more accurately worded, "Make America Hate Again."

Vladimir Putin must be pleased with his new "puppet." Given all the Russian hacking, historians note that this is the first election since the 1790's where a foreign country has interfered in the outcome.

Actually, Nationalists authoritarians of all stripes throughout Europe must be whooping it up. Call me wacky, but I see a similarity in these trends with the rise of fascism in the 1930's. (Is that all?)

Now that the election is over, will Trump, as promised, reveal his tax returns after the audit? Assuming there was an audit. Will he show at his Trump University "fraud and elder abuse" trial on November 28 presided over by the Indiana-born Judge Curiel whom he called "a Mexican?" And will Trump appear at his civil court hearing December 16 where he's accused of having raped a 13-year-old girl? (For all these questions, the answer is: don't hold your breath.)

Back to the election, Trump suggested in advance it could be "rigged." Given it appears Hillary won the popular vote, maybe it was? Yes, it's been a long night. Worse, I have a sinking feeling it's going a very long 4 years.

Trump election gives momentum to unlikely secession idea

BY DON THOMPSON

Associated Press

Donald Trump's election as president is giving a big social-media boost to an unlikely effort in the nation's most populous state: a plan to vote on seceding from the union.

The Yes California Independence Campaign hopes to put a question on the November 2018 ballot that would authorize a statewide independence vote for the spring of 2019.

The effort drew little attention until Tuesday's election, which also kept Trump's fellow Republicans in charge of Congress and raised the possibility of a conservative shift on the U.S. Supreme Court. A look at what's happening:

THE TRUMP VICTORY

Campaign President Louis J. Marinelli said the election results offer further proof that California is more progressive than the nation as a whole. Voters endorsed ballot measures that included recreational marijuana and increased taxes on the rich. Many Californians were offended by Trump's statements on immigration and other issues.

"People are starting to come to the realization ... 'Wait a minute, this is not the type of country we want to live in,'" said Marinelli, who lost a primary bid for the state Assembly this year.

THE REACTION

As election results rolled in, the group's Facebook contacts grew from about 11,000 to about 15,000, and its email account received about 3,000 messages. Marinelli said he couldn't keep up with the Twitter messages.

The next day, the group set up a tent outside the state Capitol in Sacramento. About a dozen supporters wearing YesCalifornia.org T-shirts talked to passers-by.

"It would frankly be better off if we were our own nation," said the group's vice president, Marcus Ruiz Evans, calling Trump's election further evidence that America is a sinking ship. "Our ship can sail on its own."

Skeptics, like Steve Angel of Sacramento, criticized what he said is an effort to "balkanize" the United States by breaking it into pieces.

To the north, in Portland, Oregon, two residents filed a separate petition for a 2018 ballot initiative for Oregon to secede.

THE PREVIOUS ATTEMPTS

Any effort to get an issue on the ballot requires the gathering of hundreds of thousands of signatures.

Marinelli tried unsuccessfully to put several initiatives on the ballot this year, including a proposal to declare California a separate nation, to rename the governor the "president" of California and to fly the California state flag atop the United States flag. Those signature-gathering efforts fizzled.

Repeated attempts to create a 51st state in Northern California, named the State of Jefferson, have also failed. That movement generally draws more conservative supporters who are dissatisfied with California's dominance by Democrats.

The Yes California Independence Campaign tries to appeal across the political spectrum, but holds a generally progressive ideology, Marinelli said.

BREXIT = CALEXIT?

Marinelli equates the movement's long-shot chances to the recent decision by the United Kingdom to leave the European Union.

"People said Brexit wouldn't happen, and then they said Trump wouldn't happen ... Things that you don't expect to happen are happening, so why not this?" he said.

Supporters of the initiative note that California, with its 39 million residents, is often compared to other nations, not other states. Data from the World Bank show its economy was equivalent to the sixth-largest in the world last year.

THE HISTORY

Threats to secede from the United States have been a part of American politics almost since the nation was founded. The most serious attempt came before and during the Civil War, when 11 Southern states left to form the Confederacy. The movement ended with the defeat of Confederate forces.

Chapman University law professor Ronald Rotunda said the Constitution does not provide for state secession, so the only way to do it legally would be to change the Constitution — an act that requires the approval of Congress and 38 states.

"It's not going to happen. You're not going to find 38 states," he said. "The theory of our Constitution for over 200 years is we sink or swim together."

#happyclownsighting

YESTERDAY I MET A CLOWN. HER name is Whirlie. At this point, you've probably heard about the "scary clown sightings" sweeping across North America since August of this year. The whole thing allegedly started in South Carolina, where a couple people dressed in creepy clown costumes tried to lure a terrified child into the woods. That seemed like a super idea to some other people, then a few others, and next thing you know, the country's in a panic over clowns. Clown costumes have been banned in schools, hundreds of people have joined mass clown hunts, and several "clowns" have been arrested on charges of terrorist threat. It's enough to make you put away your clown shoes and hang up your red nose for good.

Unless you're Whirlie the Clown. When this whole thing started, and public clown approval ratings plummeted, Whirlie was confronted by the reality that people suddenly hated the thing she did for a living. And I'm not talking about a casual animal balloon making side hobby. This woman went to a prestigious arts university, has preformed for rock stars and presidents. This is her life's work. A lot of professional clowns have retreated, afraid of being misunderstood or confronted by the hysterical masses. Whirlie didn't know what to do. Then she had a moment of clarity. Between all the chaos and the fear and the arrests, things were looking bad. Well, what do people need when they're feeling down? A clown, of course!

So while her colleagues were complaining about the injustice of the situation and calling it quits, Whirlie amplified her efforts. She put on her costume and signature pink wig, got a big balloon (also pink, in the shape of a heart, naturally) wrote #happy-clownsighting on it, and took to the streets. She went to a Dodgers game, did a breast cancer awareness drive— she even voted in costume. It took a lot of guts, and as she sat in the back of an Uber on her way to a polling place on Tuesday, she felt a little scared. But as Whirlie the Clown likes to say, "If something scares you — laugh at it!"

And guess what? People loved her. They gave her hugs and took pictures. She got media coverage and had news stories written about her commitment. It actually brought unexpected attention to the importance of voting. When it seemed like being herself was the last thing she should do, choosing to stand for what she believed in— regardless of public approval ratings— turned out to be the most extraordinary opportunity. How often are we confronted by the circumstances around us, as though everything is working against our success? It's no joke, we live in strange, often scary times. But this morning I caught myself thinking, What Would Whirlie Do?

By the way, when I met Whirlie, she wasn't wearing her clown costume. I asked her what her "real" name was. She happily told me to just call her Whirlie. It's not the costume that makes her a clown. What makes her a clown is that she stands for the goodness and happiness that exists inside all people.

Happy clown sightings to you all.

Cheers

signed private person's arrest form and were issued citations for 242 PC - Battery."

Additional complaints were filed about a variety of issues throughout the city including logistical, organizational or technological problems.

City Clerk Denise Anderson-Warren said long lines frustrated voters at some locations and at locations where two precincts shared a polling place, some voters were confused about where to line up.

Some of the machines used to read completed ballots were malfunctioning by mid-day and in those cases, poll workers asked voters to carefully review their ballots before locking them in ballot boxes under the reader machine. Some voters filed complaints stating their ballots were not secured quickly or securely enough.

Poll workers are supposed to maintain a roster of voters assigned to the polling place and the roster should be updated throughout the day to reflect who has voted. The roster is a public document available to the public and complaints were filed alleging it wasn't being displayed appropriately, wasn't being updated fast enough or contained incorrect information about vote by mail status.

Anderson-Warren said updating the roster in absolute real time was impossible given the line of residents waiting to vote and that workers did update voter status when they weren't answering questions from voters.

Aside from the incident at City Hall, she

to be counted

About 8,812 Santa Monica ballots are still waiting to be counted as of Thursday. According to election officials, 3,979 Vote by Mail ballots and 4,833 Provisional ballots are still in the process. That number could increase Friday as a new law allows mail ballots to count if they are postmarked by election day (Nov. 8) and received by county officials within three days. The county has 29 days to complete its canvass and certify the vote. There are technically enough votes remaining to alter the outcomes of local races, however, the uncounted votes would have to be nearly unanimous to upend any of the current results.

said several additional complaints were filed over electioneering.

"There were other complaints around town that people were within the 100 feet, and when investigated that turned out either not to be true, or we asked those parties to move beyond the limit," she said.

She said the complaints were all similar to the kind received every year but the overall volume increased this time.

is someone who feeds off his audience, there is no reason to think he can't work this audience as well," Pound said.

South African IOC member Sam Ramsamy, whose country has been described by Trump as a "very dangerous mess," dismissed any lingering effect with 10 months left before the 2024 Olympic vote.

"He has been rude to everybody," Ramsamy told the AP. "I don't believe it will affect bidding in any way."

In a statement Wednesday congratulating Trump, the Los Angeles 2024 bid committee said the Olympics can "transcend politics and can help unify our diverse communities and our world."

Citing 88 percent support for its bid, the committee pointed to strong bipartisan support at all levels of government.

"We look forward to working closely with President-elect Trump and his administration across the federal government" to deliver a successful Olympics, the statement said.

IOC President Thomas Bach offered a brief statement to the AP on Trump's election.

"Let me congratulate President-elect Trump on his victory and wish him all the best for his term in office for all the people of the United States and of the world," he said.

Swiss IOC member Rene Fasel suggested that if Trump spoke offensively during the presidential race, it was a tactic to woo voters that worked.

"You saw his speech today and it's already a different man," Fasel said, citing Trump's first public address as president-elect which sought to be more inclusive.

While Trump has little track record with the Olympic movement, his opponent, Hillary Clinton, was a supporter of New York's failed bid for the 2012 Games and has attended several Olympics. She was First Lady when the U.S. last hosted the Summer Games — in Atlanta in 1996.

President Barack Obama went to the IOC vote in Copenhagen in 2009 to support Chicago's bid for the 2016 Olympics. Chicago was still eliminated in the first round, with the games awarded to Rio de Janeiro.

Clinton's presidential campaign has some close ties to Los Angeles bid leaders. Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti is a Democrat who spoke at the Democratic Party convention in July which formally nominated Clinton. Bid chairman Casey Wasserman was also a prominent Clinton backer.

Garcetti acknowledged in an AP interview in August during the Rio de Janeiro Olympics that some IOC members could be turned off by a Trump victory.

"I think for some of the IOC members they would say, 'Wait a second, can we go to a country like that, where we've heard things that we take offense to?'" Garcetti said then.

Garcetti remains more important to the bid than Trump, according to American IOC executive board member Anita DeFrantz.

"It's the city that hosts the games, and it's the mayor that signs the documents. It is not the president," DeFrantz told The AP in Lausanne on Wednesday.

Pound believes Los Angeles leaders will urgently want to meet with Trump to see if he is "an enthusiastic supporter of this venture or not."

"Your most important campaign is at home," Pound said, suggesting that IOC voters and Olympic sports leaders can be swayed closer to election day. "The roadshow only happens in the last few months."

Before that final stretch of campaigning, the city's biggest rival — Paris — could have its own domestic politics to explain.

In May, France elects a president in a contest many predict will include far-right candidate Marine Le Pen among the two candidates in a second round of voting.

FILM REVIEW
ARRIVAL

Rated
116 Minutes
Released November 11th

Before you sit down in the theatre to watch Arrival, loosen the restraints on your brain. Free your tendency to observe new concepts from a preconceived order of your world. This is a gorgeous film about communication that transcends language. It is a great piece of film literature and a philosophical commentary on our time that we need to comprehend on a deep level if we are to survive as a species. In fact to appreciate this film you must surrender your mind to thinking outside of the constrictions of your native language.

The movie is based on a short story called “The Story of Your Life”, by Ted Chiang, who is a technical writer in his “day job”. Chiang’s work is a favorite of science fiction aficionados. In this story Chiang was able to apply both scientific and creative philosophical thinking. The narrative is an elegantly simple weaving together of two stories in different time planes, which seem to be disparate in the beginning, yet impact on one another profoundly, similar to the way in which seemingly unconnected events in your own life can affect each other.

Canadian director Denis Villeneuve had planned to study science at the Universite de Quebec a Montreal. He switched to filmmaking early on – however his tendency towards scientific and philosophical thought pervades this film. He has created a beautiful balance here in presenting the plot in a simple way, letting the concepts surrounding the dilemma that is established take center stage. As proven in his films Sicario and Prisoner, Villeneuve has a surprising ability to inhabit a female central character with a sense of wonder, fear and awe when confronted with a situation outside of mortal control. Here Amy Adams embodies that character with perfection. Forest Whitaker, Jeremy Renner, Michael Stuhlbarg, Mark O’Brien and Tzi Ma create understated and real characters. Some key players in this film are never or rarely seen. However their presence is pervasive. As you watch, your sense of time and love will be reorganized.

Villeneuve has brought together several artists who have worked with him in the past. This seems to be a great advantage in this movie, as trust has already been built. The simplicity that is achieved in the sound track by Johann Johannsson, cinematography by Bradford Young and editing by Joe Walker builds a dramatic backdrop that showcases our primal fears as human beings without distracting from the concepts that are presented.

There has been a vast amount of thought, analysis and conjecture about the role of language in shaping the way we perceive our lives. Do humans shape their ideas of reality differently because of the nature of their language? Was each language family born separately of universal and instinctive sounds and visual notes? Did different language families develop separately, each with their own unique characteristics of sound and patterns? Did these patterns spread to other languages of the same family? How deeply do humans communicate with animals? The revelations at the end of the movie force you to consider some huge issues. In Arrival you will see that the medium of film itself is in fact a most powerful and universal language.

KATHRYN WHITNEY BOOLE has spent most of her life in the entertainment industry, which is the backdrop for remarkable adventures with extraordinary people. TODAY’S BIRTHDAY (Nov. 11)

Blessings rain down like cosmic confetti. You’ve an inkling this is because of the help you’ve given in the past, and you’ll accept the gifts with grace, though you’ll keep paying them forward. Family expands in December, and you’ll be a role model for those younger. Sweetness and excitement pepper your spring. Pisces and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 13, 9, 27, 41 and 49.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

Mystical experience cannot be communicated in words, but the poetry that swirls around it in the attempt can be most effective in changing the state of both the listener and the speaker.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

Helping your friends is the most natural thing in the world for you, but mushy stuff makes you uncomfortable. The occasion calls for you to express your love. Speak from the heart and you’ll do fine.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)

Some believe the mind exists in the body, while others say it’s animating the body from somewhere up in the cloud. Either way, as a being with mental capacities, the way you take care of your body changes your mind and vice versa.

CANCER (June 22-July 22)

A clearing process will begin as you try to make room for a newly kindling passion. The elements of your life that do not serve an obvious function will be up for scrutiny.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

To truly understand the range of your ability, sometimes it takes a crisis. Not today. You’ll push yourself to find your personal best just for the sheer fun of it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

You’ll be asked about your work. To the wise and perceptive ear, your answers will be very telling. You might just surprise yourself with your own answers and learn something you didn’t know before.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)

To be impressive, all you have to do is relax and act on your natural impulses. In other words, be you. When you’re doing what’s genuinely fun for you, you’ll bring energy and excitement to others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21)

The more time you spend doing the thing you really love, the less appealing your former routine becomes. Something about this has got to give in the near future. Are you planning for that now?

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

When you take your business to the next level, your personal life improves, and when you take your personal life to the next level, your business improves. As long as you’re aiming upward with something, you’re golden.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

Over time, people will establish a pattern of behavior with you. Once you lock into that pattern, blame and credit are kind of a moot point. If they disappoint, that’s on you. If they excel, you expect that, too.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

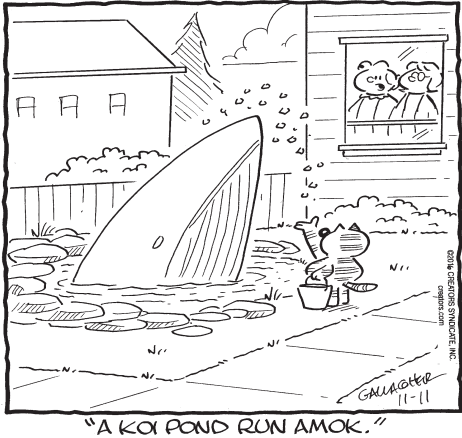

Your intuition might defy logic, but it will be right. That said, it’s important to differentiate between intuition, which is proactive, mostly calm and generally peaceful, and paranoia, which is fearful, jittery and sickening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

You don’t need expensive tools to be creative, but the right tool certainly has the power to inspire you. Consider borrowing, renting or trading in order to try things out before making a big investment.
