OUTREACH: Team Marine, a youth organization from Santa Monica High School has been working to fight ocean pollution.

In the 2017-2018 school year, a student-run club on the campus of Santa Monica High School conducted a large-scale waste audit of Samohi's campus and found that a significant portion of the school's waste could be composted or recycled.

The following school year, the group used the data they collected to inform their peers about the importance of sorting their waste properly, the environmental issues associated with plastic pollution and offer ways for Samohi students to decrease their own personal plastic consumption and carbon footprint.

The work of Team Marine culminated this year with an 11-foot-tall art installation that helped the group secure first place in the international Bow Seat Marine Debris Creative Advocacy Competition and a prize of $5,000.

Comprised of nearly a dozen Samohi students, the local organization said Thursday their work is far from finished.

State could demand 9,000 new, local housing units

Santa Monica and other Southern California cities with abundant jobs and transit may be required to build more housing than ever before.

The Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG) voted Thursday to recommend that the state require Los Angeles and Orange counties to facilitate the construction of more than 1 million new homes, departing from an earlier plan that would have allocated more housing to Riverside and San

Just a few days remain until Santa Monica High School departs for Riverside to compete in the preliminary round of the 2019 CIF Southern Section Boys and Girls Cross Country Championships, and coach Tania Fischer can barely contain her excitement.

Those who frequent the area of Samohi will recognize the navy blue shirts that runners often sport while they enjoy their after-school run around the school's structures and Olympic Avenue.

At the beginning of the season, the team focused on conditioning in an attempt to increase runners'

Ending Hunger & Homelessness in Our Community

Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week originated at Villanova University in 1975 and is co-sponsored by the National Coalition for the Homeless and the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness. This year, Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week is November 16-24, 2019.

In Los Angeles County, an estimated 2 million people live with food insecurity and nearly 60,000 people are experiencing homelessness. In the last year, The People Concern provided over 360,000 meals to interim housing program participants throughout L.A. County. The work of our Food Services Department is rooted in the belief that everyone should have the option to eat healthy food. A balanced diet has lasting benefits on participants' lives and can decrease anxiety, improve physical health and contribute to feelings of happiness. "Food is medicine — we've observed people's health improve as a result of the meals we provide. Being able to put a smile on someone's face because they are enjoying their meal and not worrying about when they'll be eating next is an incredible feeling," notes Chris, Director of Food Services.

We understand that food security and nutrition are important factors for participants' transitions from the streets to permanent housing — but that housing, first, is essential for finding stability. The solution to homelessness is housing paired with integrated supportive services tailored to the individual's unique needs; one's ability to improve their health and wellness is further enhanced once in supportive housing. Related to food access, supportive housing staff help residents identify nearby grocery stores, assist with shopping on a budget and connect residents with wellness opportunities, including nutrition classes.

Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week now brings together nearly 700 communities nation-wide to illuminate the effects of poverty and inequality in our society and to mobilize communities to take action to end hunger and homelessness across the U.S. We are proud of the work that our partners, volunteers, supporters and other community organizations are leading — it really takes all of us - to ensure that everyone in our community is housed, healthy and safe.

Let's End Hunger and Homelessness, Together!

RECOGNITION

Shakhidzhanov, Karina Wisen, Ansel Garcia-Langley, Isabel Homberg Reissmeier and Catherine Todd — Daniel Thurmond said, "We really wanted to do this project because we recognized that plastic bottles were the most prominent sample of trash in the waste audits that we conducted at beaches and (school)."

The team presented their audit discoveries to the Santa Monica Malibu Unified School District Board of Education in an effort to lobby district leaders to pass a sustainability plan that frames sustainability as a priority for the district.

The plan was successfully passed in the spring of 2019, and gave Team Marine the confidence to engage with the greater community.

Their installation, "Giant Plastic Bottle sculpture," would make its debut at the Third Street Promenade shortly after on June 16, when hundreds of residents and tourists stopped by to discuss Team Marine's work and the issues associated with single-use plastics and solutions. The event also allowed an opportunity for individuals to confess their "plastic sins," and take a plastic-free oath.

The interactive structure was composed of more than 600 plastic bottles that were mainly sourced from a single classroom on the local high-school campus, according to Bahadur.

"We really wanted to do this project because we recognized in our prior studies that the accumulation of plastic bottles, specifically, were the most prominent samples of trash in waste audits that we conducted at beaches," Thurmond said. "So, we decided to begin advocating to start decreasing the amount of plastic bottles that end up in our oceans."

Shakhidzhanov, a senior at Samohi, added the group's efforts aligned with two legislative measures that sought to regulate single-use packaging and cigarette filters.

"We wanted to be as creative as possible to catch people's eyes," said Homberg Reissmeier, "because sometimes people will ignore getting educated, but if they see it… then everyone is going to be shocked and curious and want to learn something interactive and engaging."

"So instead of just seeing data on a page, people can actually put the amount of plastic we use into perspective," Wisen said, "which hopefully helps them realize how much plastic we're actually consuming as a society."

If the size of the installation and factoids from Team Marine weren't enough to convince visitors of the danger, visitors had the opportunity to see footage of the local Pico Kenter storm drain during the first flush.

"There was footage from the storm drain so you could see all of the plastic being washed into the ocean," Shakhidzhanov said, while group members described the faces of children who stopped in to see the installation.

"Once people came over and got immersed in the display and information, they really started catching on to the cause," Thurmond said.

"It certainly made the dumpster-diving we did to get the bottles worth it," according to Garcia-Langley.

The team added they were disappointed to learn their efforts weren't enough to impact the passage of Assembly Bill 1080 and Senate Bill 424, which both failed to receive Gov. Gavin Newsom's signature this legislative session; however, the team said they will continue to lobbying their cause using the prize money from the Bow Seat competition.

Samohi's Team Marine said they intend to donate 14% of their prize to their various non-profit partners, which include, among others, the Surfrider Foundation, Heal the Bay and Climate Action Santa Monica.

"We also hope that other kids and youth are inspired bay what we do and are inspired to take their own actions," Shakhidzhanov said. They may feel that what they're doing might seem small, but they're making a change and that's what we need."

Bernardino counties. If the state approves SCAG's recommendation, Santa Monica would be asked to build 9,000 new units between 2021 and 2029, almost double what it would have been required to accommodate under the previous plan.

The state has required cities and counties to construct various amounts of new housing in eight-year cycles for the past 50 years. But many jurisdictions have skirted those requirements, resulting in a statewide housing shortage — particularly in job-rich areas.

SCAG spokesperson Jeff Liu said the association's board changed the methodology it uses to create its Regional Housing Needs Assessment (RHNA) to reflect that Los Angeles and Orange counties have more jobs and transit than other counties in the region.

"Many people endure hours-long commutes because they can't afford to live near their jobs. Our leadership said we can't continue to plan that way because it results in more congestion and more carbon emissions," Liu said. "There has to be a better balance of housing near job centers and transit, and all cities and counties need to do their part in addressing our affordability crisis and our housing shortage."

Santa Monica City Manager Rick Cole said the new RHNA methodology reflects a growing consensus that Southern California's signature sprawl creates adverse environmental, social and economic impacts.

"It represents a change that has long been coming in California from sprawl development toward a more compact, urban development where people live closer to their jobs," he said.

But Cole questioned whether Southern California will be able to construct the 1.3 million units required under RHNA, given that the state will not punish cities and counties if they fail to build enough housing. Rather, it will financially penalize jurisdictions that do not alter their zoning to accommodate more housing.

Cole added that communities could initiate litigation or hold referendums to halt upzoning and development. However, if a recession hits and puts the brakes on Southern California's development boom, they might not have to.

"The magnitude of change both here in Santa Monica and throughout the region is greater than the ability of this law and the housing industry to produce in the next 10 years," he said. "But there's no question that this sets us on a path that over the next 20 years will shift much more housing development closer to jobs than would have been the case otherwise."

The Santa Monica City Council will hold a study session on the RHNA allocation Dec. 10, Cole said.

Santa Monica has built more housing in recent years than other expensive cities such as Beverly Hills and Culver City, which would also be required to zone for thousands of units under the RHNA. The Westside as a whole would have to zone for 19,500 units between 2021 and 2029.

But Santa Monica has still only constructed 1,700 units in the past eight fiscal years, according to a recent city report. Accommodating 9,000 new units would require zoning changes that would likely be subject to significant opposition in a city where 45% of voters supported a 2016 measure that would have put any new development taller than two stories to a citywide vote.

The Santa Monica Planning Commission discussed where the city could put new housing last month, when city staff believed SCAG would require the city to build 4,800 units.

Commissioner Shawn Landres said he thinks Santa Monica will not only have to permit taller buildings along its commercial boulevards and near transit, but also densify its residential neighborhoods by allowing duplexes and triplexes on single-family lots and encouraging homeowners to build accessory dwelling units (ADUs) in their backyards.

He also said the city must work strategically to ensure that at least 30% of the new units will be deed-restricted to low- and middle-income households, as required by Proposition R, a local law that voters approved in 1990.

"We need to build housing for our teachers, firefighters and police officers, for our 20-somethings and people starting families and for our seniors," Landres said.

Commissioner Mario Fonda-Bonardi, a longtime advocate for slow growth, said he thinks that dramatically increasing the supply of housing will only exacerbate the city's affordability crisis.

"The laws of supply and demand are suspended in Santa Monica," he said. "You increase the supply but the cost doesn't go down, because there are enough wealthy people who can move in and pay the higher rents. Developers pump out lots of units for wealthy tenants and that drives up housing costs for everyone else."

The 9,000-unit RHNA allocation will only deepen divisions in a city where pro- and anti-development groups are "at each others throats day and night," Fonda-Bonardi added.

Landres said he thinks Santa Monicans will be able to find common ground on development if they accept that the city has to work within regional and state rules.

"I'm coming into it cautiously optimistic that if any community can figure it out, we can. We've produced for more affordable housing per capita than our neighbors," he said. "It's not going be perfect or easy and there are going to be long nights with lots of very tense discussions, but I think we have to go into it with the understanding that we're going to have to zone for this housing and produce it."

Killing the Earth

DEAR EARTHTALK: I'VE HEARD OF SUICIDE, HOMICIDE AND GENOCIDE, BUT WHAT IS ECOCIDE? – LESLIE P., CARRBORO, NC

While the concept of "ecocide" may be new to many of us, the practice of willfully destroying large areas of the natural environment has been around about as long as humans — although we got a lot better at it using the machinery we developed during the industrial revolution. Bioethicist Arthur Galston first started batting the term around in the 1970s to describe intentional widespread ecological destruction, especially as it pertained to ruining inhabited environments so people couldn't live there anymore.

One classic example of ecocide in modern history is American troops' widespread application of the toxic herbicide Agent Orange across Southeast Asia during the Vietnam War in the late 1960s. It was used to clear some 12,000 square miles of tropical rainforest to enable flushing out the "enemy," despite the toll on civilians and the environment. There are also plenty of present-day examples, including: mountaintop removal coal mining in Appalachia whereby miners blast through hundreds of feet of earth to access thin seams of coal; the "fracking" for oil and gas across wide swaths of Canada's Alberta tar sands that has so far destroyed thousands of square miles of boreal forest and peat bogs while releasing hundreds of tons of greenhouse gases into the atmosphere; the dumping of crude oil and toxic waste into Ecuador's Amazon by oil companies too focused on profits to do the right thing about waste removal; and deep sea mining whereby the use of heavy machinery to ply veins of precious metals from the seabed is ruining marine ecosystems we still know little about.

In recent years Scottish activist Polly Higgins championed the cause of getting the International Criminal Court (ICC), an independent judicial body created by the United Nations in 1998, to recognize ecocide as a "crime against peace" in the eyes of international law. Her work focused on getting the ICC to add ecocide as the fifth prosecutable "core international crime" (along with genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and crimes of aggression). Sadly, Higgins succumbed to cancer at age 50 in April 2019, but her efforts to institutionalize ecocide as a major international crime lives on with other activists.

"Destroying the planet is currently permitted," says Jojo Mehta of the non-profit Stop Ecocide. "That is how ecosystems are being destroyed every day by dangerous industrial activity, exacerbating the climate emergency and destroying our forests, our soils, our rivers and the lands that we love."

Mehta points out that any of the 122 member states of the ICC can formally suggest adding ecocide as a major international crime. Stop Ecocide is working with small Pacific island nations which are already "feeling the sharp end of climate change" to urge ICC to finally adopt ecocide as another crime it prosecutes.

"Serious harm to the Earth is preventable," urges Mehta. "When government ministers can no longer issue permits for it, when insurers can no longer underwrite it, when investors can no longer back it, when CEOs can be held criminally responsible for it, the harm will stop."

UCLA Health partners with Kareem Abdul-Jabbar on health and wellness initiative

UCLA legend and NBA Hall of Famer Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is teaming up with UCLA Health for a wide variety of new health and wellness initiatives designed to improve health and prevent disease.

The partnership will be announced at the 2019 Leukemia and Lymphoma Society's Los Angeles Light the Night Walk, an event for which UCLA Health is the presenting sponsor.

The Los Angeles Laker superstar and UCLA Bruin basketball player is a survivor of chronic myeloid leukemia, or CML, which is a form of blood cancer. To honor his survivorship, Abdul-Jabbar has served as an ambassador and UCLA Health fundraising team captain at the annual event, which raises research funds to find cures for blood cancers.

While he will continue as team captain at this year's event – to be held on Nov. 9, beginning at 5:30 p.m. at Centerpiece Park at Century Plaza Tower in Century City – Abdul-Jabbar said he is looking forward to expanding his affiliation with UCLA Heath.

"UCLA has been an important part of my life for many decades,'" Abdul-Jabbar said. "The UCLA community has supported me throughout my college basketball career, my long professional life with the L.A. Lakers, and in the past several years, as my health care team. Their commitment to me both as a player and a patient has had an immeasurable impact on my life. This new partnership will provide many opportunities to promote health and wellness – and allow me give back to the community."

The partnership will include several initiatives, including a UCLA Colon Cancer Awareness Month promotion in March, a variety of community health events and patient education communications to promote healthy living. There will also be a focus on cardiovascular health, as Abdul-Jabbar was diagnosed with atherosclerosis and had quadruple coronary bypass surgery in 2015.

"We are honored that Kareem is expanding his affiliation with UCLA Health," said Johnese Spisso, president of UCLA Health and CEO of the UCLA Hospital System. "He's a world-class leader joining forces with a world-class medical institution. Together, we will make a real difference in promoting health, preventing disease, and in inspiring healthier lifestyles."

As a presenting sponsor of this year's Leukemia and Lymphoma Society Light the Night event, dozens of UCLA Health teams will walk alongside Abdul-Jabbar. Proceeds raised by UCLA teams and other participants will fund cancer research and support services for patients and their families.

UCLA Health comprises four hospitals on two campuses – Ronald Reagan UCLA Medical Center, UCLA Mattel Children's Hospital and the Resnick Neuropsychiatric Hospital on the university's main campus in the Westwood area of Los Angeles, and UCLA Medical Center, Santa Monica – and more than 180 medical practices throughout Southern California. It also includes the David Geffen School of Medicine at UCLA.

PRELIMINARIES

mileage, stamina and endurance, but coach Fischer said the team is now fine-tuning the foundation they've built throughout the course of their season.

"As you know there's been fires and smoke," which have prompted Red Flag days and forced the cancellation of many different practices this year, Fischer said, speaking on the team's ability to fight through adversity. "No matter (the adversity), I think we've been pretty successful."

Cross Country competitions are comprised of a three-mile race that can be completed on many different types of terrain, including dirt, concrete and even mountainous hills, "so sometimes you can't compare times because courses have a massive effect on the outcome," Fischer said, but the coach is confident she's fielding a solid contender for the upcoming preliminary matchup.

"The boys are Ocean League Champions and the girls' team secured second in the Ocean League Finals," Fischer said, mentioning the team competes in one of the sports' toughest divisions.

It's not uncommon for the team to make the preliminary round in Division 1 but Fischer hopes the Vikings will be able to represent Santa Monica in the CIF finals later in the postseason.

Of the nearly 50 teams who will head to the preliminary round, only 16 will make the finals and even less will head to the state championships afterward, "so that's tough to but we're aiming high," Fischer said.

"But, really, I do believe both our teams have a slight chance to go to finals," she added, stating: "Our boys look good and so do the girls."

Fischer said she believes the extra work put in by the athletes over the summer has contributed to their success.

"That made a big difference I think especially for the girls," the coach said. "We have a really good group of sophomore girls who have pushed our senior girls so it's been an interesting combination, (but) the future is obviously bright."

UPCOMING MEET INFORMATION

Both of Samohi's Cross Country teams are set to compete on Friday, Nov. 15, at approximately 10:05 a.m. at the Riverside City Cross Country Course located at 1011 N. Orange Street in Riverside.

Parking is $10 per car and general admission tickets are $10 as well, according to an event flyer. An awards ceremony will occur after the conclusion of a division race and interested spectators can purchase tickets in advance by visiting bit.ly/2WVAuiB.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (NOVEMBER 11)

You'll apply yourself to meaningful work and contribute heftily to something you believe in. The accidental result? Happiness that would have eluded you had you tried to pursue it directly. Changes in 2020 help along a new more comfortable and attractive lifestyle. An investment pays in February. Cancer and Aquarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 28, 1, 33 and 50.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You don't have to be in a good mood to act like you're in a good mood. Today, you'll spread your emotional sunshine indiscriminately to loved ones and perfect strangers without realizing just who needs it most.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). The best way to catch a thing isn't always to run after it. Be like the spider instead of the lion. Weave something lovely in the optimum place, and then wait for your reward.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). It's so important to have things to look forward to that you would be wise to schedule something really fun coming up after your vacation. It will lessen the intensity of the post-vacation blues.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). With the best things in life, like love, friendship and creativity, your capacity for receiving will grow when you get more and also when you give more.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Because you've weathered a few storms in life, you realize the value of celebrating when things are going well. It doesn't always have to be a big celebration though. Sometimes a little cheerfulness is enough.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). This is one of those rare and wonderful occasions in which the lasting rewards will come from the same activities as the short-term rewards. This is the richest benefit available is the actual work itself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Trophies come in many shapes and forms, serve no practical purpose and are built to be ornamental, symbolic and braggadocious. Don't be tempted by trophies if there's anything more useful to go for.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Advances don't always improve quality. You are keen to test out the older version, investigate the relics and get to know the vintage aroma, if only to enhance your reference point.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Expand your arsenal of tools for changing your state of mind. A chemical-free way to relax yourself on the spot will be a valuable tool you can employ often and with great results in the weeks to come.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). In financial matters, there's always a ratio to balance. When a deal seems too good for you, you'll look deeper into it to see if that it's true and also make sure no one else is suffering because of your amazing luck.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You've no need for autocorrect, preference picks and smart composition features right now. You relish the chance to share original thoughts, and any digital interference with your process will be unwelcome.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Your influence will be a function of how well you accommodate others. Make it easy for people to do the thing you really want them to do. This is the secret to success in many areas.

Mercury's Big Moment

In case the numeric symmetry of the day isn't magic enough, this is also a remarkable moment for Mercury, who backs across the face of the sun like a big showoff, letting earthlings in on his visage for more than five hours. Mercury has this message to impart: You can look all you want but actually seeing is another story, and a highly personal one.

ELEVEN THOUGHTS ABOUT 11/11

1. If you're a person who often notices the clock when it happens to be 11:11, consider assigning a powerful meaning to this lucky noticing. Use this as an opportunity to claim a saying, picture or idea that will encourage you along your way. 2. In a pure and distilled form of numerology, 11/11 is a numerological 4, a number that calls for the use of careful manners and diplomacy. 3. There was a comedy released last year called "Eleven Eleven" that centers around alien abduction. 4. In a longer form of numerology, those born on 11/11 are thought to have wisdom far beyond their years and lifetimes stretching in both directions. 5. Famous people born on 11/11 include Leonardo DiCaprio, Stanley Tucci and Calista Flockhart. 6. A (not-so) secret Corduroy Club has claimed 11/11 as their special day and symbol because of the similarities to the ridges represented in the number to the fabric they adore. 7. Christopher Columbus discovered Saba on Nov. 11, 1493. 8. There is a trend of increasing belief in the auspiciousness of 11/11 resulting in many 11/11 marriage celebrations. 9. Across the globe, babies born on 11/11 often receive special media attention. 10. Many spiritualists believe the dead are more available for communication at 11:11. 11. Wishing you felicity this 11/11 and beyond!
