In September, the Oakland (Calif.) police suspended their successful traffic safety program of random drunk-driving checkpoints because they had received too many complaints from illegal aliens, who were being arrested not because they were driving drunk but because, as illegals, they lack driver's licenses.

Investigation of car dealership inches along

Two years later and no charges have been filed in alleged fraud case

BY CAROLYN SACKARIASON

Daily Press Staff Writer

SM BOULEVARD — After more than two years of investigating an alleged consumer fraud scam at Honda of Santa Monica, prosecutors are still collecting evidence. They expect to file charges in the coming months, officials said Friday.

Dozens of investigators with the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Consumer Protection Division seized boxes of files at Honda of Santa Monica's finance and sales departments in a surprise raid on Sept. 25, 2002.

On the same day of the raid, a class-action lawsuit was filed against the dealership in downtown Los Angeles Superior Court. The suit alleges several customers were ripped off by the dealership, located at 1720 Santa Monica Blvd.

Since the raid, many of those involved have been fired. The dealership's general manager, its

Jason Kozma is 'Mr. America'

BY PAM WIGHT

Special to the Daily Press

Jason Kozma is one of the rare people who realized his passion early in life and then capitalized on it.

After building a successful business as a personal trainer, Kozma started building his physique. The hard work paid off — the 34-year-old was named "Mr. America" last month.

As a child growing up in Nashville, Tenn., Kozma was inspired by his older brother to pursue bodybuilding.

"My brother was lifting weights, and everything he did I had to do," he said. "So we built a gym in the basement and started working out down there."

This year's Mr. America contest was held on Oct. 23 in Santa Clara, Calif. Last year was the first year that the contest had regained status after several years of relative obscurity.

Once considered the Oscars of bodybuilding, the contest dates back to the 1930s. A loss of sponsorship was responsible for the lull.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ Everyone’s imagination (including yours) runs haywire. Try to funnel this gift and use it constructively. Work with individuals, not groups. Brainstorm. This process could go on for a while. Funny, outrageous moments just happen. Tonight: Time to direct this intensity elsewhere.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★★ Others pop up with solutions, ideas and requests. The boss might not be as helpful as you’d like. He or she might be into dreaming up more ideas. Work with those who are willing and present with the moment. Tonight: The world is your oyster.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★★★ Dig into work. You might not have an alternative, especially if you would like to leave the office on time. A new idea or different approach will work well. Your creativity shakes up others, though you might find another person playing devil’s advocate. Tonight: Plan on calm.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★★★ Your imagination knows no limit. Your humor invigorates others, encouraging them to focus and find solutions. Do research. Find experts. You might start thinking about splitting and going out of town. Tonight: Take care of your responsibilities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★ You might not want to open up like you normally do. Some Lions could opt to stay home and work. Partners mean well and could inspire you. Your comments could be a lot more sarcastic or sharp than you realize. Screen calls if possible. Tonight: Order in.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★ Indulge yourself. You might have been eyeing a new purchase that you really want. Just make sure you are going to get a good buy. Stop and pick up a card or token affection for someone you care about. Tonight: Curb your possessiveness.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★★★ You are the cat’s meow with the Moon in your sign, charging you with energy and magnetism. Family might be touchy. Pick and choose your words, as you really don’t want the War of the Roses. Be a smart Scorp. Tonight: Your wish is another’s pleasure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★ Don’t allow others to pressure you. By proceeding like this is a normal workday, you’ll accomplish a lot. A call or compliment puts a smile on your face. Keep plans and ideas to yourself. As you mull them over, you could change your perspective. Tonight: Take some personal time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★★ Clear out work and add a touch of socializing as you roll into a very social 24 hours. You might want to investigate an expenditure that could help your public appearance or professional status. Tonight: Hook up with your friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Getting out of work and allowing your professional responsibilities to take a back seat will take tremendous effort. Knowing this, invite associates out for a late lunch, and let what is natural unfold. Tonight: In the limelight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★★★ Read between the lines. What others don’t say might be more significant than what they do say. Detach and don’t trigger. Start thinking about a fall or winter getaway. Stop and get some travel brochures. Tonight: Follow the music.

Climbing toward success

Ceremonial candles were recently lit to celebrate back-to-school night at St. Joseph Center's Sisters For Success annual dinner with the theme, "A New Year, A New You." Eighteen mentors, teens, parents and staff attended the ceremony that highlights affirmations, relationships and goals for the coming year.

"We try to build the connection between mentor, teenager and parent that will have the greatest constructive impact on the teenager and the community," said Maria Alderete, coordinator of volunteers. "They (the parents) expect St. Joseph Center to affect the teens in a way that will encourage them to make positive choices in their lives."

Sisters For Success strives to meet the considerable needs of teenagers through self-esteem building activities through various programs that expand their horizons and envision a brighter future. Activities include camping trips, visits to businesses, health talks, volunteering, conferences and college scholarship resources.

"I want my daughter to stay in school," said one participating parent. "I want her to take advantage of all the opportunities for success."

Applications are currently being accepted for volunteer adult mentors to work directly with teens enrolled in this program.

"We are looking for success-oriented men and women to mentor boys, 11-14, and girls, 13-17, who will focus on developing good study habits and building self-esteem," Alderete said. "The program requires a commitment of 12-15 hours per month, and fingerprint and driver's license clearance is required."

St. Joseph Center assists more than 7,000 working poor and homeless adults and children, veterans and seniors each year to achieve self-sufficiency through emergency services, food distribution, case management, child care, job training and senior services. For more information call (310) 396-6468, ext. 325, or visit www.stjosephctr.org.

The Q-Line

The Santa Monica City Council is considering letting businesses have a portion of residents' coveted parking spaces — spaces that are currently restricted to outsiders in certain neighborhoods.

Although no official action has been taken, some members of the council think businesses should be able to have their employees park in residential neighborhoods. They believe it would free up parking spaces on major thoroughfares for customers.

So this week, Q-Line wants to know, "Is this a good idea? Should residents give up some of their parking for businesses?"

Call (310) 285-8106 before 5 p.m. on Friday and we'll print your responses in the weekend edition. Please limit comments to less than a minute. It might help to think first about the wording of your response.

finance department manager and sales manager have been replaced. Some of them are named in the lawsuit. Honda of Santa Monica is owned by North Carolina-based Sonic Automotive, which owns car dealerships across the country. Sonic reportedly bought Honda of Santa Monica in 1999 from Kramer Motors Incorporated, which is also named in the class-action lawsuit.

Deputy District Attorney Dana Aratani declined to say who would be charged in the case until the investigation is complete.

“We’re getting things together in the next few months,” he said. “These kinds of things take a long time, but we are mindful of getting this case going and making our charging decisions soon.”

Aratani, who works in the DA’s consumer protection division, said his office is still gathering evidence from thousands of pages of documents both on paper and in the computers seized from the dealership. Aratani said investigators just recently found more evidence inside additional computers.

“We took a lot of computer information,” he said. “The amount of storage we found was amazing.”

DA spokeswoman Sandi Gibbons said last month that it’s not unusual for complicated cases like this one to take up to five years to prosecute. However, Gibbons told the Daily Press the day of the raid that she expected the investigation to take “weeks.”

The lawsuit alleges the dealership defrauded its customers by adding false state taxes and fees, lying to customers about interest rates and tricking customers into making extra payments on vehicles they wanted to buy or lease.

Dan Hoffman, the attorney handling the civil case, said the lawsuit has been put on hold.

“We are waiting for the criminal side of it to be resolved,” he said.

One scam allegedly used at Honda of Santa Monica added to purchases a fictitious state tax called “VT Registration.” Customers were told the fee was for Department of Motor Vehicles registration, the suit alleges. However, the state has no such fee.

Customers who have signed onto the lawsuit allege they had been given favorable deals in the showroom only to have the dealership’s finance department renegotiate the deals afterwards. Such a practice is forbidden by state law, according to the lawsuit.

Overcharging for a car allows the dealership to pocket a higher profit. In itself, it isn’t illegal to strike a deal where the buyer and seller agree. In this case, however, the fraud allegation stems from deceptive practices surrounding the sales. Extended service contracts and additional accessories directly benefit Honda of Santa Monica and its employees through commissions and revenue for the company.

The suit says that since 1998, the dealership would require customers to first lease cars for four months before buying them. The dealership would then collect two sets of payments — one for four months of leases, and the other for the subsequent purchase.

Some customers allege that they were tricked into extended service contracts, which would add thousands of dollars onto the purchase price.

Honda of Santa Monica officials have said in the past that they have replaced nearly the entire finance and sales departments and have instituted safeguards to ensure that no more scams will occur.

The Better Business Bureau of the Southland has lifted its “unsatisfactory” rating of the dealership Honda of Santa Monica and on its Web site states, “Our complaint history for this company shows that any customer complaints brought to the company’s attention have been properly addressed.”

The exhibit is part of SMC’s yearlong 75th Anniversary celebration, which has a particular emphasis on alumni.

The program is for gifted visual art students who provide individual or small-group instruction in a studio environment. Similar to graduate-level studies, the program has sent students on to such universities as UCLA, California Institute for the Arts, Rhode Island School of Design and Claremont Graduate School, and has launched many successful careers in art.

Alumni in the show have donated works for the silent auction, and all of the proceeds will go to the mentor program through the SMC Foundation.

“This is the realization of a full circle,” said SMC art professor Linda López, who organized the show and the auction and has been a long-time mentor in the program.

“We get to see the results of a changing and experimental program,” López said. “We get to see what these former students have done with their lives. And our current students get to see our former students giving back to the program.”

Gallery hours are noon to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Friday, and 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday. The gallery will be closed Nov. 25-27 for the Thanksgiving holiday. For more information, call (310) 434-3434.

Proposition 66 spurred billionaire to action

BY BEN FOX

Associated Press Writer

IRVINE — Henry Nicholas was preoccupied. The billionaire co-founder of chip maker Broadcom was helping the company he used to run find a new chief executive officer. He was reacquainting himself with his family after years as a busy high-tech entrepreneur.

Frankly, he wasn't that political anyway.

But a late-night phone call from a former California governor less than 10 days before the November election was his political awakening.

Former Gov. Pete Wilson was seeking help to defeat a ballot measure that would have weakened the state's three-strikes sentencing law. Nicholas, whose sister was murdered 20 years ago by her boyfriend, was horrified to learn that polls showed Proposition 66 would pass by a wide margin.

"I thought 'You've got to be kidding. How does this get seven days away from the election?'" Nicholas said. "This is going to pass and criminals are going to get out. It's ridiculous."

Nicholas, who says he had never before given to a political campaign, shelled out nearly $4 million for a barrage of political ads, most featuring Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, in the final week of the campaign. Proposition 66 lost in one of the most stunning reversals in state history.

One lesson Nicholas said he got from the experience is that he can no longer afford to ignore politics, and he says he's now willing to spend some of his fortune, estimated at $2 billion, to influence public policy. Previously, he has donated only to charities.

"I think we saved California," he said in an interview at the University of California, Irvine, in an engineering hall named for his Broadcom partner Henry Samueli. "My faith in politics has been somewhat renewed by this."

Exactly how he plans to become politically active remains unclear. Nicholas, in the rambling style that made him one of the more eccentric moguls of the tech boom, won't give specifics but says his principal interests are education, technology and the rights of crime victims.

Nicholas, who says he does not plan to run for any office, describes himself as "mostly Republican," but came out of the Proposition 66 fight as a fan of Schwarzenegger — a rising GOP star who he believes risked political capital on a potentially losing battle — and Oakland Mayor Jerry Brown, who alienated liberal allies by opposing the effort to water down the three-strikes law.

Brown, a former governor who is preparing to run for state attorney general, said he had never met Nicholas before the campaign against Proposition 66. But he praised the businessman for playing a key role in defeating a "huge get-out-of-jail free card," for thousands of inmates.

"He felt strongly about it and he had the means to do something about it. Without Nicholas' money and Schwarzenegger, it would never have happened," Brown said of the measure's defeat.

The state's three-strikes law, adopted in 1994 largely in response to the murder of 12-year-old Polly Klaas, calls for a 25-years-to-life prison term for a felony offender who has two previous serious or violent felony convictions.

Proposition 66 would have required the third felony to be either serious or violent and would have eliminated provisions of the law that classified crimes such as burglary or arson under those categories. Opponents claimed the ballot measure would release 26,000 prisoners while supporters, who feel that three-strikes is unduly harsh, said it would only be about 4,000.

In any case, voters had at first seemed inclined to change the law. A Field Poll in early October showed Proposition 66 passing with 65 percent of the vote. That began to change in the final three days of the race with a burst of television and radio ads funded primarily by Schwarzenegger and Nicholas. The measure lost, winning only 47 percent of the vote.

"We've never seen anything like it," said Mark DiCamillo, director of the Field Poll. "We've seen turnarounds extend over a number of weeks but 1.5 million California voters changed their minds in the week before the election."

Nicholas' money helped, but it wasn't the deciding factor, says DiCamillo, who attributes the result mainly to Schwarzenegger's ability to persuade the public to take a harder look at Proposition 66. "This guy happened to latch on to a cause that had a powerful message and a powerful messenger," he said.

For Nicholas, the primary motivation was his passion for the rights of crime victims, which comes from personal experience. He won't discuss his sister's murder except to point out that the man who killed her would not have been released by Proposition 66.

He said he would accept some minor modifications to the three-strikes law such as allowing a judge more discretion to not impose 25-years-to-life on someone who has many years since their previous crimes and whose third strike is a drug offense. But otherwise, he believes the overall concept of the law is solid.

"At some point in time, the punishment should fit the criminal," he said. "There has to be a vehicle for putting a person away forever because he can't be rehabilitated."

Because Proposition 66 garnered as many votes as it did, many expect the issue will return, perhaps as another ballot measure. Nicholas says this time he will pay more attention. "I'll start earlier and I'll crush them," he said.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Residents will rise up for parking

Editor:

In response to the article "Residents, merchants to share parking," by John Wood (SMDP, Nov. 11, page 1).

Isn't there a way to improve the parking and traffic congestion experienced here daily in Santa Monica, a better way than to suggest that businesses have the same right to park on our residential streets as we do? It has not been much more than a year or two since we fought and won the battle for preferential parking permits, allowing us, the residents, a place to park on, or around our block. Yet, already there is a discussion on the table for the Santa Monica City Council members to divvy up the available space yet again. I won't name names just yet, but there are certain council members who must play to the crowd, and I don't mean the residential crowd, if you get my point. I'm sure you know who they are.

I am happy to share whatever I have enough of to go around, but here, at least on my block, 1500 Euclid Street, there is never enough parking, not for the residents, and not for the visitors. We are hardly willing to give up the few precious resources we have as residents, many of us apartment dwellers; our coveted parking spaces won't be given up without a brutal battle.

It's always been rough here, South of the border. The Montana Avenue border, that is. Unless of course you're a small business, or, a not-so-small business, like the car dealerships that sprawl across our community like its crowning glory. For them, it's a pretty square shake.

There seems to be one set of plans for the Montana neighborhoods, and still another for those living South of her bounty. It's always the little people who get the brunt of the negotiations.

This might be one that gets negotiated right back at them.

GUEST COMMENTARY BY ROBERT GARMONG

Saving Private Ryan from the FCC

On Veterans Day 2001 and 2002, ABC stations nationwide broadcast "Saving Private Ryan," uncut and uninterrupted. The film, an extremely realistic portrayal of the D-Day invasion, was presented as a celebration of the American soldier's indomitable will to meet and defeat any enemy. But now Private Ryan has met a homegrown enemy: the Federal Communications Commission.

Fearing FCC punishment, more than 20 ABC stations refused to broadcast the movie, which includes violence and obscene language.

They have good reason to be afraid. After the Super Bowl "wardrobe malfunction," the FCC declared war on free speech. Million-dollar fines have been levied, and a new "three-strikes" policy will automatically revoke the license of any station with three indecency violations on its record. Even more ominous, FCC commissioner Michael Copps has vowed that he will not be satisfied until "I see us send one or two ... cases for license revocation."

In this headlong rush to expand the government's authority over the media, no one has paused to consider whether the government should have such authority in the first place. No one has noticed that the very existence of the FCC is a flagrant violation of the right to free speech.

Throughout history the norm was tyranny over the mind. Men were allowed to speak only by government imprimatur, until America's First Amendment established freedom of speech as a central premise of our nation. The First Amendment demands that "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." This language could not be clearer, or more absolute: No matter who disagrees with you or why, the government may not abridge your right to say it.

Free speech protects the rational mind and its literary, intellectual and scientific products. It means the absolute right to express one's views, so long as one does not violate the rights of others. Free speech means no American should fear the fate of Galileo, persecuted for daring to assert scientific truths that contradicted official church doctrines, nor that of Socrates, put to death for offending the state.

Yet the FCC exists to dictate what can be said on-air. Since the early days of radio, every broadcast station must apply to the FCC for permission to use the airwaves. Stations that fail to serve the "public interest," as defined by the FCC, can be fined, or even shut down, without appeal.

No one else in America is subjected to such persecution. If a homesteader clears land for farming, we recognize that he owns the results. If an inventor creates a new device or a piece of software, we give him a patent on it. Yet a broadcaster, who creates from scratch all the ideas, all the programming — even the electromagnetic vibrations that allow us to receive it in our living rooms — is allowed to do so only at the mercy of the "public interest." If the New York Times or Barnes & Noble publishes or distributes content of which some members of the public disapprove, we do not threaten them with fines or penalties. But let Howard Stern offend a listener, and Clear Channel is hammered with more than $1 million in fines.

Broadcasters are running scared. Clear Channel has canceled its shock-jock programs. Skittish station-managers have bleeped out words from the Rush Limbaugh program. Most ominous, The National Association of Broadcasters convened a "Summit on Responsible Programming" to define industry-wide standards of self-censorship.

So far, only "indecency" has been targeted by the FCC's crackdown — but politicians on both sides of the aisle have begun whispering demands to censor PBS or the Fox News Channel, on the grounds that their alleged biases violate the public interest. Both the Left, with its political correctness, and the Right, with its puritanical religious ethics, claim to speak for the "public interest." Can it be long before the two sides begin the battle over which ideas and values Americans are allowed to see and hear on-air?

America was founded on the freedom of speech, on the right and responsibility of the individual to decide what to listen to and what to say. Yet in the name of protecting ourselves from being offended — and almost without noticing it — we are well on the way to surrendering that crucial right to the control of the omnipotent state.

Seeing the world as healer proves life is worth living

HIP TO BE SQUARE

BY CAROLINE BODKIN

Ever since I can remember, I've had faith in the good life. That life will be good. And that, even when trouble strikes, things will turn out fine.

I've believed that hardship makes us stronger, that things happen for a reason, that people are inherently good and that we will all surely find our places in this world if we are open enough to see it.

And so I've expected a lot from life: deep love, great job, warm home, healthy kids, periodic adventure, peace, quiet and kindness. I've always believed life would hold countless, unforeseen joys, even if it was the joy that comes from finding truth in sadness.

Most of all, I've always believed I could do whatever I set out to do. I was one of those kids who believed her parents when they said, "You can do anything you put your mind to."

I don't know if this makes me an optimist or naive. But it's kept me happy.

Then there was a shift. It started just over two years ago. After feeling like a success for most of my life, I had spent enough time feeling like a failure that I started to believe I was one. And slowly, the confidences I'd always had in my hopes were replaced by doubts.

Can I do this? Am I good enough? Will I make it? Do I deserve it? Can I love? Can I be loved?

My belief that life was mine to make was being replaced by a sinking feeling that life could pass me by.

Three months ago, this haze of doubt started to lift. I'd written some things I was proud of. I was getting more work. I was busier. I was moving again. Whatever had been tying my hands was loosening. But I knew I needed some guidance. I was feeling better, but I didn't trust myself enough to believe I was better.

After having so much self-doubt, how could I be sure that any signs of recovery were actually worth taking seriously?

I went to get a psychic reading last weekend. This is something I've done before, and it's something I believe is worthwhile if you're talking to someone who's genuine, which I was, and if you're open to what they do and say, which I am.

I wanted someone to take a look at my life, and tell me what she saw, because I still didn't trust what I saw.

Did I want to be told that things would be OK? Maybe. And I knew going with this agenda was a risky proposition: My perspective on myself had been through a rough patch. If she saw what I'd been seeing, I'd hear bad things.

But maybe she'd see something better. Something I couldn't anymore.

I walked into her brightly lit apartment and sat down, a bit fidgety. But her warm eyes quickly made me feel at ease and before I knew it, we began. She spoke, and I listened. And as I listened, I began to realize that I was hearing her speak to the hopes I'd had for so long, but had nearly given up.

I found myself listening to the life I'd always thought I could have, but had then started to doubt was possible. I was told to trust the life I'd picked for myself, that I'd done so for a reason. I was told, in simple terms, for the next hour, that my life was mine for the making.

Close to the end, she shook her head and smiled broadly at me, and she said she was rarely able to give anyone that much good news.

Was the good news mine? Could it be mine?

I sat there nodding, and then smiling, and then laughing, and then glowing. My life is mine for the making. "It's time to go make your life," she said, and then she opened her arms and gestured toward me and said again, "This is the making of your life."

I can make my life.

The same body that had been walking through a haze of doubt was suddenly proud, filled with spirit, and sure again.

Seeing her is what I needed. We all seek guidance in different ways. I had felt so closed for so long ... it was good to be open to something again.

The making of your life. I walked out. I kept repeating that phrase "the making of your life." And with each step, I began to make it again.

Life is full of hope.

But the 80 competitors in this year’s show was a significant jump from last year’s 30, and it looks to be on the rise again.

Kozma became interested in bodybuilding at age 12 when his brother competed in his first show. At 16 years old, he entered his first competition, going on to win the novice and teenage divisions at the Tennessee state level.

Soon, college life overtook his competition schedule as he worked to finish his degree in business administration at Tennessee Middle State University. It was 12 years before Kozma would compete in a bodybuilding competition again.

“I was going to college, I was busy with life,” he said. “I was trying to get my life and career together and stuff like that. Bodybuilding is not a cheap sport to do. The food’s expensive, and you need time to train.”

The life of a successful bodybuilder is characterized by inviolable self-discipline. Every morsel of food is analyzed for fat, carbohydrate, protein and calorie content.

“Before a contest is when you’re dieting to increase definition for a bodybuilding competition,” Kozma said. “You’re trying to lose as much body fat as possible while retaining as much muscle mass as possible. Ideally, a pre-contest diet is between eight and 16 weeks. Anything more gets to be too long, and you lose too much muscle.”

Kozma lifts weights six days a week, whether he is training for a competition or not. Off season, Kozma eats between 4,000 to 5,000 calories a day. Prior to a contest, he cuts back to 2,500 to 3,000 calories, and reduces his fat intake drastically.

Going into the Mr. America contest, Kozma’s body-fat content was 1.8 percent.

“That’s an incredibly unhealthy amount of body fat,” he said. “You wouldn’t want to be walking around like that for long ... your organs would probably fail.”

But becoming a personal trainer was still an integral part of Kozma’s plan. It would allow him to perfect the art of physical fitness while helping other people attain their fitness goals.

Determined to pursue his dreams, Kozma left for California at 22 years old, soon after earning his degree.

“I came to California because it’s the only place where you can be a professional trainer and you don’t have to be anything else,” he said. “I didn’t want to be a part-time trainer. I always wanted to be a trainer. This is my dream job.”

Kozma employs five trainers to help train nearly 20 people a day during his busy seasons. Firmly confident in his talents, Kozma insists that no client is a challenge to train.

“I know how to teach,” he said. “I used to teach karate for years, so I’m a good teacher. I mean, if somebody doesn’t do as I say, that’s not my fault. I don’t get frustrated about it. I’ve been doing it long enough where I can be choosy about my clients.”

Kozma spoke to the Daily Press about what led him to his Mr. America victory and about his life as a personal trainer.

After being off for 12 years, what made you enter this contest?

“Between this year and last year I became aware that they were holding the show again. Because as far as I knew it was still on hiatus. And I found out it was in California. So I said ‘I’m going to do that show.’ It’s a highly coveted title.”

What got you back into the bodybuilding?

“My personal-training career was doing really well — well enough to where I didn’t really need to push it. It was sustaining itself. I didn’t really have to worry about income, so I could focus on the next level. I was training with this trainer over at Gold’s, and I started seeing a lot of improvements, and I got my physique back. I only started competing again when I thought I could win. Because I was bouncing the idea around for a few years, but I said I wasn’t going to get back on the stage until I was confident I could win. I don’t just compete to compete. I compete to win. Some people do it just for the thrill of competition.”

What was your training regimen like leading up to the Mr. America contest?

“My training regimen is the same year-round as far as weight training. It doesn’t change. Off season, I lift weights an hour a day, a half an hour of cardio. And pre-contest, I lift weights for an hour to an hour and a half and an hour and a half of cardio.

“Pre-contest, I cut my calories down. I actually went through two dieting phases because I did some shows earlier in the year as well, then I took a month off. And then I did it again, so I did two four-month diets. That wasn’t the best for my physique, but I still pulled a win out.”

How strong are you?

“I bench 455, and I leg press 1,600 for four reps. I’ve done squats with about 650 for four reps. It’s not a factor in the contest, but the more weight you lift, the bigger your muscles get. You won’t find any bodybuilders who can’t lift heavy weights.”

What do judges look for?

“It’s strictly visual. They look for primarily size and symmetry, which is equal development right and left, and proportion, which is the size of each muscle in relation to the other one. Shape and proportion.”

What possesses you to do this?

“I do it because I love it, and I’m good at it. And because it gives me something to train for, a goal to strive for, which is why I started doing it again.

Did you know you wanted to be a personal trainer and a bodybuilder since you were a kid?

“I never have been able to imagine myself wearing a suit and going to an office. There is quite a sense of accomplishment seeing people change. It feels great. If I didn’t love it, I wouldn’t do it.”

If you didn’t do this, what else would you do?

“I have no idea what I would do. There’s no such thing as ‘what if.’ ‘What if’ doesn’t exist. That’s part of my Zen philosophy.”

Since your life is so regimented, do you ever just eat whatever you want?

“No, there’s always a voice in the back of my head. Like, for instance, I can’t eat fettuccini alfredo because I’m like, where’s the protein? And it’s all fat. It does limit the foods that I allow myself to eat. Sometimes I think, ahh maybe I’ll go splurge, but then when I go someplace and I’m looking at the menu, I’m looking for the item with the highest amount of protein and the lowest carbs and fat. I just automatically do that. Because if I eat the crap that doesn’t fit my criteria, then I feel bad about it. I’ve been like that ever since I started competing because that’s when I really started to learn about diet. And I became aware that it made a difference.

“Here’s a quote for you: Most people don’t believe that what they eat affects the way that they look and how they feel. They don’t believe that it’s true. They know it’s true, they hear the words, but they don’t really believe that it’s true. So they don’t change their behaviors. That’s why people will come into the gym, work out everyday for four hours and don’t lose any weight, don’t look any better, don’t change their bodies at all. That’s because they don’t believe that the food they eat affects the way they look and feel.”

How do you know what to do with each client?

“I do what they need. I train them the way they need to be trained. And I know pretty much every way that you can do strength training and weight training. I don’t have to study in my free time to do it. It’s all in my frontal lobe. I train them three days a week, I have them do cardio for six days a week, and I have them go on a diet that I create for them ... I start them on the real thing right away because they need to get results. People lose motivation if they don’t get results quickly.

“It’s a lifestyle change. For a successful change in body composition, you have to change your lifestyle. And some people, regardless of what you tell them, they think it’s a temporary project. I’m going to do this for eight weeks and then ... but their lifestyle is incompatible with having a great body.

When someone calls me and says, ‘I’m thinking of getting a trainer,’ I say, ‘When you’re done thinking about it and you want to do it, then give me a call.’ So I don’t do any selling. I don’t convince anybody to do it.

“Anybody physically can have a great body. It’s not genetic. It’s 95 percent behavior and 5 percent genetics. Even morbidly overweight people will say, ‘Well the whole family is like this.’ I say it’s because you all have the same behaviors, not because you’re supposed to look that way. Some people have faster metabolisms than others, but that can be adjusted somewhat with certain foods and exercise and by eating the right foods at the right times. Weight training speeds up your metabolism.

Do you ever binge eat or drink?

“Yes, I love pizza. Drinking, pre-contest I don’t, but off season very occasionally. I’m pretty structured. Club hopping and stuff like that — that is not what bodybuilders do. I don’t get hammered every night.”

What was the night before the contest like?

“When I was first coming back to do the shows I was very nervous. I couldn’t sleep, I wasn’t sure what I was going to do. But this year I was much more relaxed, so I could sleep eight to 10 the night before. I’m not up late at all. I don’t worry about it. Especially for the Mr. America, I was very relaxed, very confident.”

That's surprising since it's your first competition at that level.

"Yeah, at that level, but I don't get nervous about the level of the competition. You go, and you do it. Once you're there, the people that are there are there, and you look the way you look, and you can't change anything at that point."

What could go wrong in the final days before a contest?

"You could eat too many carbs. You could accidentally consume sodium and retain water. You have to manipulate your diet pretty severely in the last few days before a competition in order to get all of the water retention off so you look more cut. So miscalculations with sodium or carbs can really screw you up. You see some guys get nervous, and then they lose confidence in their plan, and then they deviate from their plan, and that's usually where they screw up."

How are you different from other trainers?

"Everybody's got a different philosophy. A lot of trainers will go with what they've read in the magazines, or go with the latest crazes. I don't do any fads. All of my methods are tried and true and proven methods that get results. The current fad is functional training where you'll see someone moving multiple limbs in multiple directions, like lunging while twisting, and stuff like that. I stick with the standard weight training you see in the gym — bench presses, squats, rows, curls..."

"That's my opinion, but my opinion is an educated opinion. A person gets a trainer because they want to look better, not because they want to function better. Just by lifting weights, doing a normal, standard weight-training routine, people's bodies will function better, and they'll be able to move better anyway."

What would you generally tell people about working out every week?

"Three days of weight training, then what they do for cardio is totally dependent on what they're trying to do. If they're trying to lose weight, they should do cardio probably six days a week for one hour. A half hour just to maintain their present condition. Three days of cardio a week will not produce sufficient results, or it will only produce short-term results. That's not enough work ... resistance training I usually recommend three days a week.

"It is a lot easier to maintain the great body than to achieve it. It takes way more work to lose weight than to keep it off. And most of the routines that you read in the magazines are maintenance routines because they don't want to scare people off. So they give you a work-out that consists of what, three exercises, 20 minutes of cardio, and then some ridiculous diet with cottage cheese and crackers."

What kind of cardio do you do?

"I do the elliptical or walk on the treadmill or stationary bike. I never run. Running destroys muscle tissue faster than it burns fat. Running is very hard on your body. Bodybuilders never run. You burn more calories running but not fat. So you're burning carbs and protein. It depends on what your goal is."

What are your favorite and least favorite things about living in Santa Monica?

"The ocean is my favorite, and my least favorite is the fact that there are too many people. That's just the way it is. I chose to live here because it's the most pleasant place to live. The rest of Los Angeles is dog meat. Venice is a sty filled with drug addicts and criminals. The Marina is nice but too urban. You've got neighborhoods here. Trees, the beach, it's walkable. And it's accessible. You can get into town pretty quickly. Malibu is also next to the water, but it's very far from downtown. I came out here and was driving around, and I found Santa Monica. I said, 'This is nice.'"

Canadian immigration site's hits rose after election here. The Canadian immigration Web site had 115,000 hits the day after the election — from the U.S. alone. We usually only get 20,000 hits.”

There was so much interest that a Vancouver-based Internet company, Communicopia, set up a new Web site this month — www.canadianalternative.com — to suggest Canada as a viable option for its American clients, including anyone concerned about constitutional bans on gay marriage passed in 11 states this month.

“We invite you to get to know Canada,” the site says. “Explore the richness and diversity of our regions. And find out why Canada is the perfect alternative for conscientious, forward-thinking Americans.”

Another Web site urges Canadians: “Open your heart, and your home. Marry an American. Legions of Canadians have already pledged to sacrifice their singlehood to save our southern neighbours from four more years of cowboy conservatism.”

Canada suddenly has utopian appeal for many left-leaning Americans. Its universal health care, gay rights, abortion rights, gun laws, drug laws, opposition to the Iraq war, ban on capital punishment and ethnic diversity mirror many values of the American left. Immigrants, including an estimated 1 million Americans, make up nearly 20 percent of Canada’s population. The United Nations named Toronto the world’s most multicultural city.

And, as Michael Moore pointed out in “Bowling for Columbine” — required viewing for many lefties — in Canada there’s apparently no reason to lock your door. Combine that with hockey, terrific needle exchange programs and moose — hey, what’s not to love?

Well, all the extra U’s (colour, neighbour ...), for one thing. It’s cold. The baseball’s not very good — so long, Expos. And the taxes are higher, eh?

But, as one American who has his bags nearly packed likes to say, at least the taxes go toward good causes.

“I just like their way of life a lot better, and with everything the Bush administration has done — for the American people to give him their seal of approval, it’s basically the last straw,” says Ralph Appoldt, a resident of Portland, in the barely blue state of Oregon.

“Canada’s basic population is much more intelligent, polite and civilized. I like their way of government a lot better. Their tax dollars go to helping those who need it, instead of funneling money back up to the wealthy and feeding this huge military-industrial machine.”

Appoldt, 50, a sales manager, and his wife, a nurse, figure that selling their house and getting their immigration approved could take more than a year. But they’re moving, they insist. They’ve already hired Kischer to help them.

Though he may see a good business opportunity following the election, Kischer has no illusions of a mass American exodus to Canada. Yanks have to follow the same procedures as everybody else — including the $500 application fee, the $975 landing tax, and the wait of six months to two years. He only expects about 100 people

Reasons cited for making the move

By The Associated Press

Reasons to move to Canada, as cited by www.canadianalternative.com:

1. Canada has universal public health care.
2. Canada has no troops in Iraq.
3. Canada signed the Kyoto Protocol environmental treaty.
4. More than half of Canada’s provinces allow same-sex marriage.
5. The Canadian Senate recommends legalizing marijuana.
6. Canada has no law restricting abortion.
7. Canada has strict gun laws and relatively little violence.
8. The United Nations has ranked Canada the best country to live in for eight consecutive years.
9. Canada abolished the death penalty in 1976.
10. Canada has not run a federal deficit since 1996-97.

at each of the how-to-move-to-Canada seminars, all scheduled in blue states — Dec. 4 in Seattle, Dec. 5 in Los Angeles and Dec. 6 in San Francisco.

Nancy Bray, a spokeswoman for Citizenship and Immigration Canada, said her agency’s Web site received 261,000 hits from the United States in the two days following the election, but it’ll be many months before officials can guess how many of them were serious.

“Our interest, our goal, is to attract the best possible immigrants,” Bray says. “If there’s a lot of publicity about our country, that’s to our benefit. But we’re not interested in people’s political leanings or political dissatisfaction.”

Jason Mogus, Communicopia’s chief executive, said that while his company wanted to help interested Americans, moving to Canada should be plan B.

“We strongly encourage Americans to stay and build a culture in line with their values,” Mogus said. “In other words, stay and fight.”

‘View’ co-host married in star-studded ceremony

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Star Jones, co-host of ABC’s “The View,” married banker Al Reynolds in a star-studded Park Avenue bash.

Notables ranging from Spike Lee to Sen. Hillary Clinton packed into St. Bartholomew’s Church Saturday to watch Jones, 42, who wore a a designer strapless wedding dress with a 27-foot train, exchange vows with Reynolds.

“The train was so long it took about seven people to carry it,” said friend and guest Valerie Simpson, songwriter and half of the R&B duo Ashford and Simpson.

With songstress Patti LaBelle performing, and a bridal party including Natalie Cole, Vivica A. Fox and Holly Robinson Peete, the storybook wedding lasted until 8 p.m. before moving to the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel for an equally celebrity-heavy reception.

“I smiled a lot,” said Jones’ “The View” co-host Barbara Walters. “I was happy for her. She had the biggest smile I’ve ever seen.”

MARQUETTE, Mich. — Entertainer Bill Cosby poked fun at Michigan’s Upper Peninsula in a performance at Northern Michigan University.

“Why are you people up here?” Cosby asked the crowd of more than 6,800 people Friday night at the Berry Events Center. “Didn’t you know there was nothing up here when you came to visit the campus?”

“I called my wife before the show, and she asked what it was like up here, and I said, ‘I don’t know where I’m at.’ It’s an eight-hour drive from downtown.”

Marquette, with a population of about 20,000, is the Upper Peninsula’s largest city. Cosby’s routine included jokes about college life, relationships, and parents and children.

“I don’t care who you are or how much money you make, men, when you take your child to college, you will carry luggage up three flights of stairs while your wife and daughter pretend they’re looking at the architecture of the campus,” Cosby said.

HONOLULU — Teenager Bethany Hamilton, an inspiration to many when she returned to surfing after losing her left arm to a shark, swapped “board stories” with Gov. Linda Lingle.

Lingle told the 14-year-old Hamilton on Friday she surfed for the first time in September.

“It was something I really enjoyed, something I’ve wanted to do for at least 25 years or so,” Lingle said.

The two spoke when Lingle thanked Hamilton for filming an anti-drug message for the state. The 30-second public-service announcement begins airing on local radio and television stations this week.

“I did this because I’m against drugs, and I think that’s a main problem in Hawaii that a lot of people get caught into,” Hamilton said.

She autographed a copy of her recently released autobiography, “Soul Surfer,” for the governor.

WINNETKA, Ill. — The house where newspaper columnist Mike Royko penned hard-edged articles on Chicago politics and life is being torn down by its owners.

The demolition began Thursday despite pleas from preservationists who say the California Craftsman home has historic value, The Chicago Tribune reported Friday.

Officials of affluent Winnetka, north of Chicago, considered the house the best example of California Craftsman design in the village.

Designed by a local architect in 1906, the house was molded in the Craftsman style, which featured handcrafted wood detailing, wide eaves, low gables, built-in storage space and tiled fireplaces.

Ownership by Royko, a columnist for the Chicago Tribune who died in 1997, added to the house’s significance, said David Bahlman of Landmark Preservation Council of Illinois.

“Not only are they destroying architecture of note, they are destroying history,” Bahlman said of the new owners, John and Catherine MacCarthy.

The MacCarthys, who bought the house from Royko’s wife, Judy, for $1.8 million earlier this year, plan to rebuild on the lot.

The MacCarthys did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Former President Ford said he often walked past a vacant lot where the Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy will be housed when he was a student at the University Michigan in the 1930s.

Ford spoke to about 400 people gathered Friday at his alma mater for a groundbreaking ceremony for construction of the Joan and Sanford Weill Hall.

“When I came to the university in 1931, I brought a $100 check from a principal of a high school who wanted to make darn sure that I went to a school in Ann Arbor,” Ford said.

“I never would have thought when I plunked that $100 down 73 years ago that I’d be involved in a ceremony of this kind. ... But strange things happen.”

The school’s Institute of Public Administration was renamed the Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy in 1999 in honor of Ford, the nation’s 38th president.

The school will be housed in an 80,000-square-foot facility with classrooms, a library, research centers, a computer laboratory, faculty offices and public space for conferences and lectures.

Construction on the building, which will serve as a gateway to the university’s central campus, is to be completed in August 2006.

Ford, a standout center on the football team, graduated from Michigan in 1935.
