Bud's Deli shuts its doors after almost 40 years

GRACE INEZ ADAMS
SMDP Staff Writer

Bed's Deli, formerly at Ocean Park and 28th, has closed.

Founder and owner Gary Wallack said the landlord of the strip mall that housed the deli raised the rent to an untenable level, forcing him out, despite attempts at negotiation. He officially closed up shop on Oct. 31 and is in the process of clearing out the space.

Since the closing, Wallack said many customers have reached out – some in tears at the news – and shared how much they have enjoyed his food over the years.

"My customers were regular customers for years, daily customers," he said. "I'm getting phone calls, text messages – every time a person comes to the door they can't believe it because I've been an institution for so many years."

Numerous google reviews called the deli a "gem," noting the quality of the food and the affordable prices. Wallack said he has always strived to keep his prices low while also seeking out and using "only the finest ingredients."

"I would go to the finest restaurants and find out what they use," he said. "I was always trying to improve." Sometimes, he acknowledged, to the extreme.

One time, he said a customer came in and told him he had found "the greatest frozen yogurt" at a spot in West Hollywood. Wallack went to try it for himself and, after

Veterans honored and new soldiers sworn in at Veterans Day celebration on the Pier

Grace Inez Adams

VETERANS: Following two years of scaled down celebrations due to COVID, Santa Monica honored Veterans Friday Nov. 11 with a well-attended ceremony at the Pier. The event featured several guest speakers including Congressman and veteran Ted Lieu, Mayor Sue Himmelrich, Council Member Gleam Davis and Scott Painter, an Army veteran and founder of multiple Santa Monica companies. Current military members were also present and a swearing-in ceremony of new soldiers was held. The celebration was capped off with a performance by a blues band.

With election results slowed to a trickle, officials will update over the weekend

EMILY SAWICKI
SMDP Staff Writer

In our digital era, "snail mail" is often used to describe the analog method of sending letters but as this year's election results drag on into the weekend, it's those aptly named vote by [snail] mail ballots causing all the slowdown.

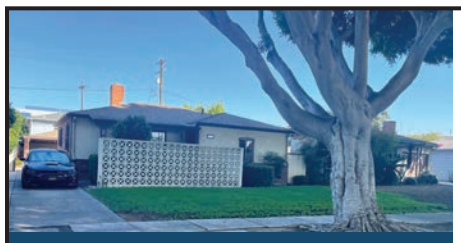

The Los Angeles County Registrar-Recorder/County Clerk (RRCC)'s office has already counted the in-person vote and all ballots received before election day but due to a surge of voters dropping off their mail ballots on Nov. 8 and additional mail ballots arriving after election day, officials are still working through a large backlog of votes with about 35 percent of the total still outstanding.

Officials released another 80,000 ballot results on Friday evening, resulting in just about 1,000 more Santa Monica votes entering the fray. Every vote counts, but the 1,000 extra local ballots thrown into the mix Friday night were immaterial to the results as they stood as of latest reporting.

The City Council race still had Caroline Torosis in the lead, followed by Jesse Zwick and Lana Negrete rounding out the top three spots. About 600 votes behind Negrete was Natalya Zernitskaya, followed closely behind by Armen Melkonians and then Ellis Raskin. That order was unchanged since the previous tally update.

The same was true in virtually

Many vets are landing jobs, but the transition can be tough

BEN FINLEY
Associated Press

Phillip Slaughter left the Army after 18 years and found a job similar to one he had in uniform: behind the wheel of a truck. Instead of towing food and bullets through war zones, he hauled packages for FedEx.

It wasn't what he wanted to do. The work aggravated his post-traumatic stress disorder. It would be three years and several jobs before he landed his ideal position as a sourcing recruiter for a tech company.

"I think it's the first job that I've worked 10 consecutive months without quitting," said Slaughter, 41, who lives in Clarksville, Tennessee.

Slaughter is a U.S. military veteran who found a job he loves at a time when the nation is experiencing some of its lowest monthly veteran unemployment on record. But the rate — 2.7% in October — can mask the difficulty of a transition that sometimes takes years of working unfulfilling jobs, while forging a new identity and a new purpose beyond serving one's country.

"Even though (veteran unemployment) is low, I'm interested to see a survey on how many people are happy in the position they're in," said Slaughter, who also runs his own consulting firm for fellow vets.

Veterans account for about 7% of the civilian population, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Their jobless rate can help gauge the nation's efforts to assist former service members, experts say. It can also reflect on the military and how it prepares departing personnel. High veteran unemployment is not good for recruiting.

For this Veterans Day, a handful of former service members talked about their experiences looking for work at a time when the veteran jobless rate is so low. For some, it was easy — but others have struggled.

Pierson Gest, a former Army infantryman, landed his first post-military job in August as a hydropower system designer in California.

Gest joined up during the Great Recession, knowing he'd eventually go to school on the GI Bill. Starting college in 2017 was tough at first as he developed study habits. But he got the hang of it, earning his engineering degree in June.

"I was lucky enough to negotiate a six-figure salary," said Gest, 37, who lives outside San Francisco. "And I definitely used and leveraged my experience in the Army to negotiate that wage on top of my college degree."

Across the country in Florida, Thomas Holmes is still searching for his ideal job.

Holmes, 46, left the Air Force in 2012 after 17 years, during which he maintained parachute systems for various types of aircraft, from F-15 fighter jets to U-2 spy planes.

He said the one full-time job he's worked, in the billing and claims department of a warehouse office, was toxic. He quit after about 18 months.

Holmes used the GI Bill to earn three degrees, including a master's in sports management. He found part-time work in the industry, but rising gas prices and the lure of more consistent hours prompted him to work at a nearby UPS store.

"I've applied for many jobs — county jobs, state jobs, all sorts of things," said Holmes, who lives outside Tampa. "And then all I get is: 'Well, thanks for your service.'"

> "I've applied for many jobs — county jobs, state jobs, all sorts of things — Thomas Holmes"

Jayla Hair's transition from Navy to civilian paralegal wasn't easy, despite a bachelor's degree in the field and skills that would seem transferable.

Hair, 30, said she applied to about 300 jobs over eight months. After seeking help from a Navy program and friends, Hair overhauled her resume and job interviews eventually came her way. But potential employers cited her lack of experience with state laws and civilian courts.

Hair took temporary jobs in the legal field and recently landed a full-time position as a paralegal for a Fortune 500 company in the Chicago area.

"Just having my military experience was not enough," said Hair, who plans to pursue a law degree in the future. "If it wasn't for me having these temporary jobs to build my civilian resume, I don't know where I'd be right now."

Hair landed her job at a time when veteran unemployment has been mostly dropping. The annual veteran jobless rate fell steadily from 8.7% in 2010 to 3.1% in 2019, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Last year, after a spike fueled by the coronavirus pandemic, the annual rate was 4.4%. But the seasonally adjusted monthly percentage in March was 2.4, hailed by President Joe Biden as tied for the lowest rate on record. August also hit that mark.

The tight labor market and demand for workers after the coronavirus pandemic is likely one factor for the low veteran jobless rates, said Jeffrey B. Wenger, a senior policy researcher at the Rand Corp. But so are significant efforts in recent years by the U.S. military, Department of Veterans Affairs and veteran service organizations to provide assistance to outgoing service members.

Twitter Blue signups unavailable after raft of fake accounts

BARBARA ORTUTAY AND MAE ANDERSON
AP Business Writers

Twitter's relaunched premium service — which grants blue-check "verification" labels to anyone willing to pay $8 a month — was unavailable Friday after the social media platform was flooded by a wave of imposter accounts it itself had approved.

It's the latest whiplash-inducing change to the service where uncertainty has become the norm since billionaire Elon Musk took control two weeks ago. Prior to that, the blue check was granted to government entities, corporations, celebrities and journalists verified by the platform — precisely to prevent impersonation. Now, anyone can get one as long as they have a phone, a credit card and $8 a month.

An impostor account posing as pharmaceutical giant Eli Lilly & Co. and registered under the revamped Twitter Blue system tweeted that insulin was free, forcing the Indianapolis company to post an apology. Nintendo, Lockheed Martin, Musk's own companies Tesla and SpaceX were also impersonated, as well as the accounts of various professional sports and political figures.

For advertisers who have put their business with Twitter on hold, the fake accounts could be the last straw: Musk's rocky run atop the platform — laying off half its workforce and triggering high-profile departures — has raised questions about its survivability.

The impostors can cause big problems, even if they're taken down quickly.

They have created "overwhelming reputational risk for placing advertising investments on the platform," said Lou Paskalis, longtime marketing and media executive and former Bank of America head of global media. Adding that with the fake "verified" brand accounts, "a picture emerges of a platform in disarray that no media professional would risk their career by continuing to make advertising investments on, and no governance apparatus or senior executive would condone if they did."

Adding to the confusion, Twitter now has two categories of "blue checks," and they look identical. One includes the accounts verified before Musk took helm. It notes that "This account is verified because it's notable in government, news, entertainment, or another designated category." The other notes that the account subscribes to Twitter Blue.

But as of midday Friday, Twitter Blue was not available for subscription.

On Thursday, Musk tweeted that "too many corrupt legacy Blue 'verification' checkmarks exist, so no choice but to remove legacy Blue in coming months."

An email sent to Twitter's press address went unanswered. The company's communications department was gutted in the layoffs and Twitter has not responded to queries from The Associated Press since Oct. 27 when Musk took the helm.

Thursday night, Twitter also once again began adding gray "official" labels to some prominent accounts. It had rolled out the labels earlier this week, only to kill them a few hours later.

They returned Thursday night, at least for some accounts — including Twitter's own, as well as big companies like Amazon, Nike and Coca-Cola, before many vanished again.

> "It's another example of something not very well thought out ... — Richard Levick"

Celebrities also did not appear to be getting the "official" label.

Twitter is heavily dependent on ads and about 90% of its revenue comes from advertisers. But each change that Musk is rolling out — or rolling back — makes the site less appealing for big brands.

"It has become chaos," said Richard Levick, CEO of public relations firm Levick. "Who buys into chaos?"

A bigger issue for Musk might be the risk to his reputation as a model tech executive, since the rollout of different types of verifications and other changes have been botched, Levick added.

"It's another example something not very well thought out, and that's what happens when you rush," Levick said. "Musk has been known as a trusted visionary and magician — he can't lose that moniker and that's what's at risk right now," Levick said.

Twitter is a small part of total ad spending for the biggest companies that advertise on the platform. Google, Amazon and Meta account for about 75% of digital ads globally, with all other platforms combined making up the other 25%. Twitter accounts for about 0.9% of global digital ad spending, according to Insider Intelligence.

"For most marketers on budgets, Twitter has always been that thing that is potentially too big to totally ignore but not quite big enough to care about," said Mark DiMassimo, creative chief of marketing agency DiGo.

"None of this is a forever moral or ethical stand on the point of advertisers," he added. "If Musk proves to be a civilizing force in the long run advertisers will come back — if Twitter is still there. It's a 'for now' decision — why be there now?"

SMC Earns Second Consecutive Silver Bicycle Friendly University Award from League of American Bicyclists

The League of American Bicyclists—the premier grassroots advocacy organization encouraging better bicycling and protecting the rights of people who bike—has honored Santa Monica College (SMC) with its second consecutive Silver-level Bicycle Friendly University (BFU) award in recognition of the institution's achievements in promoting and enabling safe, accessible bicycling on campus. SMC remains the only California community college to be designated a Bike Friendly University, and is one of 37 institutes of higher education nationwide to earn a bronze, silver, or gold designation from the league. The designation is good for four years.

"I am pleased to celebrate 37 new and renewing Bicycle Friendly Universities joining the movement to build a Bicycle Friendly America for everyone," said Bill Nesper, executive director of the League of American Bicyclists. "Bicycle Friendly Universities, like Santa Monica College, offer a far more holistic experience of campus life for students, faculty and staff by implementing policies, programs and infrastructure improvements that make for safer and easier car-free commutes, healthier lives through increased physical activity and a campus community more connected to its surroundings."

"During the first couple of years of the pandemic many started biking to get fresh air and exercise. Now that we are mostly back on-ground, SMC is encouraging students and staff to keep the good habit rolling," said Ferris Kawar, SMC sustainability manager. "Thanks to efforts by the City of Santa Monica to build more safe cycling lanes, those returning to campus will find more protected bike routes (especially on Broadway, 17th Street, and Walgrove). These factors and more helped SMC earn yet another Silver award."

Santa Monica College encourages bicycling as an easy option for transportation, Kawar added. "SMC employees and volunteers refurbished over 115 bikes which were donated to low-income students who needed a way to continue to be mobile in the height of COVID-19," he said. "Also, the college provides plentiful bicycle parking, free classes on bicycle repairs, and quarterly drawings for prizes to encourage employees to bicycle to campus.

The Bicycle Friendly University program now includes 221 colleges and universities in 47 states and the District of Columbia, and is part of the League's Bicycle Friendly America program, which also awards communities and businesses with certifications as part of its mission to make bicycling safe, comfortable and more accessible for all.

"This round of Bicycle Friendly Universities demonstrates an inspiring shift in focus from driving to biking and walking on campus," said the League's Bicycle Friendly America program director Amelia Neptune. "What's clear is that making bicycling a go-to transportation option is part of the solution many colleges and universities are using to better the campus life of their communities and we are grateful to have so many partners in our effort to keep the bike boom going!"

As Santa Monica College continues to improve campus accessibility by bike, it will have access to a variety of free tools, a library of resources, and technical assistance from the League to become even more welcoming to people who bike. When colleges and universities invest in the comfort and safety of people bicycling, it creates benefits for the environment and for its community, from reducing the carbon footprint to providing students with a low or no-cost commuting and parking options.

To learn more about the free BFU program, visit the League online at bikeleague.org/university. To learn more about bike programs at SMC, visit smc.edu/sustainability and view "Transportation Options."

Children's Bureau celebrates National Adoption Month Nov. 17 with a virtual online orientation

Every year, November is recognized as National Adoption Month, which brings awareness to the thousands of children in our community awaiting permanent families. During this time, we also celebrate the families who have grown through adoption. Children's Bureau is one of the largest private, non-profit adoption agencies in California and one of the few that is nationally accredited by the Child Welfare League of America. In Los Angeles County alone, the foster care population exceeds 33,000 children with 200 of those foster children waiting for an adoptive family.

If you or someone you know may be interested in learning more, join us on Nov. 17 from 4 – 5 p.m. for an online virtual orientation. For questions and/or to get started, call 800-730-3933, email Recruitment@all4kids.org or visit https://www.all4kids.org/foster-care-and-adoption-inquiry-form/ to complete a quick inquiry form. A link to the meeting will be emailed to you.

Children's Bureau partners with over 200 foster-adoptive families annually to help at-risk youth by giving them a home that is nearby and inclusive to their foster siblings. Lisa and Michael began their foster-adoptive journey by providing a stable home to a sibling set of three, two girls and a boy. They worked to keep the family together and have experienced a bond like no other. "If adoption is in your future, there is no need to look any further than our surrounding county. So many local children need a family. If you are wanting to "make a difference" with your life, consider adopting from foster care. You could be saving generations," said Lisa.

In the 1940's, Children's Bureau opened adoption services and found homes for refugee children orphans from World War II. The agency continues to meet the needs by offering a wide array of programs in areas related to adoption such as foster care, prevention, and mental health. Children's Bureau has multiple locations operating throughout Southern California.

> "Right now children who have experienced trauma and have been separated from their birth family need our help - Leslie Oropeza

"Right now children who have experienced trauma and have been separated from their birth family need our help," says Leslie Oropeza, Children's Bureau Director of Foster Care and Adoption. "We are looking for families who can open their homes and hearts to these children. Families who have extra space and the willingness to keep them together. Statistics show siblings kept together in foster care and adoption do better later in life. They heal quicker from their trauma, have better attachments, and develop healthy self-images," she adds.

Children's Bureau welcomes all individuals regardless of race, age, religion, disability, marital status, ethnic background, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression to become a resource for children. Qualifying families receive training and support throughout their journey. Foster Care and Adoption Programs are available in Kern, Los Angeles, Orange, San Bernardino and Ventura counties.

For information about Children's Bureau and the other critical services the agency provides, visit www.all4kids.org. To stay connected with Family Foster Care and Adoption services, visit https://www.all4kids.org/programs/family-foster-care-and-adoption/.

Santa Monica College to host Native American artist Matika Wilbur's "All My Relations" podcast and Indigenous Film Festival Nov. 18 & 19

Santa Monica College (SMC) will host live sessions of the "All My Relations" podcast and the first-ever "All My Relations" Film Festival on November 18 and 19.

Native American artist Matika Wilbur, SMC's artist-in-residence for 2022-2023, will lead the "All My Relations" podcasts featuring roundtable discussions with the festival's filmmakers on Friday, November 18, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., and Saturday, November 19, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. The podcast sessions will be held live in CMD Auditorium 180 at the SMC Center for Media and Design (1660 Stewart St., Santa Monica). A detailed schedule for the sessions is posted at smcbarrettgallery.com.

The "All My Relations" Film Festival will showcase eight Indigenous-centered films, each followed by a short discussion. The films will be screened Friday, November 18, starting at 6 p.m., and Saturday, November 19, starting at 5 p.m., in the new John Adams Middle School (JAMS) Performing Arts Center (2425 16th Street, Santa Monica). A detailed schedule of the sessions is posted at smcbarrettgallery.com.

Proceeds from the "All My Relations" podcast and Film Festival will be used to fund Santa Monica College's first scholarship dedicated solely to Indigenous students.

Podcast tickets — VIP tickets: $50 per day for admission to either the Friday podcast and Friday film screenings OR the Saturday podcast and Saturday film screenings.

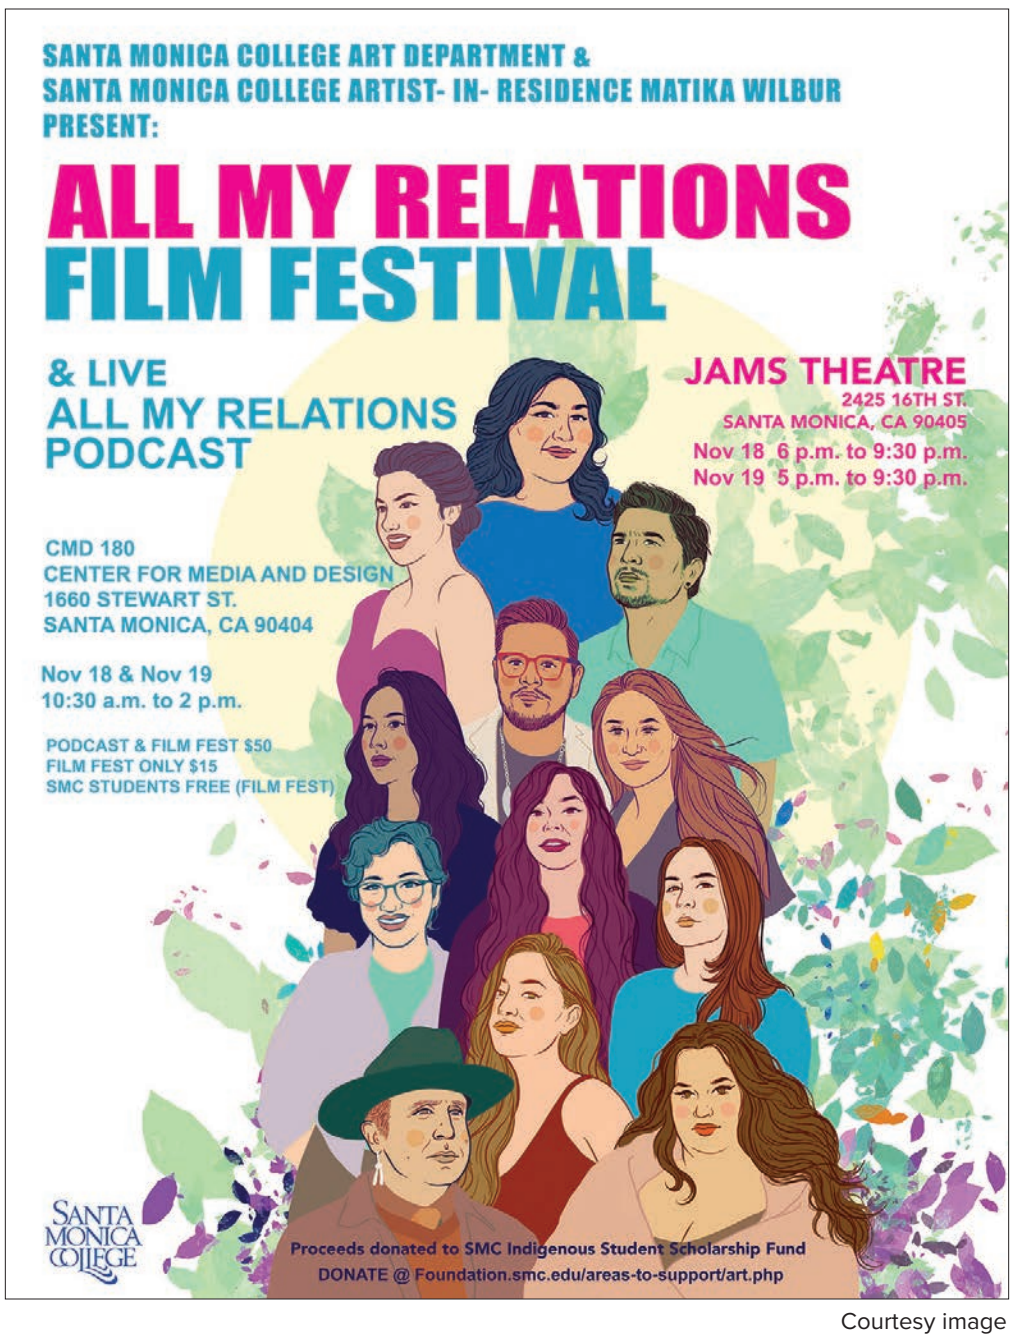

Film festival tickets — SMC students: free; general admission: $15 per day (plus a modest service fee).

Tickets can be purchased through SMC's Pete and Susan Barrett Art Gallery (smcbarrettgallery.com), which currently hosts the free exhibition of Wilbur's "Project 562: Changing the Way We See Native America."

"All My Relations" is a popular Native-issues podcast that explores the connections between land, creatural relatives, and one another. Launched in 2019, the podcast reaches about 60,000 people per episode. The podcasts recorded at Santa Monica College will be the second live series of "All My Relations," a follow-up to the successful live recording at the 2022 Santa Fe Indian Market.

More information about the "All My Relations" podcast sessions and film festival screenings can be found at smcbarrettgallery.com.

concluding that it was in fact "the greatest," he asked the store where they got it. When they refused to tell him, he said he returned the next morning at 5 a.m. and searched the trashcan in the alley to find a carton with the name of the supplier. Within the week, Bud's Deli was selling the same kind.

Beyond frozen yogurt, Wallack said the deli made all of its food from scratch. He describes himself as a "foodie" and credits his parents and the restaurants they took him to as a kid with developing his love and appreciation for quality food.

"We would go to the Swiss Cafe in Beverly Hills, the Chasen's restaurant, Brown Derby..." he said. "So we went to fine restaurants and my parents had a good palette."

While Wallack said he will miss the deli, his long-time employees and his customers "dearly," he doesn't plan to re-open elsewhere. He said he has been working since he was 9 years old and is looking forward to being able to relax a little bit and take longer vacations without having to worry about the deli, but does want to find something restaurant-related to keep him occupied.

"Maybe help other restaurants during the day or something," he said. "Since I succeeded for 40 years, if they're not doing that good, maybe they're buying wrong or whatever – I would like to do something like that."

VETERAN

Training such as resume-writing is now mandatory and American companies have launched initiatives to hire hundreds of thousands of vets.

Many of those undertakings grew from the Great Recession and the abundance of stressed-out service members who served in Iraq and Afghanistan, which "brought the veteran employment crisis to a head," Wenger said.

"And over the last 10 to 15 years, people have been putting in more and more resources and have become more and more dedicated to fixing that problem," Wenger said.

Among them is Transition Overwatch, a firm that runs career apprenticeship programs across the country. CEO Sean Ofeldt said the company zeroes in on what active service members want to do as civilians, not what they're doing or the skills they've learned in the military.

"A lot of military members don't want to keep doing what they did," said Ofeldt, a former Navy SEAL. "We train them up while they're still on active duty and then launch them into an actual career with all the support they need for that first 12 months."

But the formula for supporting veterans has to encompass more than just employment. It needs to focus on social challenges as well, said Karl Hamner, a University of Alabama education professor.

Veterans can feel isolated after losing their tribe of fellow service members. Hamner said new data indicates that loss can be especially acute for women because they formed strong bonds with one another as they navigated a male-dominated military.

In a soon-to-be released national survey of 4,700 female veterans conducted by Hamner and his colleagues, 70% said adjusting to civilian life was difficult; 71% said they needed more time to figure out what they wanted to do.

"They had to prove themselves in a valued, highly regarded profession," Hamner said. "And now they're back to trying to figure out what it means to be a civilian woman and deal with all the standard discriminatory stuff."

Frustration over play time hastens Tillery's Chargers' exit

JOE REEDY
AP Sports Writer

Jerry Tillery was already expected to be in his last season with the Los Angeles Chargers after the team declined to exercise his fifth-year option during the offseason. It turns out the exit happened sooner.

Tillery hit the NFL's waiver wire on Friday after the team announced Thursday night they would release him. The defensive lineman was the Chargers' first-round pick in 2019, going 28th overall in the NFL draft.

"I think there's a point in relationships like this where you have to move on. It's best for both people to move on; that's just what happened here," coach Brandon Staley said after the 4-3 Chargers finished preparations for Sunday night's game at San Francisco.

Besides not having his option picked up, Tillery's frustrations increased during the season as he saw his playing time slashed. He led the Chargers in snaps played on the defensive line in 2020 and '21 and was on the field for over 71% of the defensive plays. In seven games this year, he was fourth among the six defensive linemen in snaps played and was in for only 42.3% of the plays.

After Austin Johnson was lost for the year with a knee injury in last Sunday's 20-17 win over the Atlanta Falcons, some figured Tillery would see his snaps increase. However, the Chargers were set to go a different route after signing Breiden Fehoko from the practice squad, along with practice squad player Joe Gaziano also making headway toward either being signed or being elevated to the gameday roster.

Staley noted that Tillery and the team had competing visions regarding his role moving forward.

"It just became clear that it wasn't going to be a fit anymore," Staley said. "We are going to give Breiden and Joe a chance to compete. With where we're at and what we're trying to do with our team — on the defensive line, our defense, on the whole team — trying to create competition and have guys earn their roles. That's what we want to be here. When those things didn't line up, we had to make a change."

Tillery appeared in 54 games for Los Angeles, with 106 tackles, 10 1/2 sacks, three forced fumbles and a fumble recovery. A team will likely claim him by Monday's waiver deadline.

It is the second time a first-round pick from the 2019 class has been waived in less than a week. On Tuesday, the Las Vegas Raiders waived safety Johnathan Abram, who went one pick before Tillery at 27th overall.

Notes; WR Keenan Allen (hamstring), WR Mike Williams (ankle) and K Dustin Hopkins (hamstring) have been ruled out for Sunday night. ... LB Chris Rumpf (knee) is doubtful and OT Trey Pipkins (knee) is questionable. ... If Pipkins is unable to go, Storm Norton or Foster Sarell would get the start at right tackle. Sarell would need to be elevated from the practice squad.

Rams QB Stafford making progress in concussion protocol

GREG BEACHAM
AP Sports Writer

Matthew Stafford is questionable for the Los Angeles Rams' home game against Arizona while working through the NFL's concussion protocol.

The quarterback has been "making good progress and steady progression" since being placed in the protocol Tuesday, Rams coach Sean McVay said Friday.

Stafford worked out and threw the ball Thursday, and he participated in the Rams' practice Friday on a limited basis. None of that progress means Stafford will play for Los Angeles (3-5) against the Cardinals (3-6) at SoFi Stadium, however.

"It could go all the way up until 90 minutes before kickoff," McVay said on the decision to allow Stafford to play.

"When you've got a guy that's a veteran player like him, you're not going to risk at all," McVay added. "We're not going to skip any steps. I don't want that to be misunderstood. But I think it would be silly of me to rule him out when you're talking about our quarterback, the guy that means so much to us, if there's a possibility (for him to play) while not (putting him at risk)."

The Rams say they had no indication Stafford had concussion symptoms last Sunday during their loss at Tampa Bay. Stafford was sacked four times by the Buccaneers, and he has been sacked 28 times in eight games this season behind a patchwork offensive line consisting of eight different starting lineups in eight games.

Stafford went into the concussion protocol Tuesday after the usual postgame medical examinations, the Rams said.

Despite his poor protection, Stafford is completing a career-best 68.4% of his passes for 1,928 yards with eight touchdowns against eight interceptions, including just three picks in the past six games. He has been one of the NFL's most durable quarterbacks during his career, missing only eight games — all of them in the 2019 season with Detroit — over the past 12 years.

John Wolford is expected to start for the Rams if Stafford can't play. Wolford, a four-year backup in McVay's offense, has played only in mop-up duty since he started two games for Los Angeles during the 2020-21 season, including a playoff game.

The Rams got positive injury news about offensive lineman Coleman Shelton and rookie running back Kyren Williams, who will both play against the Cardinals. Shelton, who has started at right guard and center this season, missed four games with a high ankle sprain.

Williams, a fifth-round pick out of Notre Dame, has yet to play on offense after injuring his ankle on his only special teams snap during the Rams' season opener against Buffalo.

all other Santa Monica-specific races. On the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District Board of Education, Laurie Lieberman, Richard Tahvildaran-Jesswein, Stacy Rouse and Alicia Mignano held their places, followed by Esther Hickman, Angela DiGaetano, Miles Warner and Keith Coleman. For Santa Monica Community College District Board, Sion Roy, Nancy Greenstein, Tom Peters, Barry Snell and Patrick Acosta II also maintained their ranks.

Across city limits in Venice, Traci Park held her lead over Erin Darling by roughly the same percentage point, with Park around 55% and Darling closer to 45%.

Measure SMC, the $375 million school bond, was holding its narrow lead with 55.3% "yes" votes and a 55% threshold to pass.

Measure DT, a property transfer tax of $25 per $1,000 in assessed value over $8 million, was still tanking with just under 34% approval. Its counterpart, Measure GS, maintained a slim lead of just under 52%. GS would establish a $56 property transfer tax per $1,000 in assessed value for properties over $8 million, with funds earmarked for schools, homelessness and affordable housing.

An increase to Santa Monica's transient occupancy tax continued to sail through with almost 73% approval from local voters. The cannabis business tax, Measure HMP, also seemed destined to pass, maintaining a solid approval of nearly 67%.

Results were still far too close to call in the hotly contested Third District Supervisor race, but candidates Lindsey Horvath and Bob Hertzberg swapped positions for the first time, with Horvath now taking a narrow lead over Hertzberg in the contest to take the seat left vacant by current Supervisor Sheila Kuehl.

It was a similar story in the LA City mayoral contest, with Karen Bass jumping ahead of Rick Caruso by just over 4,000 votes. The two remained within one half of one percentage point, with more than three quarters of a million ballots estimated to still be outstanding countywide.

LA County Sheriff Alex Villanueva's goal of remaining in his seat seemed to be slipping further away. In the latest update, Villanueva tallied up 20,000 more votes, but challenger Robert Luna, who was already up more than 200,000 votes, added 50,000 more to his column.

The RRCC continued to deviate from its scheduled data release dates. While the county office initially pledged to provide updates on Tuesdays and Fridays as needed through the first week of December when final tabulations were certified, the office so far has instead been trickling results out, with releases on Thursday, Nov. 10, before the planned Friday release. On Friday evening, the RRCC announced it would be delivering more updates in the evenings of Saturday, Nov. 12, and again on Monday, Nov. 14, in apparent disregard for its published schedule.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Nov. 12)

You're a genius at feeding your faith this year. You feel your dreams are in reach and this feeling is part of what makes it so. You'll focus on creating environments that make your life easier, lovelier and more supportive of you. You'll change a group, and a group will change you. Also featured: a faraway place with a friend. Aries and Leo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 3, 29, 11 and 17.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You'll be inspired to make something. It feels like it's being made through you and you're more of an agent bringing it all together. The more interesting it is to you, the more interesting it will be to others too.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You're thrown so many little problems that you'll never get all of them right, and maybe that's the best part — because the snags and obstacles are what make you connect with others and come together in solutions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You flow a lot of positive energy to people as you listen well to them. You're always on the lookout for opportunities for playful engagement. You can charm your way into an interesting situation, or out of an annoying one.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You're something of an expert at giving love and compassion even when you don't necessarily feel like it. You don't have to like a person to be nice to them, but flowing kindness to the situation often alters it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You rise to meet the challenge of the moment. Everything else that happens is a bonus to you. If you're not sure about whether you can trust someone, assume you can't. The hesitation you feel is a flag to heed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). These days, it's easy to be the most attractive person in the room. All you have to do is pocket your phone. Being where you are instead of on a screen is an instant image boost. Full awareness and presence are powerful.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). As a child, you tried to figure out how the magician pulled off the trick. But now when mysterious things happen, you'll live in the fantasy a while, leaving room for wonder. Some of the best things in life are unexplainable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You're confident, you know what you're good at and you certainly don't need validation... but it's still exciting to hear favorable comments. The person who recognizes your uniqueness will also steal your heart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). While key moments of a relationship may stand out in your mind, you're careful not to define the entire experience by a few things that happened, good or bad. A balanced view of the past leads to good choices for the future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Many are prone to self-doubt today and will underestimate what they can do or perhaps be too afraid to try at all. You'll make it your mission to encourage others, build them up and help them over the hurdles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You're coming to a time when you will need to show what you can do. It can be really fun to prepare for this. Imagine your dream role and build the proof that you can do what it takes to fulfill it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You're working on yourself. That in and of itself is something many are incapable of. With your high standards, it's easy to fall into a trap of perfectionism. Even as you try to improve, know that you're lovable just as you are.

DRESS BRITISH THINK YIDDISH

The Santa Monica Playhouse Benefit Series presents Suzanne Levy's Dress British Think Yiddish. Bangers and mash at school lunch, chopped liver with gribenes at home; morris dancing with jingling bells, the kazatzkah at family weddings; politely murmuring "biscuit anyone?" at work as a BBC producer, kvetching about cold kneidlach at Friday night family dinners. Writer/performer Suzanne Levy juggles the tsuris and joy of sparring identities in this funny, poignant solo play about growing up Jewish in the UK. All proceeds support the Santa Monica Playhouse Keep the Open Doors Campaign. Santa Monica Playhouse Main Stage 1211 4th Street. $25, Tickets available online at https://www.showclix.com/event/suzanne-levy-s-dress-british-think-yiddish

In this interactive workshop from Youthful Savings, teens will learn how to harness the power of the internet and use digital tools to market their creations, and economically empower themselves and their communities. For ages 13-18 only. Pico Branch Library, 5 - 6 p.m.

MYSTERY BOOK GROUP DISCUSSION

Join a community-led discussion of an exciting mystery novel each month. Currently held on Zoom. Email library@santamonica.gov to join. 7 - 8 p.m.

WEDNESDAY | NOVEMBER 16

ICE GRAND OPENING

Downtown Santa Monica, Inc. (DTSM) brings the holidays to the downtown district with the return of Winterlit, which includes the grand opening of the Ice at Santa Monica skating rink now rescheduled for Wednesday, November 16 from 6 - 10 p.m. After a two year hiatus, the 8,000-square-foot rink will once again transform the corner of Fifth Street and Arizona Avenue into a winter wonderland and bring a little ice to the beachside community. The grand opening event includes free skating, a live DJ, delicious bites and freebies. Rescheduled from Nov. 10.

DOWNTOWN FARMERS MARKET

Enjoy one of Santa Monica's farmers markets, widely considered to be among the best on the west coast and featuring field-fresh produce, hundreds of kinds of vegetables, brilliant cut flowers, breads, cheeses, delicious foods, live music and more. Arizona Avenue (between 4th & Ocean) 8:30 a.m. - 1:30 p.m.

THURSDAY | NOVEMBER 17

MONTANA AVENUE BRANCH BOOK GROUP DISCUSSION

Join a community-led monthly book club, centered in the Montana neighborhood. The group currently meets on the Montana Branch Patio. This month's book is "Hedy's Folly: The Life And Breakthrough Inventions Of Hedy Lamarr, The Most Beautiful Woman In The World" by Richard Rhodes. Montana Avenue Branch Library, 6 - 7 p.m.

APPY HOUR' DEVICE WORKSHOP

Main Library, 2nd Floor Tutoring Center. Bring your smartphone or tablet and receive small group help to get you started with using your device. 3:30 - 4:30 p.m.

CURRENT EVENTS DISCUSSION

Attend a lively discussion on current events, every Thursday 1 to 2:30 p.m. Formerly at the Fairview Library, now conveniently on Zoom. Excellent facilitator, Marsha, sends an email list on Wed. night of topics to discuss which is informative in itself. There is never a lack of interesting material or opinions. For information and to receive a Zoom link for the next meeting, email to mushcb@gmail.com.
