NEWS OF THE WEIRD

BY CHUCK SHEPARD

In September, a Roanoke (Va.) Times story documented the righteous complaint of Melissa Williamson, 35, that street construction noise outside her home in southeast Roanoke, especially by jackhammers, would have a harmful effect on her unborn child, then two months from term. The published Times story ignited a firestorm of reader mail because it was accompanied by a candid photo of Williamson in her front yard, looking annoyed at the construction mess, but puffing away on a cigarette.

Promenade in-line skating law fails

BY JOHN WOOD

Daily Press Staff Writer

CITY HALL — There will be no in-line skates allowed on the Third Street Promenade.

In his last meeting on the dais, City Councilman Mike Feinstein last week failed to convince his colleagues the ban on rolling transport shouldn't be applied to skates.

Feinstein, an avid in-line skater, spoke passionately against the current law, saying it unfairly discriminates against a group of residents that doesn't readily organize. Biking, skateboarding and skating currently are banned on the popular, pedestrian-only walkway.

"This is a public space that we have spent millions of dollars to create essentially a public watering hole, and it's not about whether one goes there to shop, it's about whether our city center is open to skaters as well as anyone else," Feinstein said. "We are in effect banning them from going there as far as when they go out."

In-line skaters, unlike skate-boarders, don't pose a threat because the skates are attached and can't get away from the rider, argued Feinstein, who said banning skates on the Promenade unfairly shuts out skaters, who don't normally carry shoes with them.

"There's a disturbing trend that I felt on this council the last few years of a lack of tolerance for alternative lifestyles," Feinstein

Marine mammals now have new hero

BY KATHLEEN BISHOP

Special to the Daily Press

Despite having a contentious relationship in the past, city officials this month handed over their marine-mammal rescue operation to the Whale Rescue Team, a specialized nonprofit organization.

Don Umer, manager of Santa Monica's animal control division, said last week a collaborative decision was recently made between City Hall and animal control officials to make the Whale Rescue Team's founder, Peter Wallerstein, the first person to call for any marine-mammal rescue. Animal control had been in charge of rescues, but will now be used to assist the Whale Rescue Team on an as-needed basis. Marine mammals include seals, sea lions, dolphins and whales.

Santa Monica had been the only city from Will Rogers State Beach to Wilmington that didn't call on Wallerstein first when marine mammals needed to be rescued.

The Whale Rescue Team has rescued 152 marine mammals and

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
 ★★★★★-Dynamic ★★★★★-Positive ★★★-Average ★★-So-so ★-Difficult

 ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Mix friends and travel. Hop in the car and explore a flea market or favorite spot. Your good humor is enhanced by getting away from the daily grind. Friends join in as you explore a new shopping spot. Tonight: Try a new restaurant.

 TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ You have many great ideas, but making them real is a whole other story. Brainstorm with friends who might be more grounded. Together you'll figure out a way to make a certain dream a reality. Tonight: Your treat.

 GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Seize the moment when you are at your best. If you have a sweetie or special person in your life, take off for a day trip together. Both of you will relax and transform in a different environment. Be more loving and caring with others. Tonight: Anything is possible.

 CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Use your time to get a fun holiday project done, or start organizing your home or garage. Look to the long-term when making a decision on spending. Talk to a loved one about an expenditure. Together you'll come up with great ideas. Tonight: Take it easy.

 LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ You cannot help but say “yes” to a request or invitation. You might be putting a loved one or a new friend on a pedestal. He or she can only tumble off. Careful. Listen during conversations. Chat the day away while doing something you love. Tonight: Dinner with a friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Others don't hesitate to ask for more of what they want. You could be tired of being at the center of all the activity. Do something that's important to you. Consider buying a new holiday outfit. Tonight: A must show.

 LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Take an overview with loved ones and children. If you are single, right now you could easily meet someone quite exotic who could show you a different lifestyle. Be open to trying something new. A movie could be appealing as well. Tonight: Escape.

 SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ You find a partner or friend to be very demanding. You might wonder what is best to do. Don't wonder and just follow along. Fun and games happen when you relate closely with this person. Reveal more of yourself. Tonight: Add spice to your love life.

 SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ You don't need to do anything but simply follow the lead of others. You have a good time wherever you are. Treat a friend or your pals to something special. Follow your strong intuition, and you'll gain. Tonight: Find a place with music.

 CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Your mind revolves around the practical. Some might go shopping, while others decide to get a head start on work. A family member or older friend needs your attention. Nurture others more often. Tonight: Just don't do anything you don't want to do.

 AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ It's Saturday — act like it! Be more playful, and allow others to let down their hair as well. Examine your long-term desires later. Your job is to have a good time. Indulge in a favorite sport or pastime. Tonight: You could be quite wild. Why not?

 PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★ Family demands your attention. You might want to start getting ready for the holidays. Not everyone is in the same mood. Make that OK and follow through on your desires. Your instincts are right-on. Take some time alone. Tonight: Order in.

City garden plans sprout

By Daily Press staff

How does your garden grow? Find out how the city is making its plans to build one using less water.

City staff and representatives from the consulting firm Meléndrez Design Partners have begun designing the latest in a series of water-efficient demonstration gardens at Ashland Walk, considered an important corridor to the ocean for residents of Ocean Park and visitors to Main Street.

The public is asked to attend a meeting scheduled for Saturday, Dec. 4, to get an update on the proposed garden components and express thoughts about the city's ideas for the open space.

The meeting will take place from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. at the Ken Edwards Center, 1527 Fourth St. Metered parking is available at the Ken Edwards Center. Free three-hour parking is available at Santa Monica Place, across the street. The Ken Edwards Center is served by the Santa Monica Big Blue Bus lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 9.

A look at war through a monk's eyes

By Daily Press staff

A transformed monk will be in the area this week to talk about his experiences in the battlefield.

Claude Anshin Thomas went to Vietnam at 18 years old, where he received numerous medals, including 27 Air Medals, a Distinguished Flying Cross and the Purple Heart. He witnessed horrifying cruelty, narrowly escaped death on numerous occasions, and also was responsible for the death of several hundred Vietnamese.

Today he is a monk in the Soto Zen tradition and an active speaker and Zen teacher in the United States and Europe. He has made peace pilgrimages through war-torn regions of the world and across America. He is the founder of the Zaltho Foundation, a nonprofit organization that promotes peace and nonviolence. In his first book, he not only tells his dramatic story but also helps readers understand the seeds of their own suffering, and by so doing, allow themselves to heal.

Thomas is currently on a national speaking tour of the United States. His Los Angeles area appearances include:

The Q Line

Macerich Co., which owns the Santa Monica Place mall, recently unveiled its plans to raze the current mall and replace it with three 21-story luxury apartment towers. There also will be an extension of the Third Street Promenade to Colorado Avenue and two other high rises with retail and office space, affordable housing and park space.

Some love the plan, which will generate millions of dollars for the city by creating a new downtown. Others say it will ruin the Santa Monica skyline.

So this week, Q-Line wants to know, "Do you support the idea? Why or why not?"

Call (310) 285-8106 before 5 p.m. on Friday and we'll print your response in the weekend edition. Please limit comments to less than a minute. It might help to think first about the wording of your response.

Educators' salaries competitive, but not enoughEditor:

Re: "Administrators take top school salaries," SMDP, Nov. 22, page 1).

Your recent article on salaries in the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District could lead your readers to think there is ongoing rift between teachers and administrators in our district, as they debate the allocation of our scarce resources. On the contrary, our teachers and administrators have rejected the "us versus them" mentality that plagues so many public school districts, and instead work together every day to improve the education our students receive. Moreover, our Board of Education recognizes the essential roles and contributions of both groups, and has strived to offer compensation packages that can attract top-notch educators for every position. Some key facts may help your readers understand what our district has done.

According to both the National Education Association and the American Federation of Teachers, the two national teachers' unions, California teachers earn the highest salaries in the nation. In 2002-03, the average teacher salary in California, $56,283, exceeded the national average of $45,891 by 22.6 percent. Adjusting for California's high cost of living drops the state's teachers to 11th in the nation, but this is still noteworthy given that California's per student spending is 31st in the nation, unadjusted, and near the bottom of the list when cost of living is taken into account. California public school districts manage to pay teachers competitive salaries despite the state's stingy funding for public education by devoting a higher fraction of expenditures to teachers than most other states and hiring fewer teachers than they would like; the state's student-to-teacher ratio of 20.2 is the fourth worst in the nation.

Closer to home, teacher pay in SMMUSD ranks favorably when compared with other unified (i.e., K-12) school districts in California and in Los Angeles County. According to Ed-Data, in 2002 the lowest salary on our district's salary schedule, $39,021, exceeded the state average by 11.9 percent and the county average by 6.1 percent (my calculation). The highest salary on our salary schedule, $78,442, outpaced the state average by 13.3 percent and the county average by 6.3 percent. The California Teachers Association, the state teachers' union, reports that between 1999 and 2003 teacher salaries in our district increased by a cumulative 21.1 percent, fourth highest among the 46 unified districts in Los Angeles County and easily surpassing the county average of 17.7 percent. Our district also offers teachers generous benefits and stipends for advanced degrees and for National Board certification. The conclusion is clear: SMMUSD offers teachers a highly competitive compensation package and has done everything it could to enhance teachers' earnings in recent years despite the state's budget crisis. The justification is just as clear: Teachers are the heart and soul of our district, and without smart, talented and dedicated teachers we cannot hope to offer students an excellent education. We are fortunate to have been able to attract a cadre of outstanding teachers to our schools.

With regard to principals, the California Teachers Association reports that in 2002-03 their average salary in our district was $104,091. This figure exceeds the county average of $98,527 for unified districts by 5.6 percent (my calculation), which mirrors the "premium" our district pays teachers. A teacher quoted in your article suggested that the salary differential between principals and teachers provides an incentive for teachers to leave the classroom to become administrators. While on the surface this may appear to be the case, in fact few teachers opt to become principals. Contemporary principals require extensive special training, and they are expected to be educational leaders of their schools, as well as top-flight administrators, plant managers, communicators, motivators and data analysts. Under our district's contract, moreover, principals work about 220 days annually, compared with 183 days for teachers. Not surprisingly, finding experienced and effective principals is extremely difficult despite the seemingly high salary. Our district has been fortunate to recruit numerous superb principals in recent years.

In my opinion, all educators are underpaid. I believe this not because I like most of them — although I do — nor because I admire their hard work and unflagging dedication, which I do as well. Rather, I believe it's because they are charged with one of the most crucial responsibilities in our society: Educating future generations to be productive, informed and socially conscious citizens of a democratic nation. What educators earn does not come close to reflecting the worth and importance of their contributions. More consequential, it is insufficient to attract into the profession enough talented young people to meet future students' needs. Addressing this problem is one of the greatest challenges facing local, state and federal governments in an anti-tax age; the failure to address it will have incalculable long-term costs that all Americans will bear.

José Escarce*President, SMMUSD Board of EducationTeachers, administrators paid way too much*Editor:

Your Monday Nov. 22 edition ran a tad late so I had to read it Tuesday. I was shocked at the article in that edition about the educators' salaries. I am appalled at the salaries that the SMMUSD administrators and teachers have finagled from the school board out of the school budget. The bulk of the school budget ought rightfully be earmarked for the sole benefit of the children, and aggressively stewarded by an impartial committee to protect the community's huge investment in the schools. At the extravagant salaries that these "Top 30" administrators and teachers are now given, using just basic arithmetic skills to factor, each and every one of the "Top 30" is able to become a millionaire in 10 short years, and that's not factoring in any of their other lucrative perks and benefit packages.

Nobody can tell me that these educators ever were or are currently underpaid, or that they deserve any further salary or benefit increases, at least not for a long time. The city of Santa Monica has clearly been ripped off for its several recent "one-time" gifts of millions of dollars to the district under the clever guise that the district had a budget shortfall. We now see what really caused the so-called shortfall. Greed. The real underlying reason to first beg, and then threaten (Jaffe/Davis and supporters et al, to drastically change the city charter for guaranteed skimming off of taxpayers' monies) the city for additional huge amounts of scarce funding was clearly to further and unnecessarily enrich these school district administrators and teachers, who had already enjoyed fat salaries and abundant perks and benefits in the first place. The next time the school district and the Jaffe/Davis camp have their greedy hands out for more huge money, just say "no." They are all like hogs at the trough, never to be satisfied.

Real Christmas means looking beyond the phonies

HIP TO BE SQUARE

BY CAROLINE BODKIN

I love the holidays. I love family, I love cookies, and I love the way a house smells with a tree in it. I love spending entire afternoons thinking about just one person as I shop for his or her gift. I love wrapping. I love elves.

I love it all.

This year, right after Thanksgiving, I'll begin my celebrations early. I'll kick-start my Christmas spirit by buying a whole stack of holiday-themed magazines so I can spend any spare moments looking for fun gift ideas or good mulled cider recipes.

The magazines, their saturated colors and the portrayals of the ideal holiday are mesmerizing. All that gloss, all that cheer. Man, those pictures are beautiful. Wreathes on the door, fire in the fireplace, a warm, happy family unwrapping carefully chosen, high-quality presents. This, to me is what a real Christmas looks like.

I wanted one. A real Christmas of my own. Some day. I'll really go for it, give my decorating hand a try and make my home a little place of warmth, my family the recipients of thoughtful, maybe even hand-crafted gifts. I'll have a real Christmas family and a real Christmas. This is my daydream.

The images all around me in the magazines and commercials have become part of my daydream from years past. I paid close attention to them, taking mental notes of what a real Christmas looked like, knowing I'd have one some day.

I'd have a real Christmas.

Real Christmas was beautiful. It was perfect.

And yet, even with all this daydreaming, it terrifies me.

Because I'm not a decorating genius. I'm not even a homemaker, nor am I Santa's Helper. And I can't afford fancy gifts, I don't have time to make my own wreathes or knit my own stockings, so I know my holiday will fall short. My home will never be as lavishly decorated. My cookies will never be as moist. My gifts will never be as gracious. My Christmas will never be as real.

These thoughts saddened me. It didn't bring me to tears or ruin my day. It was the kind of sadness that a kid might feel when being chosen last in gym class. I felt unpopular and unskilled.

So I tried to accept my shortcomings and let go of my fantasy, but I couldn't escape these images of the real Christmas. They were everywhere, all the time.

Then, two days ago as I was passing through a very nice neighborhood, I came across a film shoot. Cameras and lights were set up in a beautiful old Craftsman. I asked someone what was going on, and they told me it was a Christmas commercial for a certain card company. You know, the one who practically owns the holiday.

I stood there, zoning out, just gazing at the house. I could see through the open front door. I stared at its beautifully decorated inside. Perfect tree. Perfect wreath. Perfectly wrapped presents. This, I thought again, is what a real Christmas looks like.

Breaking me from my reverie, one of the producers yelled at someone to retrieve the talent from their dressing room. A man scampered over to a nearby RV, knocked on a few doors, and after a second, two adults and three children emerged: A handsome man; a beautiful woman with red curly hair; a very cute little boy who looked like the man; and two girls, roughly 3 years apart and very similar looking, with cute curly hair like the woman's.

This was the family to match the house, the tree, the gifts. The real Christmas family.

That's when it hit me. As I watched the groomed and perfectly assembled "family" walk toward the perfectly decorated, very warm "home" to recreate this company's vision of what America's Christmas should be, I realized ... This isn't a real family. This isn't their house. They did not put up those decorations. This is not where they'll celebrate Christmas.

I thought about my own family's Christmas. I thought about my loved ones' Christmases. I thought about mixed families and divorced families and non-Christian families and families who can't afford gifts and families who choose to only give one, the people who work at soup kitchens on Christmas Day and the people who need them and the people like me who don't have the decorating gene.

A million images of Christmas came to mind. Some of them looked like the inside of that well decorated set, and some of them did not. But all were good. All were right.

All were real.

(Caroline Bodkin lives in Los Angeles and will see snow for Christmas. You can send your comments to her at hip-tobesquarebybodkin@yahoo.com).

Feinstein plans to take at least six months off

continued. "Just because somebody feels uncomfortable about the presence of somebody else, if there's not a demonstrable public-safety record there, I don't believe it's appropriate to ban somebody's access for something that's legal to a public space."

A handful of people spoke in favor of the ban, including several senior citizens, arguing the public walkway is safer with only pedestrians. Some residents also worried that City Hall would make itself vulnerable to added lawsuits by legalizing skating on the Promenade.

"It's the police department's opinion that because of the intense number of people that can be on the Promenade on foot — especially persons that are either young, elderly, disabled or tourists that really have this wide-eyed look about them, it's almost like Disneyland's Main Street — that those people, even though the in-line skates are in fact attached to the people's feet, are still a hazard," said Santa Monica Police Department Sgt. Ira Rutan, who oversees patrols downtown and on the Promenade.

Rutan added accidents on the Promenade would be inevitable, even for skilled skaters. Since January of 2003, Rutan said his unit has issued 5,709 advisories to bikers, skateboarders and skaters on the Promenade, with an average of eight or nine warnings a day. Only 70 citations have been handed out, and four of them have been to in-line skaters, he added.

The proposal, which would have tested lifting the ban for a year, garnered support from Feinstein and City Councilwoman Pam O'Connor. Mayor Richard Bloom voted to keep the ban, as did City Councilmen Ken Genser, Bob Holbrook and Kevin McKeown. City Councilman Herb Katz was not present. Katz and McKeown had backed the concept at an earlier meeting, but McKeown said he changed his mind after hearing from numerous residents on the subject and, with Katz absent, the proposal failed by a vote of 4-2.

Last week's meeting was the last for Feinstein, who, after eight years on the council, placed ninth this November among 14 candidates running for four open seats on the Santa Monica City Council. Three incumbents were re-elected, alongside challenger Bobby Shriver.

An emotional Feinstein spoke at length about his tenure on the Santa Monica City Council at the start of Tuesday's meeting. Despite a difficult loss at the polls, Feinstein said he was excited to leave behind the responsibilities of the council and focus energy on himself. For at least six months, he'll make few commitments, Feinstein added.

"We only grow personally when our freedom is expressed in a context," said

Feinstein, referring to a night after first being elected in 1996 when the responsibility of being a councilman hit him.

"The longer I stayed in office, I always tried to just do my job as well as I could, despite my personal biases, by saying, 'What is the best thing for the community at large?' and using that as my personal barometer," Feinstein added. "I really, really, really am thankful for the honor and privilege to do this."

Marine-mammal rescue will cost Santa Monica $1 per year entation and seizures. During the slower fall season, the Whale Rescue Team can sometimes go a week with no rescues.

Wallerstein in the past has been critical of Santa Monica's handling of marine mammals. He contacted Mayor Richard Bloom, Santa Monica's Environmental Advisory Committee and other city officials about his concerns. He called for reforms in the department, or for the Whale Rescue Team to be named as the primary responder. Wallerstein questioned the training of animal control officers, the equipment used to catch animals and the city's commitment to helping sick or injured animals.

Umber said Santa Monica animal control, which is a branch of the police department, is a full-service department and many officers have training in marine-mammal rescue. However, since the surrounding cities used the Whale Rescue Team for all of their rescues, Santa Monica officials said having animal control be the primary responder here was confusing for lifeguards and anyone who wanted to report sick or injured animals on the beach.

"It's about having the best possible response," Umber said.

Any criticisms animal control might have had of Wallerstein's methods will no longer be an issue, said SMPD Lt. Frank Fabrega.

"He (Wallerstein) is the first responder," he said. "If he says it's going to be done this way, that's how it will be done."

Wallerstein was pleased with the change and said it is what's best for the animals. He wants to overcome any differences between himself and animal control officials.

"Even when they've given me problems, if it came down to working side by side to help an animal, I've always acted professionally and I've always welcomed their help," Wallerstein said. "I work with animal control officers in other cities, and we really get along quite well. It shouldn't be any different in Santa Monica."

Wallerstein hopes to improve marine mammal rescue with equipment and expertise that he thinks will better serve animals. He is on call 24 hours a day and uses a custom cage he designed himself to transport animals to the Marine Mammal Care Center at Fort McArthur. Additionally, he sees this as an important step in his long-term vision for marine-mammal rescue. He eventually wants to hire a professional marine-mammal rescuer to replace him, as well as open an alternative care center for when the Fort McArthur center is full. He also wants to create a whale and dolphin rehabilitation center, since the only one in Southern California is at Sea World in San Diego.

The Whale Rescue Team has been helping with rescues in the area for 21 years and was incorporated in 1992. In 1996, Wallerstein approached cities and asked them to allow him to be the primary responder for rescues. His contract with Santa Monica as a secondary responder began in 1998.

The organization is funded completely by membership and private donors. Wallerstein charges cities $1 a year for his services. Though the savings for the city can't be calculated, Fabrega said the most significant savings for Santa Monica will be in personnel time.

Canadian immigrant who raised me very much on ‘You can be anything,’” Ross said. “I realize now as a grown up that I had a lot of inner drive. I think part of it was being the middle child, and the well child — my brother was crippled in his leg so I was always like, ‘I’ll do it, I’m fine, I’m fine ...’ But that gave me tremendous drive. Like, ‘By golly, I’m going to get out of here.’”

Ross’ father worked for the interstate power company, and her mother had been a teacher before concentrating on raising her three children.

She credits her mother’s progressive ideas and active involvement in civic organizations such as the League of Women Voters for planting the first seed of belief that she could aspire to bigger things.

And dream she did, through all of those long, cold Minnesota winters.

“It was a secret that I wanted to be an actress,” Ross said. “My arm would shoot up when a teacher said ‘Who would like to memorize this monologue from Shakespeare?’ I used to think, how would I ever get out? I would read about actors, and it seemed like they were born and then all of a sudden they were famous. I would think, ‘How did they get like this?’”

Rather than a hindrance, Ross believes that dreaming of stardom from afar was what kept her from giving up.

“If I had been raised in Hollywood or Santa Monica, seeing the industry close up, I might have thought, ‘Well, I can’t do this,’” Ross said. “But because I was so far away, I didn’t quite know how impossible it really was.”

When she was in the 12th grade, Ross’ family moved to San Diego.

The following year Ross began attending San Diego State University, where she majored in drama and earned the title of “Most Outstanding Actress” during her freshman year.

While in college, Ross began performing at the renowned Old Globe Theater in San Diego.

After her performance at the La Jolla Playhouse, director Mel Ferrer was impressed enough with Ross to introduce her around Hollywood, and by the time she was 22 years old, she was under contract with Paramount Pictures.

But life was not without its bumps.

At 40 years old, Ross endured a painful divorce and was left with two children to support.

“I had this terrible sense of being a failure because of my divorce,” Ross said. “In fact, I found that I was prejudiced against divorced people, and I would think, ‘Surely you can work on that,’ and, ‘Can’t you just get along?’ And then there I was, and it was like, ‘Look at you Miss Smarty Pants.’”

Now at 76 years old, Ross lives with her long-time companion, actor Paul Michael. And she is still busy as an actress.

She has recurring roles on “The Gilmore Girls” and as Drew Carey’s mother in the “Drew Carey Show.”

Most recently, Ross managed to squeeze in time to film the 30-year anniversary reunion show of “Happy Days” with the original cast. It will be aired in February.

The Daily Press caught up with Ross at her chalet-style home in the San Fernando Valley.

What made you want to be an actress?

“I don’t know the moment. But I’m always curious about people, especially kids who are like 13. They’re very malleable, and they have a lot of dreams that can get squashed during that uncomfortable teenage period. And maybe if you’re not dating and you’re not the most popular kid in school, you need to find something where you’d be special. I wanted my name on the marquee. There’s this story, when I was 12, I got this little prayer book for my confirmation with my name in gold letters. And it said ‘Marian.’ And I didn’t like the way it looked. I thought this is not going to look good on the marquee. So I changed the spelling to ‘M-A-R-I-O-N.’”

“And now I’m the spokeswoman for the town of Marion, Ill. They saw this story on the Internet and asked me to be the spokeswoman, because you know, there’s the water tower with the name ‘Marion’ on it, and the ‘Bank of Marion.’”

What was your most challenging role?

“I think ‘Brooklyn Bridge’ was the most challenging. Because my character was so totally different from me. The director would say it’s a miracle. He said, ‘You walk into your dressing room Marion Ross and you come out Sophie Berger.’ In that show I played a Jewish grandmother.”

How did you prepare for that?

“I would say to Paul, take me down to Canter’s on Fairfax, take me there so I can see those Jewish people, and listen to them talk. I have tremendous sympathy for them. That character was easy in a way ... I have a theory that we carry within us the cells of everyone, so as an actor, you can tap into so many different kinds of people. You sap up things. The research is very unconscious. If I’m talking to a clerk or something, I’ll say, ‘Where are you from? What’s your accent? Who are you?’ And my children always say, ‘Mother, you always stare at everybody.’ And I say, ‘I’m sorry, but I’m thinking maybe I’ll play them someday.’ How interesting people are, the way they move, and the way they talk ... it’s not always conscious.

“A lot of people aren’t interested in people. They know every dog and horse, and they don’t look at you in the eye. What’s more interesting than someone’s life story? I’ll think, ‘How did you get like you are? Where did you come from?’ It’s fun. In fact, this is an interesting thought. I read that men like to look at pictures of women, like the outside of women, like Playboy magazine, but women, we are worse because we look at the inside. We want to know everything inside of them. Inside their brains. Isn’t that interesting? Talk about a snooper, huh?”

Did you experience any life-altering events in your life?

“Oh, yes. My divorce. I really think you have to hit rock bottom and be broke, and be so up against it that you look at this lump of coal in your hand from every angle and you say, ‘Oh, it’s as bad as that. Well it can’t get any worse, can it? And then how can I make this better? How can I work my way out of this?’ There’s no where to go but up. Just little by little ... but you know, I had a wonderful mother, a lot of good background in my life. So I was thinking if a woman was in a jam like that, she might not have that kind of reference. And I was also very spiritual. I was reading the Bible a lot during that time ... to rebuild myself.

“Usually divorce comes after a long wearing down ... the sense of failure was kind of a surprise, though. But because I did it, oh, I gained a sense of being indestructible ... you’re stronger in the end. Nobody really helped me. My mother would say, ‘Bye darling, you’re going to be just fine.’ I thought what a wonderful attitude. In other words, you can handle it. But I would go on interviews (for parts) ... I love this ... they always would say, ‘Tell me about yourself.’ They wanted to know your credits, of course. And I would cry and say I’m getting a divorce. And they’d say, here, take the part. It’s a saga. And ‘Happy Days’ of course really saved the day.”

How did you get the part in “Happy Days?”

“Well by then I had been an actress for years and years, and I had stopped a while and had children, and then got divorced. Then I went on an interview to play Ron Howard’s mother on ‘Happy Days.’ And the part consisted of ‘Oh, Howard, you’re not eating.’ That kind of thing. And then the part got better and better and better as the years went on, and we did 11 seasons.”

Do you keep in touch with the cast?

“Oh very much. In fact we just filmed the ‘Happy Days’ reunion show, our 30th anniversary show. And it will be on in February. We filmed a softball game, and then we had everybody come here because I call this house ‘Happy Days Farm’ — so I said I want everybody to come, and they said it might be 150 people, and I said, that’s OK, come straight from the ball game, no cleaning up, and when they were all here we had a big party. You know, they’re all so wonderful. Henry Winkler’s a wonderful guy. Ron Howard is a wonderful guy. Tom Bosley is a wonderful man. And Gary Marshall who created the whole thing ... In fact he is just now preparing a ‘Happy Days’ musical in which we’ve all been recast by younger people. And I saw a version of it a couple of years ago, so it should be very good. And it will have all new music by Paul Williams.

“We’re all in contact very much.”

Are sitcoms fun to do compared with movies?

“Comedy’s hard. But I like the feel of sitcoms. I play Drew Carey’s mother on his show. I like the family that’s created on the sitcoms, and working together. It’s like you’re making a little play every week. And I like that form. I’m very good at working with other people. There’s a lot of give and take. You’ve got to roll with the punches. Like ‘Friends’ was like that — my daughter, Ellen Plummer, was writing for ‘Friends.’ That was before she moved on to the new show ‘Joey.’ But it takes a long time before a series is at that point that the audience knows them so well. And they don’t want the show to be over.”

How did you end up being the Santa Monica switch flipper?

“They asked me to do it. It’s wonderful. The older I get, the more I appreciate Christmas. I love the lights. And you get worried a lot because you never think you have enough money. But it’s such a good time to think about who was I with who was wonderful to me? Who should I try to remember? I think it’s better than the New Year for that. I love the festivities and the fact that it makes people think of other people. You know, like Toys for Tots and things like that.”

Do you have any other connection to Santa Monica?

“Do you know that I lived in Santa Monica for the first years of my marriage on Ocean Avenue, along the park ... I love Santa Monica. I lived there for five or six years, until I had babies.”

What do you love about it?

“I love the ocean, I love the lifestyle, it’s different from the Valley. But we got more house for the money living in the Valley. But Santa Monica has a great ambiance. It’s more bohemian, more beachy ... it feels vacationy. When we first moved there, we went to the beach every day. Every year we went down less and less. But there it is, it’s beautiful. I love the air. It’s always so festive with lots of tourists. There’s always something going on down there.”

Holiday food drive gets in gear

By Daily Press staff

The Westside Food Bank is holding its annual Holiday Food Drive to combat hunger in the neighborhoods it serves.
Until Dec. 23, the public can drop off canned goods at the food bank’s warehouse, at 1710 22nd St., Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., or by appointment.
Large barrels for food collection also are being distributed to schools, religious congregations and businesses throughout the Westside.
The Westside Food Bank supplies food to 65 social service agencies in Santa Monica, Venice, Culver City, West Los Angeles, Inglewood and West Hollywood. The food bank now reaches more than 80,000 people each year, nearly half of whom are children.

Status of lost tourists unconfirmed

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Any army spokesman who said two British and American tourists who disappeared 10 days ago while attempting to climb a volcano had been located may have been incorrect, another Nicaraguan army official said Friday night.
Briton Nicholas Roth, 28, and Jordan Alexander Ressler, 23, of San Diego were spotted by an army helicopter flying over the 4,600-foot Maderas volcano, 60 miles southeast of Managua, army spokesman Col. Adolfo Zepeda told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.
Zepeda said authorities didn’t know if the pair was alive or dead.
But, several hours later, the head of the army’s public relations department, Capt. Guillermo Centeno, said the Zepeda had offered information that “still hadn’t been confirmed.”
Centeno refused to say the earlier report was wrong, however.
Zepeda said the army had “prepared a search and rescue helicopter to bring troops into the zone,” where the tourists had supposedly been located. Centeno said the army was continuing that search.
More than 40 rescue workers have been searching since last Saturday for the two missing tourists, but dense fog and heavy rains had impeded their search.

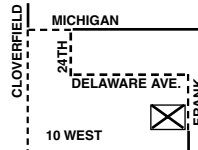

Ship’s injured crew rescued

By The Associated Press

MCKINLEYVILLE, Calif. — A Coast Guard helicopter rescued two injured crew members from a container ship about 30 miles off the Humboldt County coast, authorities said Friday.
The Coast Guard received a radio call for help at 1:45 p.m. Thursday from the Tai Harvest, a 600-foot Panamanian bulk carrier heading from Los Angeles to Portland, Ore., according to Lt. Shawn McMillan, a Coast Guard spokesman.
Two of the ship’s crew members, who carried Chinese passports, were seriously injured when they fell about 50 feet into an empty cargo hold. Both men suffered leg injuries; one broke his back. Other crew members were unable to extract the injured men.
The Coast Guard deployed an HH-65A helicopter and a rescue boat. But soon after the boat arrived, rescue personnel discovered they couldn’t board the ship because its ladder was unusable.
A rescue swimmer was lowered from the helicopter to help the injured crew members, while the helicopter hoisted three others from the rescue boat to the ship. Running low on fuel, the helicopter had to return to the station for refueling.
The helicopter then had to hoist the two injured men directly from the hold — a task made more difficult by bad weather and reduced visibility.
“It was pretty dramatic,” McMillan said. “It was at night, very foggy conditions, so you are hoisting down a black hole, basically.”
After about four hours, the two men were flown to the Arcata-Eureka Airport, then taken to a hospital in Eureka, where they received treatment. On Friday, they were transferred to UC Davis Medical Center, where they remained in stable condition.

Lobbyists' gifts passed on to lawmakers' staffs

By The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — Free drinks, tickets to pro basketball games or to rock concerts are passed out to lawmakers and their staff members regularly by companies with a financial stake in the operations of state government.

The gifts are legal as long as the givers report them every three months.

The California Chamber of Commerce has spent the most so far this year, according to a report in the Los Angeles Times. The chamber spent $129,500 between January and September, according to the newspaper's review of 50 companies and groups that reported gifts to the secretary of state's office.

Telephone company SBC Communications ranked second, with $119,300 spent on gifts such as golf games, steak dinners and tickets to concerts at Staples Center in Los Angeles and to the Olympic track and field trials in Sacramento.

The givers aren't buying votes with the gifts, but they are getting access, said Michael Josephson, founder of the nonprofit Josephson Institute of Ethics in Los Angeles.

"I don't think these kinds of gifts are equated with bribery," Josephson said, "but they're grease."

Petroleum giant BP ranked third among companies for gift-giving, the Times reported. The company handed out $91,800 worth of tickets to ice-skating and circus shows, basketball games and concerts that give the recipient a seat in its luxury box at Arco Arena in Sacramento.

The company gets so many requests, it has set up a special automatic phone line for Capitol workers.

Most of the BP tickets have gone to lawmakers and their top staff members and families, but people who handle telecommunications, travel and security for the Legislature have also taken advantage of the line.

In January, BP gave Senate chief sergeant-at-arms Tony Beard and his wife tickets worth $193.74 to see musician George Strait.

"Is it nice to sit and drink what amounts to a free beer and eat a free hot dog? In my schedule, sure," said Beard, whose duties include controlling lobbyist access to lawmakers in the Capitol. Beard said he gives BP no more courtesy than any other special interest.

BP spokesman Dan Cummings said the ticket line has been used since the company acquired the suite at Arco in 1999. The phone message system, he said, makes it easier to handle the routine requests for tickets.

Josephson, who has conducted ethics seminars for state lawmakers, said the free tickets create an improper sense of entitlement among public servants and give BP a roster of contacts within the Capitol.

"In a world where getting an edge is part of our culture, that's not inherently immoral," he said. "But when you're dealing with public officials about whom there is already cynicism, all that this can do is contribute to that cynicism."

Under the Political Reform Act of 1974, lobbyists can spend no more than

"I don't think these kinds of gifts are equated with bribery, but they're grease."

MICHAEL JOSEPHSON

Founder of the nonprofit Josephson Institute of Ethics in Los Angeles

$10 a month on individual lawmakers or their staff. The companies they represent can spend up to $340 a year on gifts to Capitol employees, and they can spend unlimited amounts on gifts given directly to the employees' spouses and children.

At the annual conference of the Assn. of California Life and Health Insurance Companies at Pebble Beach in late September, insurance companies reported spending less than $340 on the lawmakers who took part in panel discussions about political issues.

But they spent $410 on golf and meals for the son of Assemblyman Ed Chavez, D-La Puente; $384 on meals for the wife of Sen. Jack Scott, D-Altadena; $493 on spa treatments and meals for the wife of Assemblyman Dario Frommer, D-Los Angeles; and $922 on airfare, meals and spa activities for the wife of Assemblyman Ron Calderon, D-Covina.

Many of the companies and groups that bestow gifts on legislative employees have done the same for the staff and appointees of Republican Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger. Former Gov. Gray Davis, a Democrat, banned his staff from accepting such gifts, but Schwarzenegger said this month that he sees no need for such a policy.

"There's no one selling out in my administration," he said.

Some lawmakers have refused to accept gifts and ban their staff members from receiving any.

"It's something I decided to do 12 years ago," said Sen. Debra Bowen, D-Marina del Rey. "It just felt like the right thing to do. I was concerned about the experience, the perception." Sen. Sheila Kuehl, D-Santa Monica, and Assemblywoman Jackie Goldberg, D-Los Angeles, have similar policies.

Lawmakers get a minimum salary of $99,000 a year and $138 per day of session for expenses. But many lawmakers still take the gifts.

Chavez and his family accepted $5,600 in gifts so far this year, the most of any lawmaker. Chavez did not return phone calls requesting comment.

Sen. Dick Ackerman, R-Fullerton, and his wife accepted $4,000 in gratuities, including $800 in Pebble Beach golf fees paid by Prudential Financial and $251 worth of Kings tickets from BP.

Ackerman said such perks have no influence over how he votes, and that he meets with more interest groups that do not give him gifts than those that do.

"They know generally how I'm going to vote," Ackerman said. "It doesn't matter if they give me a gift or not."

When politicians' words come back to bite them

BY TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush says politicians should say what they mean. But doing so can sometimes be an invitation to disaster, as Arlen Specter, John Kerry, John Snow and Bush himself can attest.

Specter, who supports abortion rights, nearly cost himself the chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee after he outraged social conservatives by suggesting recently that Supreme Court nominees who oppose abortion would have a hard time winning confirmation.

With Democrats likely to filibuster such a nominee, the moderate Pennsylvania Republican was simply expressing a political reality. But the timing of his remarks could not have been worse, coming as election-emboldened Senate Republicans looked toward filling top committee slots.

Specter had to grovel for support, promising to move expeditiously on all of Bush's nominees, including any who might oppose the Roe v. Wade decision that established abortion rights.

Treasury Secretary Snow, just weeks before the election, characterized reports of net job losses under Bush as a "myth" when he visited Ohio, which has lost many manufacturing jobs.

Bush went on to win Ohio and the election, but the remark struck a sour chord in an otherwise well-orchestrated campaign. Snow was referring to the fact that the Labor Department's survey of households showed employment gains during Bush's term, while the more-cited payroll survey showed a loss. That distinction was lost in the political hubbub.

Why do seasoned officeholders and politicians sometimes seem to have a tin ear?

"The fact that they talk a lot suggests they should be better at it. But it also gives them a lot more opportunity" to create problems, said Wayne Fields, an expert on political rhetoric at Washington University in St. Louis.

Furthermore, many such statements are on videotape, played over and over on 24-hour cable news outlets. "It's scrutinized, sliced and diced," Fields said. Also, many politicians "have the kind of egos that invite such mistakes," he said.

Kerry may wish he never said he voted for $87 billion to help pay Iraq war costs "before I voted against it." The Bush campaign used the remark repeatedly to ridicule him, both in television commercials and stump speeches.

The Massachusetts Democrat was seeking to explain that he voted no the second time because the $87 billion was not covered by offsetting tax revenues. Lawmakers frequently vote one way in preliminary votes and another way on final passage. But the political damage was done.

Bush's vow to get Osama bin Laden "dead or alive," his assertion that Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction and his premature "mission accomplished" speech all came back to haunt him.

There are many examples of words that politicians would like to take back — if they could.

Among them: Democrat Howard Dean's disjointed Iowa concession speech, ending with a scream; former President Clinton's statement that he had never had sexual relations "with that woman," White House intern Monica Lewinsky; the first President Bush's broken pledge: "Read my lips: no new taxes."

Also, Jimmy Carter's admission to "lust in my heart" in an interview with Playboy magazine as he campaigned for the presidency, and Bob Dole's assertion that all U.S. military conflicts of the 20th century were "Democrat wars."

Those statements all had far-reaching political repercussions — even though the speakers may have thought they were innocuous at the time.

They are not in the same league as more blatant utterances that have ended or severely damaged political careers.

Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., lost his post as majority leader after an offhand remark praising Sen. Strom Thurmond's segregationist presidential run. James Watt was forced to resign as interior secretary in the Reagan administration and Earl Butz was ousted as agriculture secretary in the Ford administration, both after cracking jokes that contained ethnic content.

For a politician to say something he believes to be truthful or well meaning, only to have it come back to bite, has been termed a "Mondale moment" by University of Virginia political scientist Larry Sabato. Mondale campaigned for the presidency in 1984 saying he would probably raise taxes if elected.

"Running as a tax raiser, that was a brilliant political move," Sabato said.

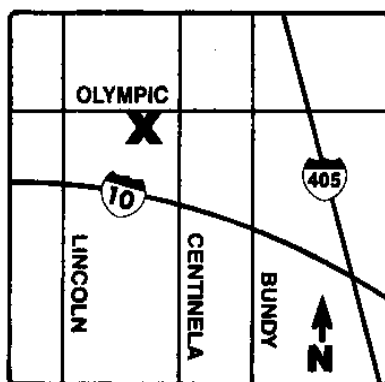

"For many of us, telling the truth is a moment of strength. But for politicians, it can be a moment of weakness, generally," Sabato said.

Change results in turmoil as CIA tries to adjust to Goss

BY KATHERINE PFLEGER SHRADER

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — When former CIA Director George Tenet said his farewells at a two-hour ceremony this summer, a deputy noted that 40 percent of the agency's staff had worked for just one chief.

It was a symbol of Tenet's endurance, seven years on the job, the second longest tenure of a director. It also was a mark of agency's growth during a hiring spree that began in 1998 and accelerated after the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

With Tenet's successor, former Rep. Porter Goss, in charge and making changes, one of the longer periods of leadership stability in the CIA's 57-year history is ending.

In an e-mail this month, Goss told employees of his plans for new procedures, organization and senior personnel. He reminded them that the CIA is a "secret agency," indirectly addressing media leaks widely believed to have angered the White House. Goss also said he intends to clarify "beyond doubt the rules of the road."

At least five top officials already have left the CIA since Goss took over.

There are those who view Goss' early moves as a purge. They worry that the Florida Republican who led the House Intelligence Committee until August is bringing a partisan background to an agency that traditionally has tried to avoid politics.

Others see the transition as welcome change for an agency criticized for major intelligence failures, including missing clues before Sept. 11 and botching the pre-war analysis on Iraq's weapons.

Former intelligence officials, both supportive and critical of Goss, say his situation is reminiscent of when Stansfield Turner took over the agency in 1977 or John Deutsch in 1995. Both made waves.

Deutsch inherited an embattled CIA, struggling with the Aldrich Ames spy scandal and disoriented by the dissolution of its antagonist, the Soviet Union. Deutsch brought with him aides from the Pentagon, many of whom managed to rub the CIA's establishment the wrong way.

Turner took over after a series of commissions found the CIA had kept files on U.S. citizens, directly plotted assassinations of heads of government and engaged in other abuses of power. The admiral brought in aides from the Navy, who some say were perceived as adversaries of the agency's career staff.

Goss has surrounded himself with close advisers from the House committee who have become embroiled in the recent turmoil at the CIA.

In an interview, Turner said Goss could not have come in without wanting to make changes.

While Turner gives Goss the benefit of the doubt, he questions how Goss and his aides are going about the transition.

"They seem to be a little ham-handed," Turner said. "That is, I think it would have been advisable for him and his team to take a little while and get to know the place."

To Richard Kerr, a former CIA deputy director who led the agency's internal review of the Iraq analysis for Tenet, "It has been a fairly rough transition so far."

Kerr and other officials are surprised about how public a series of high-profile retirements has been since Goss took over. Not all were happy partings, and it is unclear whether officials left voluntarily.

The undercover heads of the Europe and Far East divisions are stepping down.

The top two officials in the agency's Directorate of Operations, the clandestine service, left after conflicts with Goss' aides that came into the open when they were leaked to the media.

Goss' deputy director, John McLaughlin, who had been acting director, announced his retirement after a 32-year career. Goss has told agency employees he is working on recommending a replacement to President Bush.

On Wednesday, in an editorial in The Washington Post, McLaughlin urged "balance and thoughtfulness" in the discussion of intelligence changes. He said criticisms of the CIA as dysfunctional are "way out of line."

"Like the U.S. military, our nation's intelligence officers face daunting challenges now and for years to come," McLaughlin wrote. "Constructive criticism can help. Tirades and hyperbole will not."

Eugene Poteat, president of the Association of Former Intelligence Officers, said much of the current situation stems from mistakes on Iraq intelligence estimates, which he said by nature are best guesses.

"If you look at it objectively from the outside, if John McLaughlin was part of the team that made the wrong analysis, maybe he should retire. Maybe that is what the president and Porter Goss thought," Poteat said.

Attention is turning to changes Goss will make at the agency's other leading section, the Directorate of Intelligence, which is headed by Jami Miscik. A friend and colleague of McLaughlin's, she was heavily involved in the Iraq analysis.

Goss' moves also are under scrutiny by Democratic lawmakers.

Some were dismayed by a line in Goss' recent e-mail to agency personnel that said the CIA's job is to "support the administration." The CIA said that should not be interpreted to mean support the administration politically, but rather support it with intelligence.

In a letter to Goss, Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said she feared the "politicization of our intelligence services."

NBC Sports chief Ebersol survives plane crash

By The Associated Press

MONTROSE, Colo. — A charter plane carrying NBC Sports Chairman Dick Ebersol crashed and burst into flames during takeoff Sunday, killing at least two people and seriously injuring Ebersol and one of his sons. Rescue crews were searching for another son.

Dick Ebersol and son Charles Ebersol survived the crash at the Montrose Regional Airport outside this southwest Colorado town, NBC said in a statement through its Denver affiliate KUSA-TV.

The station said crews searched for Teddy Ebersol by helicopter and on the ground. NBC said the seat was missing from the wreckage.

Eyewitness Chuck Distel told KUSA-TV that one of the wings and the cockpit was ripped off the plane after it skidded sideways. "There were two people outside the airplane when we pulled up. Both of them pretty much were in shock," he said.

Montrose County Sheriff's officials said two people were dead. The network said the victims were the pilot and co-pilot. No identities were released, but KUSA said Ebersol's wife, actress Susan St. James, was not on the plane.

Linda McCool, a nursing supervisor at Montrose Memorial Hospital, said three men were brought to the hospital after the crash, but had all been transferred to other hospitals by Sunday afternoon. Dan Prinster, vice president of St. Mary's Hospital in Grand Junction, said two people were moved there from Montrose Memorial. Neither McCool nor Prinster would release any other information on the survivors.

The crash occurred in an area covered with small brush and cedar trees, sheriff's Communications Supervisor David Learned said. A large drainage ditch also is at the site.

A storm hit much of the state over the weekend and dumped more than 3 feet of snow in the area, but it was not known if weather was a factor in the crash. Montrose is less than an hour from the Telluride Ski Area, popular with celebrities.

The plane was on its way to South Bend, Ind. The plane's tail number was N873G, identifying it as a CL-601 Challenger registered to Jet Alliance of Millville, N.J. An operator at Jet Alliance said she had no information about the crash.

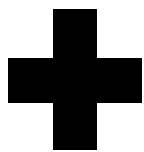

Investigators from the FAA and National Safety Transportation Board were en route to the airport, 185 miles southwest of Denver.

Ebersol has a long history at NBC. He became director of late-night programming at NBC in 1974 and replaced Lorne Michaels for a rocky tenure as executive producer of "Saturday Night Live" in the early 1980s. He became president of NBC Sports in 1989 and recently signed a contract that keeps him at the network through 2012.

Charles Ebersol is a senior at the University of Notre Dame.

Group works to save WWII-era black officers' club

BY MICHELLE ROBERTS

Associated Press Writer

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz. — As 69-year-old Thomas Stoney Sr.'s car slowly crests a small rise in the road, a building emerges from the knee-high yellow grass.

Its cream-colored paint is flaking. Plywood covers windows and doors. Inside is a jumbled heap of discarded light fixtures, carpets and ceiling tiles.

But Stoney, the president of the Southwest Association of Buffalo Soldiers, doesn't just see the building as it is today. He sees it as it was generations ago, when Lena Horne, Ella Fitzgerald and Louis Armstrong performed there, when heavyweight champ Joe Louis boxed out front.

His group is trying to restore the 1942 two-story wood structure.

"There she is. That building," he says, gesturing toward what was once dubbed the Colored Officers' Club. "She stands alone."

It didn't always.

Once, the building was among 1,400 structures hurriedly constructed to house, train and care for black soldiers destined for the North African and Italian battlefields of World War II. The other buildings are all gone now — torn down to save money and water.

But Stoney's group envisions the old officers' club as a research center for the role of black servicemen. They have begun collecting artifacts and are working to find the estimated $1.5 million to $2 million it will take to restore it to its WWII-era condition.

The building is unique not because it was a black officers' club. The segregated Army had others, but Mountain View Officers' Club, as it was also called, was the only one built for that purpose.

It's "the only building constructed specifically for the morale, welfare and recreation of black officers," said Stoney, a retired first sergeant who fought in Korea and Vietnam.

The building became a noncommissioned officers club in the 1960s and, later still, a recreation facility. Stoney used it as a soldier and managed it later as a civilian when he was the chief of recreation.

"I used to party here all the time as a young soldier," said Stoney, standing on the painted gray floor of the dark debris-filled ballroom.

Black soldiers had a long history at Fort Huachuca, which was established in 1877 to help defend the territory against American Indians. Troops from the all-black 9th and 10th Cavalries were stationed at Fort Huachuca in the 1890s.

But the real buildup occurred during World War II.

Before and following the 1941 Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, President Franklin D. Roosevelt called for a 227,000-man increase in the Army, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People pushed for equal involvement of blacks in the war effort, according to a report on the Mountain View building by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

In response, Roosevelt drafted black Americans in proportion to their makeup of the U.S. population.

In 1940, there were just 4,000 black enlisted men in the Army and a handful of officers. But by the height of the war, some 50,000 black servicemen and support staff were at Fort Huachuca alone, Stoney said.

The Army integrated in 1948.

The segregated military generally used black servicemen as cooks or builders, rarely allowing them into combat unless there were dire manpower shortages, said Robert J. Maddox, professor emeritus of American history at Penn State.

"The Army and the Navy reflected the prejudices of the time," he said.

Fort Huachuca was chosen as a location to train the 92nd and 93rd Infantry Divisions, made up of black soldiers, because it was isolated, and there were few people to complain about the influx of black servicemen, said Stoney and Tanja Linton, a spokeswoman for Fort Huachuca.

"It was no accident," said Linton. "It was a conscious decision."

In southern Arizona near the Mexico border, Fort Huachuca remains somewhat isolated — 30 miles from the nearest interstate. "In the 1940s, it was really isolated," Linton said.

Maddox said putting black soldiers in faraway places was in keeping with the practice of the times, though he couldn't say for sure if that was the case at Fort Huachuca.

"That they were put out in the boonies to keep the peace or something is not surprising to me," said Maddox, who has written several books on World War II and the Cold War.

For many years after WWII, the Fort Huachuca buildings for black servicemen remained in use. The Mountain View club served as a recreation building and then a theater until 1998.

But the fort had permission to level the officers' club along with the other WWII holdovers, all built in just six months, as the installation worked to control its water use, Linton said.

The buildings were meant as temporary structures, and the fort was under pressure to reduce its water consumption because of its proximity to the San Pedro River.

"You got an old building and that's nice, but it has leaky pipes," Linton said. "Every little drop counts."

Besides, they were magnets for unwanted critters, and old buildings are expensive to maintain, she said.

It took six years of negotiating between the Buffalo Soldiers association and the Army before they reached an agreement in April setting out plans for the association to raise money and eventually lease and renovate the building.

The association, with 85 members, has architects and engineers looking at the facility. It has also been holding dinners and other events to try to raise money. So far, it has gathered about $100,000, Stoney said.

Many people think the Army will renovate the building, but it won't, Stoney said. The money will have to come from donations and grants.

"Since we started this, this has started to consume my life," he said. "But I'm committed to seeing this through."

Iran agrees to full enrichment freeze, diplomats say

BY GEORGE JAHN

Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria — Just a day before an international deadline, Iran agreed Sunday not to test any centrifuges as part of a total suspension of nuclear activities that can yield uranium for atomic weapons. Diplomats described the about-face as an effort to avoid possible U.N. sanctions.

Diplomats from the European Union and elsewhere said on condition of anonymity that the International Atomic Energy Agency received a letter from Iran containing a pledge not to test 20 centrifuges during the freeze it agreed to Nov. 7 during negotiations with Britain, France and Germany, who were working on behalf of the European Union.

The pledge appeared to resolve a dispute that threatened to escalate at Monday's IAEA board meeting into consultations on possibly referring Iran to the U.N. Security Council for defying the board. The Security Council could then impose sanctions against Iran.

A senior diplomat with nuclear expertise told The Associated Press the Iranian pledge appeared to contain no pitfalls and seemed to meet the European demands for full suspension.

Still, the commitment came with strings attached. A government official from a board member country told The AP that France, Germany and Britain had accepted an Iranian demand to further water down the language of a draft resolution they wrote for adoption by the board on ways of policing the suspension.

The text to be adopted Monday now includes a phrase emphasizing that the suspension is not a legal or binding obligation on Tehran's part, he said.

Under the agreement, the 20 centrifuges Iran had previously wanted exempted would not be placed under IAEA seals but monitored by cameras, diplomats said.

Iran says its program is for generating electricity, but the United States insists Iran is trying to make nuclear weapons. President Bush has called Iran part of an "axis of evil" with North Korea and prewar Iraq.

Uranium enrichment does not violate the terms of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty that Iran has signed, but for months Tehran has been under pressure to freeze all related activities to ease fears it might want to use the technology to make weapons.

The three European negotiators of the Nov. 7 deal say the freeze also prohibits the Iranians from running centrifuges for research purposes. The centrifuges spin gas into enriched uranium.

The Iranian promise came less than a day before the 35-nation IAEA board was scheduled to reconvene in Vienna over the enrichment suspension.

Iran had no official comment Sunday on the letter. State television and radio in Tehran were still broadcasting earlier statements from a Foreign Ministry spokesman, who had vowed that Iran would use the centrifuges for research. The Foreign Ministry could not be reached for immediate comment.

"We always had research and development in the past and we will continue that in the future," ministry spokesman Hamid Reza Asefi said.

It is not unusual for Iran state media to lag behind developments in diplomatic negotiations.

But in Vienna, a senior member of the Iranian delegation to the IAEA — who demanded anonymity — confirmed his country's offer of full suspension and the changes to the resolution text.

The IAEA board meeting adjourned in disarray Friday. The pause was meant to give the Iranian government time to approve a total freeze of its program, which can produce both low-grade nuclear fuel and weapons-grade material for the core of nuclear warheads. Delegates also were to decide on further steps in policing Tehran's nuclear activities.

The dispute about what constituted full suspension had dominated the meeting.

The Europeans say the deal committed Iran to full suspension of enrichment and all related activities — at least while the two sides discuss a pact meant to provide Tehran with EU technical and economic aid and other concessions.

Iranian officials had suggested the issue was not up for debate only hours before details emerged of their letter to the agency.

"Referral to the U.N. Security Council would not be the end of the world," Asefi said in Tehran earlier Sunday.

But as the clock ticked down to Monday, EU officials and delegates spoke of the growing likelihood of tough action at the board meeting if Iran remained defiant — including the start of work on a harsh resolution that could include the threat of U.N. Security Council action.

The draft being informally circulated ahead of Monday's resumed board meeting contained intentionally weak language on how any freeze would be monitored by the agency in an attempt to entice Tehran to sign on to total suspension.

But — in return for Sunday's suspension pledge — Iran wanted further weakening of the language in the text, the senior diplomat said.

Ukraine election invalidated

By The Associated Press

KIEV, Ukraine — Ukraine’s parliament declared the country’s disputed presidential election invalid Saturday amid international calls for a new vote, fueling what has become a political tug-of-war between the West and Moscow over the future of this former Soviet republic.

The elections commission chief also said he was not opposed to a revote.

Parliament’s vote, which was symbolic and has no legal standing, came as representatives of the two presidential rivals sought a solution in talks mediated by European envoys. Demonstrators jammed downtown Kiev in freezing weather for a sixth straight day, alleging the Nov. 21 vote was rigged and robbed their candidate, Viktor Yushchenko, of victory.

Thousands of demonstrators joined Yushchenko in demanding a new vote. A European Union envoy — Dutch Foreign Minister Ben Bot — said new elections were the “ideal outcome” for the standoff between Yushchenko and Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovich, who was declared the winner by the Central Elections Commission.

Oil spill threatens wildlife

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — A tanker spilled 30,000 gallons of crude oil into the Delaware River between Philadelphia and southern New Jersey, creating a 20-mile-long slick that killed dozens of birds and threatened other wildlife, federal officials said Saturday.

Private contractors were called in to skim oil from the surface of the water and place thousands of feet of boom to contain the floating slick.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials said 50 birds were dead from the spill, 300 others were affected and fish also were threatened. A stretch of the busy river was closed to commercial and recreational traffic while the spill was being cleaned up.

“We’re working very quickly and diligently to expedite the cleanup,” said Coast Guard Petty Officer John Edwards.

Two tugboats were guiding the ship to a pier Friday night when a tugboat skipper noticed the spill, said

Coast Guard Capt. Jonathan Sarubbi, officer in charge of the Port of Philadelphia. The ship listed 8 degrees to the left at about the same time, he said.

Slain hunters remembered

By The Associated Press

RICE LAKE, Wis. — Robert Crotteau and his son Joseph, who worked together and spent much of their free time enjoying the outdoors together, were mourned together Saturday, days after both were killed in a confrontation with a hunter trespassing on their land.

“To say they were two peas in a pod is an understatement, without question,” said Steve Crotteau, Robert’s younger brother, during the funeral at St. Joseph’s Catholic Church.

Robert Crotteau, 42, and his 20-year-old son were among six hunters killed and two wounded in a bloody confrontation that shocked neighbors in Rice Lake, a northwestern Wisconsin town of 8,500 people.

The man accused in the shootings, Chai Vang, 36, of St. Paul, Minn., remained in the Sawyer County Jail in lieu of $2.5 million bail Saturday awaiting formal charges.

Robert and Joseph Crotteau worked at a concrete and construction business in Haugen that the elder Crotteau owned.

Quake rocks Mount St. Helens

By The Associated Press

MOUNT ST. HELENS — A 3.1-magnitude earthquake shook the crater at Mount St. Helens on Saturday, the strongest quake at the volcano since mid-October.

U.S. Geological Survey scientists said they did not believe a major eruption was imminent — just a continuation of the minor ash and steam eruptions that have been occurring since the mountain reawakened this fall.

Saturday’s earthquake appeared to be a larger version of the small earthquakes scientists have registered about once a minute for the past several weeks, the USGS said in a news release. Scientists hoped good weather Sunday and Monday would allow them to get a better look at the volcano.

A flurry of small earthquakes beginning in late September were followed by a burst of steam and ash on Oct. 1 — the first in a series of small eruptions. None of the early earthquakes measured more than 3.2 in magnitude.

Welcome wagon greets baby gorilla

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — With shutters clicking and cameras rolling, dozens of people crowded into the Franklin Park Zoo’s indoor “tropical forest” on Saturday for the debut of its newest celebrity resident: a tiny 3-day-old western lowland gorilla.

Children with faces and hands pressed to the glass of the steamy enclosure gasped and oohed as Kiki the gorilla ambled from her nighttime quarters with her 4-pound baby tucked under her arm. Photographers leaned over the railings like paparazzi.

Kiki sauntered between areas of the enclosure, the baby held in her arms or hanging from her chest, as the crowds rushed from window to window to follow her movements. She eventually settled into a bed of straw, nibbling carrots, before laying down for a nap with the baby cradled in her arm.

The baby doesn’t have a name yet because its gender won’t be known for several months, until zoo officials can physically examine it without upsetting Kiki, said John Linehan, the zoo’s president and CEO.

St. Bernardine of Siena on display

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More than five centuries ago, a German printer reproduced the face of St. Bernardine of Siena.

Still verifiable from the Italian preacher’s death mask in Aquila, northeast of Rome, the image has become the earliest known print that depicted the subject exactly as he appeared, said Andrew Robison of the National Gallery of Art.

When the unidentified German made the print, many people were alive who had seen St. Bernadine, who died in 1444, six years before Johann Gutenberg’s invention of movable type was revolutionizing printing.

The portrait is in a new display at the National Gallery that will be on view through May 30, 2005: “Six Centuries of Prints and Drawings: Recent Acquisitions.”

The gallery is open every day except Christmas, with free admission.

Sunni Muslims' demand for election delay denied

BY ROBERT H. REID

Associated Press Writer

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The Iraqi government Saturday brushed aside Sunni Muslim demands to delay the Jan. 30 election, and a spokesman for the majority Shiite community called the date “nonnegotiable.” Insurgents stepped up attacks, blasting U.S. patrols in Baghdad and killing a U.S. soldier north of the capital.

Clashes also occurred north of Baghdad, where U.S. and Iraqi forces fought a three-hour gun battle with insurgents who overran a town hall and two police stations, local officials said.

Talk of delaying the election gained momentum after influential Sunni Muslim politicians urged the government to postpone the voting for six months to give authorities time to secure polling stations and to persuade Sunni clerics to abandon their call for an electoral boycott.

But the spokesman for interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi, a secular Shiite, said the government was sticking by the Jan. 30 date after receiving assurances from the Iraqi Electoral Commission that an election could take place even in Sunni areas wracked by the insurgency.

“The Iraqi government is determined ... to hold elections on time,” spokesman Thair al-Naqeeb said. “The Iraqi government, led by the prime minister, is calling on all spectra of the Iraqi people to participate in the elections and to contribute in the elections to build a strong democratic country.”

That position was strongly endorsed Saturday by politicians and clerics from the Shiite community, which comprises about 60 percent of Iraq’s nearly 26 million people and which has been long clamoring for an election.

In the Shiite holy city of Najaf, Mohammed Hussein al-Hakim, son of Grand Ayatollah Mohammed Said al-Hakim, said the Shiite leadership would not accept a delay and called this position “nonnegotiable.”

He said elections were “the most legitimate way on the international level to express the will of the people,” and “all parties have agreed on this date and we cannot take back this position for any reason.”

In Baghdad, a major Shiite party, the Supreme Council for the Islamic Republic in Iraq, or SCIRI, said 42 parties and individuals from the Shiite and Turkomen communities agreed on a statement affirming support for the Jan. 30 date.

SCIRI official Redha Jawad Taqi said the 42 included the other leading Shiite party, the Islamic Dawa, and the Iraqi National Congress of Ahmad Chalabi, a secular Shiite once strongly supported by the Pentagon and Washington conservatives.

“The Shiite political council will support the elections,” Chalabi said. “We will fight for the elections and will work to ensure that they are held peacefully on the specified date.”

Iraq’s two major Kurdish political parties said they were ready to take part in national elections on Jan. 30 as planned, but would not object if “other political powers” wanted to postpone the vote.

The Web site of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan said Saturday that the party issued a joint statement with the Kurdistan Democratic Party expressing their “readiness to participate at the scheduled time.”

Insurgent violence still grips the Sunni areas despite the U.S.-led assault this month on the main insurgent stronghold of Fallujah, 40 miles west of Baghdad. The attack was launched to try to curb the insurgency so elections could be held nationwide.

An American soldier from the 1st Infantry Division was killed Saturday when a roadside bomb exploded near a U.S. patrol about 40 miles north of Baghdad, the military said.

Two U.S. military vehicles, including an armored shuttle bus, were damaged by a bomb Saturday on the road to Baghdad International Airport, which the State Department considers one of the most dangerous routes in the country. An al-Qaida-affiliated group claimed responsibility for the attack.

Three civilians died and a dozen were injured in other bomb attacks against U.S. convoys in the Baghdad area, U.S. and Iraqi officials said.

About 100 insurgents overran the city hall and two police stations in Khalis, 40 miles north of the capital, but were driven off by American and Iraqi forces after a three-hour gun battle, municipal official Saad Ahmed Abbas said. Al-Jazeera television said three Iraqi security guards were killed.

South of the capital, U.S. Marines, British and Iraqi security forces continued operations against suspected insurgent strongholds near the towns of Latifiyah and Mahmoudiya. A U.S. military spokesman said 18 suspected insurgents were taken into custody Saturday, bringing to nearly 130 the number of people arrested since the operation began Tuesday.

Officials also report a massive intimidation campaign by insurgents threatening to kill candidates and others participating in the January ballot. Sunni clerics have urged a boycott to protest the Fallujah attack.

Although Sunni Arabs comprise only about 20 percent of the population, a widespread boycott by the influential community would cost the new government much-needed legitimacy in the eyes of millions of Iraqis.

Shiites generally have refrained from joining the Sunni-led insurgency, believing they will gain power in Iraq anyway through elections because of their force of numbers. Shiite clerics for the most part avoided public criticism of the Fallujah offensive.

Differences between Shiites and Sunnis over the election issue threatens to widen the gap between the two rival communities at a time when U.S. and Iraqi officials are appealing for national unity.

U.N. and U.S. officials agreed to a January ballot in a deal with the powerful Shiite clerical leadership to win support for the American formula for transferring power to Iraqis after Saddam Hussein’s regime collapsed in April 2003.

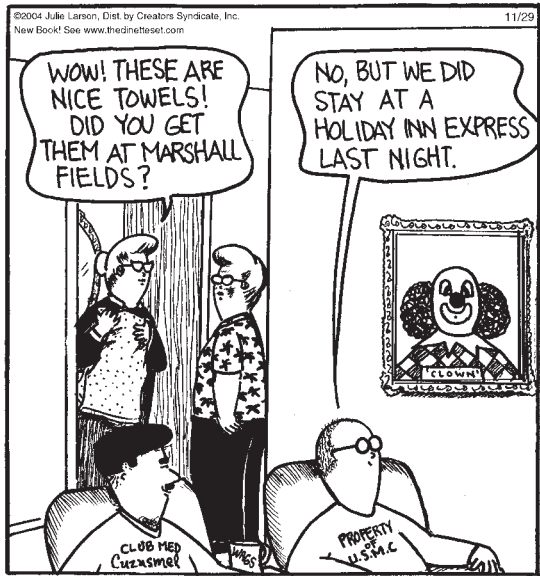

“If the nation was deprived of this right, I am afraid that many of the Iraqis who remained patient and waited to see a national government will be frustrated and ... will resort to other means which we don’t want to see,” Hussain al-Shahristani, a prominent Shiite nuclear scientist, told The Associated Press.

Stork delivers early present for Julia Roberts

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — It's a girl — and a boy — for actress Julia Roberts and her husband, cinematographer Danny Moder.

Roberts gave birth to twins Hazel Patricia Moder and Phinnaeus Walter Moder on Sunday morning at a Southern California hospital, publicist Marcy Engelman said Sunday.

Roberts, 37, was confined to bed last month after experiencing a series of early contractions and wasn't due until early January. Engelman said Sunday in a phone interview that "mother and babies are doing great," but didn't release the twins' weights or other details.

Roberts, who skyrocketed to fame with "Pretty Woman" in 1990, has two films coming out in early December — Mike Nichols' "Closer" and "Ocean's Twelve," the Steven Soderbergh-directed sequel to 2001's star-studded heist caper.

Roberts married Moder in July 2002 at her home in Taos, N.M. The twins are the first children for Roberts, who won the best actress Oscar in 2001 for "Erin Brockovich."

DENVER — The food at the Federal Corrections Camp in Alderson, W.Va., apparently is nothing to write home about — unless one is eating it with Martha Stewart.

Roman Catholic nun Carol Gilbert, 57, who is serving time in the same prison as the famous homemaker, says she enjoys eating with Stewart, although the setting could be better.

"We're not talking about a tea party," Gilbert's attorney, Sue Tyburski, told the Rocky Mountain News for a story in Saturday's editions. "We're talking about a big cafeteria setting with the terrible food."

Gilbert is serving 33 months on convictions of obstructing the national defense and damaging government property for her role in an anti-war protest at a missile silo in 2002.

Stewart was convicted on obstruction of justice in May and began serving her five-month sentence at the women's federal prison Oct. 8.

Stewart, 63, is getting "kid-glove" treatment from the guards, Tyburski said.

"She's in great demand for people to visit with at lunchtime," she said.

Gilbert seemed to confirm a rumor that Stewart is writing a book about her prison experience. Stewart's publicist did not immediately reply to an e-mail inquiry from The Associated Press.

SYDNEY, Australia — Australian rock star-turned-lawmaker Peter Garrett was hospitalized after collapsing on a Sydney beach following a morning swim, authorities said.

Garrett, former lead singer of Midnight Oil, was taken by ambulance to Prince of Wales Hospital after collapsing on Maroubra beach in southern Sydney early Saturday.

He was discharged from the hospital Saturday evening, saying he would undergo further tests to determine why he had collapsed.

"It's good to be back on my feet again," he told reporters outside the hospital. "(There are) no obvious causes as to why this happened and we'll get some more tests and checks done next week."

Lifeguards came to Garrett's aid when he collapsed as he waded from the water where he had been body surfing.

Garrett's political adviser Simon Balderstone said Garrett had no history of medical problems.

"He's very fit and healthy and it's probably fair to say he's a lot fitter and healthier than your average 51-year-old Australian male," he told Sky News television.

The rock star and committed environmentalist was elected in October as a lawmaker with the opposition Labor Party.

NEW YORK — Democratic Sen.-elect Barack Obama poked fun at the Illinois Republican Party when he appeared as a guest on the "Late Show with David Letterman."

Obama told Letterman on Friday night's show that after Republican challenger Jack Ryan dropped out of the race in June, the state's GOP "couldn't find anyone out of the 12 million people in Illinois to run against me."

Instead, Illinois Republicans picked Alan Keyes, a conservative political commentator from Maryland, to replace Ryan on the November ballot.

Obama won 70 percent of the vote on Nov. 2 compared to 27 percent for Keyes.

Since arriving in Washington, D.C., Obama told Letterman he has had breakfast with Vice President Dick Cheney and President Bush's adviser Karl Rove, and has been spending time answering mail from Illinois residents.

Obama, who will be the fifth black U.S. senator in history, told Letterman he hoped his victory will help spur voters to elect more senators of different races.

Letterman, calling Obama a rising star, asked Obama to promise to return as a guest when he runs for president.

Obama responded: "I hope you invite me (back) before then."
