City report rejects calls for downzoning in Pico neighborhood

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Preventing renters in Santa Monica's most diverse neighborhood from being displaced will require stronger eviction protections and more affordable housing, according to a recent report.

A report the city of Santa Monica released last week on preventing gentrification in the Pico neighborhood recommends enhancing tenant protections and building more affordable housing rather than downzoning the neighborhood, as the Pico Neighborhood Association has called for. Pico, a historically Latino and working-class neighborhood, has gentrified in recent years and struggled to retain long-term residents as rents rise.

In the report, Peter James and Jing Yeo, two of the city's top planners, said Pico's current zoning disincentivizes redevelopment because most existing buildings are denser than what developers are allowed to build today.

PICO: City Hall has been studying changes to zoning rules in Pico.

With the exception of 2014, which saw the completion of the 100% affordable housing developments of High Place East and West, there have been 12 or fewer units produced annually in Pico in recent years, according to the report. No units were constructed in 2016 and just one was built in 2017.

But rising housing prices and low-density redevelopment still put residents at risk of displacement, they said.

CLIMATE PROTEST: Hundreds of youth and their adult supporters went on strike from Black Friday shopping this Friday to demand federal and local action in response to the climate crisis. Students, adults and organizations from across the Westside and greater Los Angeles region gathered in Santa Monica's Tongva Park to rally before marching and conducting a "die-in" at the Third Street Promenade, the heart of the city's shopping district. The event was organized by Food & Water Action, the political advocacy arm of the research and education organization Food & Water Watch.

Will Rogers goes international

Since it was established in 1997, International Baccalaureate's Primary Years Programme has helped students at more than 1,700 schools in 109 different countries become international thinkers.

Thanks to the schoolwide effort at Santa Monica's own Will Rogers Learning Community, the local middle school has completed the program's very lengthy application phase and is now an official candidate school for the Primary Years Programme, or PYP, according to principal Ryan Bourke, meaning students and teachers are enjoying a new model of classroom learning that will instill scholars with the tools needed for future success.

"International Baccalaureate frameworks are traditionally associated with high schools — and yes the high school program is traditionally the diploma that's recognized and that's what people know about," Bourke said, "but the work truly begins in kindergarten because that's when we have kids arriving at our doorstep, loving life, excited to learn and full of natural curiosity."

PYP is designed for children aged 3- to 12-years-old and its inquiry-led,

Magic, Music and Mentshn

On Saturday, Dec. 7, the secular Jewish Sholem Community will host "MAGIC, MUSIC & MENTSHN: A Birthday Celebration & Fundraiser. Three leaders of the community – Hershl Hartman (turning 90), Sheila McCoy (turning 90) and Jan Goodman (turning 70) – will be honored for their decades of service to progressive organizations and causes.

This special event will take place from 4 to 8 p.m. at a historic private residence in Santa Monica. Featured entertainment will include Magic Castle magician Brandon Scott as well as live jazz, klezmer, and folk music performances. Tributes will be offered by investigative journalist Greg Palast and Dr. Caroline Luce of the UCLA Leve Center for Jewish Studies, among others. To purchase tickets, visit www.sholem.org.

Proceeds from this fundraiser benefit the secular and progressive Sholem Community, a 501(C)(3) non-profit cooperative organization that was founded in the 1950s. Sholem's Sunday school teaches children about the historic, cultural and ethical aspects of Jewishness. Sholem also offer a non-religious bar/bas mitsve program, humanistic observances of Jewish holidays, and a wide variety of informative and engaging programs for all ages. Sholem meets most Sundays, September through May, at Short Avenue Elementary School in the Del Rey neighborhood of Los Angeles. For more information, visit www.sholem.org.

Jan Goodman, a native Angeleno and lifelong activist, is a member of the KPFK (90.7 FM) and Pacifica National Boards. She has been chair or president of the Southern California chapter of Americans for Democratic Action, The Paul Robeson Community Wellness Center, Sunset Hall retirement home, the National Lawyers Guild, and the Sholem Community. Goodman and her husband Jerry Manpearl support local and national organizations, candidates and causes by regularly hosting salons, political and cultural events in their home. Guests have included Congressmembers Barbara Lee, Alan Grayson and Dennis Kucinich; Cuban Grammy winner Chucho Valdés; writer Gore Vidal; activist & author Tom Hayden; historian Gerald Horne; radio hosts Lila Garrett and Earl Ofari Hutchinson.

Hershl Hartman, originally from New York, holds degrees in Jewish Education and Yiddish Journalism. He was the first native-born Yiddish reporter in the United States, for Morgn Frayhayt (Morning Freedom) from 1947-1951. Hartman has been involved with Sholem for more than fifty years, first as the school's Principal and then as Education Director. His classes examining the Bible from a secular (non-religious) viewpoint often reveal conflicting passages and little known facts. A renown Yiddish scholar, Hartman's Yiddish/English translations range from published books, essays and poems to handwritten letters and manuscripts. Hartman is the Convenor of the L.A. Secular Yeshiva which trains vegvayzer (leaders) as officiants for holiday observances and life-cycle events. His booklets about and texts for Jewish holidays are widely used for the secular observance of these holidays.

Sheila McCoy, who was born in Los Angeles but grew up partly in Canada, attended UCLA, where she received her B.A., M.A., and later a PH. D (in U.S. History) while teaching. She spent twenty years at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, where she served as chair of Liberal Studies, a major designed at the time for future elementary school teachers. She helped found the College of Education and Integrative Studies and served as Interim Dean. McCoy was one of the first ACLU Chapter leaders to become a member of the ACLU Southern California Board of Directors and served two terms on the ACLU Foundation Board. She has served in various capacities at Sholem, including as Co-Chair. McCoy studied in the Secular Yeshiva to become a vegvayzer (leader) and has mentored candidates in Sholem's alternative bnai mitsve program. She is an active member of the Plato Society of Los Angeles, for which she coordinates a study and discussion group on the History of Antisemitism.

California Gov. Newsom to campaign in Iowa for Kamala Harris

KATHLEEN RONAYNE
Associated Press

California Gov. Gavin Newsom will travel to Iowa to campaign for Sen. Kamala Harris as she tries to rebound amid a critical stretch in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Newsom will visit the first voting state Dec. 14-15 on behalf of Harris, his home-state senator and longtime friend and political ally. His visit will come as Harris tries to claw back from single digits in the polls and defy the narrative that her campaign is collapsing ahead of the Feb. 3 caucuses.

"The governor of California is a big deal, and he'll get a lot of attention," said Bill Carrick, a California political strategist who led Richard Gephardt's unsuccessful Democratic presidential campaign in 1988. "As we get moving into the end of the year here, every campaign needs people out there, multiple people out there that can attract some attention and some crowds."

Harris has staked her campaign on a strong showing in Iowa and recently spent six days over the Thanksgiving holiday campaigning in the state. But she's still stuck in single digits in most polls, far from the top of the pack that includes former Vice President Joe Biden and South Bend, Indiana, Mayor Pete Buttigieg.

In recent weeks her campaign has been beset by a series of negative stories in the media. The New York Times obtained a scathing resignation letter from a staff member who left in November and now works for Michael Bloomberg's presidential campaign.

Newsom's visit is an example of the public support that Harris still commands from allies in her home state, where her term as senator continues through 2022.

Both Newsom and Harris started their political careers in the San Francisco Bay Area. He was elected mayor of the famously liberal city in 2003, the year she won the race for district attorney.

Both were considered ambitious politicians with statewide appeal, but they avoided an electoral collision when Harris opted to run for U.S. Senate in 2016 rather than challenge Newsom two years later for the governorship.

"They're political siblings, and they understand each other far better than most because of the similarities of their trajectories," said Dan Newman, a political adviser to Newsom and former adviser to Harris. "He's also seen her counted out time and again."

Newsom, who was not made available for an interview Monday, will campaign in Des Moines, Cedar Rapids and Coralville on Dec. 14 and 15. He'll speak to volunteers before door knocking, attend a house party and hold conversations on climate change and LGBTQ rights.

Harris often touts her support for LGBTQ rights on the trail by talking about how she married gay couples in San Francisco in 2004. Newsom famously chose to defy federal law that year by allowing gay couples in the city to marry. It was a move that vaulted him into the national spotlight and the list of someday presidential contenders.

Neither Carrick nor Newman said he thinks Newsom's trip to Iowa is about furthering his own political ambitions.

But his visit will offer a test of how a governor of one of the nation's most liberal states plays in the Midwest. Newsom, for his part, has said he's focused on his job as governor.

But he's rapidly elevated his national profile during his first year in office as he's sparred repeatedly with Republican President Donald Trump on topics including climate change and immigration policy.

In an October interview with The Associated Press, Newsom said Harris entered the race at a disadvantage to candidates such as Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders, who were better known on the national stage.

"The fact she's still a top-tier candidate is in and of itself pretty extraordinary," he said at the time. "I think we set really high expectations ... but I think she's now about where if she started this campaign without that expectation of those first few weeks, she'd be probably pretty satisfied because she's in the mix."

Majority of Los Angeles County Winter Shelters are Open

The Los Angeles Homeless Services Authority (LAHSA), has announced that the majority of its 2019-2020 winter shelter portfolio had begun operations throughout Los Angeles County. These emergency shelters offer 1057 beds at 14 sites to help people experiencing homelessness es-cape winter weather. These beds will be available through March 31, 2020. An additional 175 beds at two more locations will become available in the near future.

"Our winter shelter portfolio takes over the work the work started last week to provide people experiencing homelessness a place to stay during the inclement weather," said LAHSA Executive Director, Peter Lynn. "Thank you to the City and the County of Los Angeles for the actions they have taken to provide a warm haven for thousands of our unsheltered homeless population this winter."

Last week, LAHSA announced that several winter shelter sites would open early to offer a place to escape inclement weather. They will remain open throughout the winter shelter season.

In addition, the City and the County of Los Angeles opened combined 700 augmented winter shelter beds. Now that the Winter Shelter Program is operational, these augmented sites will close.

The Winter Shelter Program consists of several temporary emergency shelters that provide a warm place to sleep, food, access to supportive services, and housing assistance to homeless neighbors.

The County of Los Angeles and the City of Los Angeles provide LAHSA with the funding necessary to administer the Winter Shelter Program. LAHSA contracts with several non-profit service providers to operate emergency shelters at multiple locations throughout Los Angeles County.

"I know how crucial, and sometimes life-saving, it can be for people experiencing homelessness to come in from the cold to eat a hot meal and sleep in a warm bed," said Los Angeles County Supervisor Hilda L. Solis. "I'm pleased that our Winter Shelters are opening now, but I am grateful that this Board, in approving my amendment earlier this week, had the foresight to activate Winter Shelters earlier in future years when the weather demands it."

The Winter Shelter Program will operate through March 31. During the winter shelter season, each shelter will open at 5 and close at 7 a.m.

Winter Shelters can operate 24 hours-a-day during certain inclement weather conditions, including when:

The 7-day weather forecast predicts two consecutive days when the high temperature will be below 50°, or the nightly lows are below 40°.

The 7-day weather forecast predicts 50% or greater chance of rain for one or more days where rainfall will be over half an inch.

The National Weather Service forecast predicts three days of low temperatures of 32° or less.

The National Weather Service forecasts at least one inch of rain within 24 hours.

The National Weather Service forecasts three consecutive days of at least a quarter-inch of rain accompanied by high temperatures at 50° or below.

Shelter providers determine that there is a need to extend their hours based on local weather conditions.

The Winter Shelters can operate on a 24-hour basis for 21 days during the Winter Shelter sea-son. After that period has been exhausted, operators can continue to operate 24 hours-a-day at their own expense.

Most winter shelter sites will provide people experiencing homelessness transportation to their sites.

Homeless residents who want a bed at a Winter Shelter Program site must use designated shuttles to access a Winter Shelter Program site. Any homeless residents who have questions about the Winter Shelter Program should call the Winter Shelter Hotline at 1(800) 548-6047. The hotline is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week or visit www.lahsa.org.

2 feet of new snow in Sierra, 6 feet in a week above Tahoe

More than 2 feet of new snow has fallen in the Sierra, where more than 6 feet has been recorded the past seven days at the top of some Lake Tahoe-area ski resorts, the National Weather Service said Monday.

A winter storm warning that was in place most of the holiday weekend expired at 10 a.m. Monday. But chain controls remained in effect on most mountain passes, including U.S. Interstate 80 from Truckee to Kingvale, California.

The weather service reported 29 inches of snow fell at Northstar California ski resort near Truckee over the past 24 hours for a total of 73 inches in a week. Squaw Valley near Tahoe City recorded 28 inches of new snow for a seven-day total of 75 inches.

About a foot of new snow was reported Sunday night and Monday at the south end of the lake and at the Mount Rose ski resort near Reno.

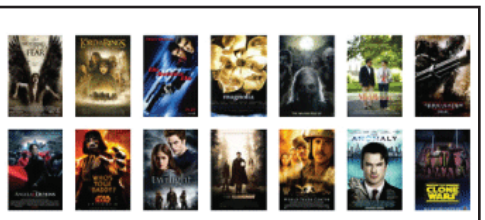

Snow turned to heavy rain at lake level early Monday, including 2.7 inches at Tahoe City. More than 3 inches of rain was reported at Alpine Meadows southwest of Tahoe. More than a half-inch of rain was reported in Reno, Sparks and Carson City.

Up to another 6 inches of snow was possible at Lake Tahoe Monday afternoon and night, with a chance of rain or snow into Tuesday.

In eastern Nevada, 17 inches of new snow was reported Monday west of Preston in White Pine County near the Utah line.

Congress pushes ahead on Trump impeachment with nation split

LISA MASCARO AND MARY CLARE JALONICK
Associated Press

The House is plunging into a landmark impeachment week, with Democrats who once hoped to sway Republicans now facing the prospect of an ever-hardening partisan split over the question of removing President Donald Trump from office.

Lawmakers were getting their first look at the House Intelligence Committee's impeachment report Monday night behind closed doors. The findings are expected to forcefully make the Democrats' case that Trump engaged in what Chairman Adam Schiff calls impeachable "wrongdoing and misconduct" in pressuring Ukraine to investigate Democrats and Joe Biden while withholding military aid to the ally.

For Republicans offering an early rebuttal ahead of the report's public release, the proceedings are simply a "hoax," with Trump insisting he did nothing wrong and his GOP allies in line behind him. Trump tweeted his daily complaints about it all and then added a suggestive, if impractical, question: "Can we go to Supreme Court to stop?"

With the Judiciary Committee set to launch its first hearing Wednesday, the impeachment proceedings are presenting a historic test of political judgment in a case that is dividing Congress and the country.

Departing for a NATO meeting in London, Trump criticized the House for pushing forward Monday with proceedings while he was heading overseas, a breach of political decorum that traditionally leaves partisan differences at the water's edge.

He predicted Republicans would actually benefit from the entire impeachment effort against him, though "it's a disgrace for our country."

For the Democrats, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi faces a critical moment of her leadership as she steers the process ahead after resisting the impeachment inquiry through the summer, warning it was too divisive for the country and required bipartisan support.

Speaking to reporters at the international climate conference in Madrid, Pelosi declined to engage with impeachment questions. "When we travel abroad, we don't talk about the president in a negative way," she said. "We save that for home."

Possible grounds for impeachment are focused on whether Trump abused his office as he pressed Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskiy in a July 25 phone call to launch investigations into Trump's political rivals. At the time, Trump was withholding $400 million in military aid, jeopardizing key support as Ukraine faced an aggressive Russia at its border.

The report, which the Intelligence panel will vote on Tuesday and make public, also is expected to include evidence the Democrats say suggests obstruction of Congress, based on Trump's instructions for his administration to defy subpoenas for documents and testimony.

The next step comes when the Judiciary Committee gavels open its own hearing with legal experts to assess the findings and consider potential articles of impeachment ahead of a possible vote by the full House by Christmas. That would presumably send it to the Senate for a trial in January.

The Democratic majority on the Intelligence Committee says its report, compiled after weeks of testimony from current and former diplomats and administration officials, will speak for itself in laying out the president's actions toward Ukraine.

Republicans pre-empted the report's public release with their own 123-page rebuttal.

In it, they claim there's no evidence Trump pressured Zelenskiy. Instead, they say Democrats just want to undo the 2016 election. Republicans dismiss witness testimony of a shadow diplomacy being run by Trump lawyer Rudy Giuliani, and they rely on the president's insistence that he was merely concerned about "corruption" in Ukraine — though the White House transcript of Trump's phone call with Zelenskiy never mentions the word.

"They are trying to impeach President Trump because some unelected bureaucrats chafed at an elected President's 'outside the beltway' approach to diplomacy," according to the report from Republican Reps. Devin Nunes of California, Jim Jordan of Ohio and Michael McCaul of Texas.

Trump on Monday pointed to Zelenskiy's recent comments as proof he did nothing wrong. The Ukrainian president said in an interview he never talked to Trump "from the position of a quid pro quo," but he didn't say Trump did nothing wrong. In fact, he had strong criticism for Trump's actions in the Time magazine interview.

With Ukraine at war with Russia, he said, its partners "can't go blocking anything for us."

Schiff said the GOP response was intended for an audience of one, Trump, whose actions are "outside the law and constitution."

The finished Intelligence Committee report sets up the week's cascading actions.

Democrats could begin drafting articles of impeachment against the president in a matter of days, with voting in the Judiciary Committee next week.

Republicans on the committee, led by Rep. Doug Collins of Georgia, plan to rely on procedural moves to stall the process and portray the inquiry as a sham.

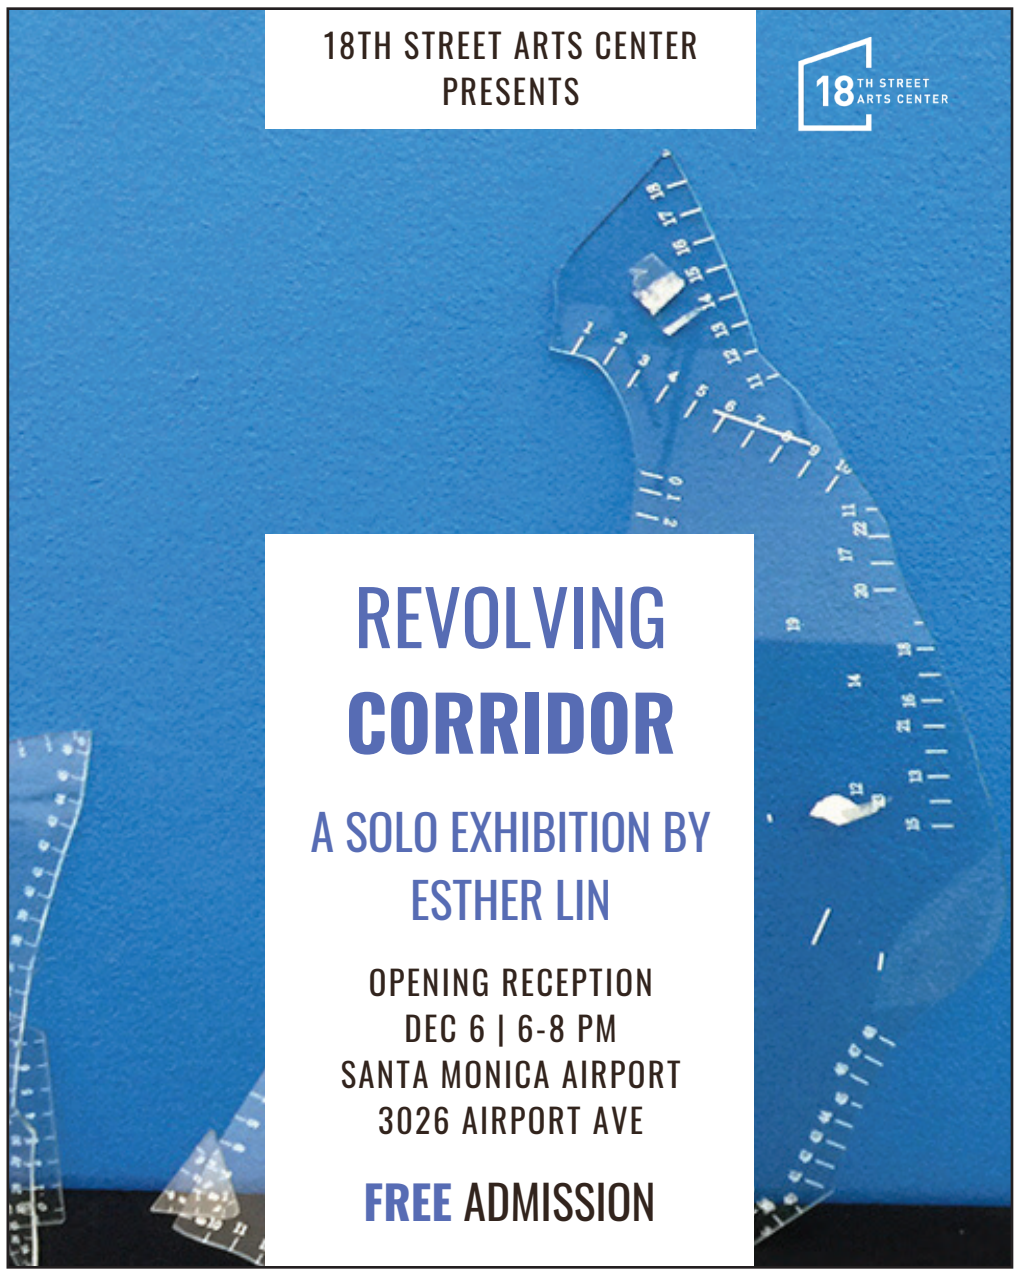

The White House declined an invitation to participate, with Counsel Pat Cipollone denouncing the proceedings as a "baseless and highly partisan inquiry" in a letter to Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler, D-N.Y.

Trump had previously suggested that he might be willing to offer written testimony under certain conditions, though aides suggested they did not anticipate Democrats would ever agree to them.

Cipollone's letter of nonparticipation applied only to the Wednesday hearing, and he demanded more information from Democrats on how they intended to conduct

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (DECEMBER 03)

Before the close of the year, you become free of a burden or constriction, and as a result, there will be a short lull and a long creative run in which you will merge and develop your talent into the stratosphere. You'll stumble onto a secret and have the option to share or keep it. A special relationship will be a source of joy. Libra and Cancer adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 40, 8, 35, 42 and 37.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Changing just one thing in a space changes the energy there. You'll use this to your advantage and affect the environment in interesting ways as you try and change the pattern there.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). They don't always feel the zing of your wit or laugh in the right places, because you're a step ahead. Don't worry; they'll catch up. In the meantime, keep setting the pace and tone like it's your job. It sort of is.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There was a chaotic element you were actively blocking out of your life. Through the years, you learned to do this so automatically you no longer realize it's a choice, though you'll have a different perspective on it today.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You may feel as though you've slipped in the area of self-command. It's like you don't want to follow your own instructions. Start small. Tell yourself to stand up. Achieve it. Then go for something a little bigger.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Take a break from the effort of relationships. You don't have to do anything more than be open to love in its many forms, and it will come to you just the way you most need it to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You'll enter a fresh scene. Being new in a situation is an opportunity to present yourself in whatever way you feel like being seen. Exercise your right to experiment. You can be whoever you want to be.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You may like a person very much and yet realize that you somehow are not at your best around that person. Take notice and endeavor to spend more time with the people who make you feel like more than you were, not less.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The manners involved in a correspondence will play heavily into the outcome. Which salutations should you use? Should you hug or shake hands? When the little details hit the right note, the relationship sings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). There are so many demands of you today, and you'll be as capable as you are organized. Make a list and check it twice so nothing falls through the cracks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). When the days are shorter and colder, it's more challenging to replenish your energy with time in the sun, but catching a few rays and some fresh air is crucial to your well-being.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Aristotle suggested, "All knowledge seems to be teachable, and what is known is learnable." While that may well be the case, stick to the intersection of the most learnable and the worthiest of imparting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Trouble, like many other commodities available for borrow, accrues interest. And so, successfully steering clear of anything that smacks of drama will save you more energy than you think.

Impressionable Moon

The Pisces moon highlights the highly impressionable nature of humans. Do not doubt for a second that you have influence. It feels substantial in some circles and inconsequential in others, but don't let matters of scale discourage you. You are a neuron firing in the group mind of the world, which will not think the same without you.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTION

"A psychic told me I could marry a Scorpio man. I've heard that some people can tell a person's sign just by looking. What does my Scorpio man look like?" I hope you are approaching your quest for a marriage partner with levity, humor and an open mind. Your dream guy may very well be a Scorpio, but to rule out the rest of the population would be silly, right? That said, there are physical characteristics that tend to run in specific signs. Not all people of a certain sign necessarily look like their sign, just like people of the same family sometimes do not look alike. In fact, a person's rising sign is usually a stronger indication of physical appearance. Characteristics classically attributed to Scorpio include strength and intensity with penetrating eyes (sometimes unnervingly so). Despite this intensity, Scorpio also has this uncanny ability to blend in at will. Scorpio has a classically good poker face and can call up or hide emotions as required for the "game." Scorpio often strongly aligns with classically and primally desirable features associated with a particular gender.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

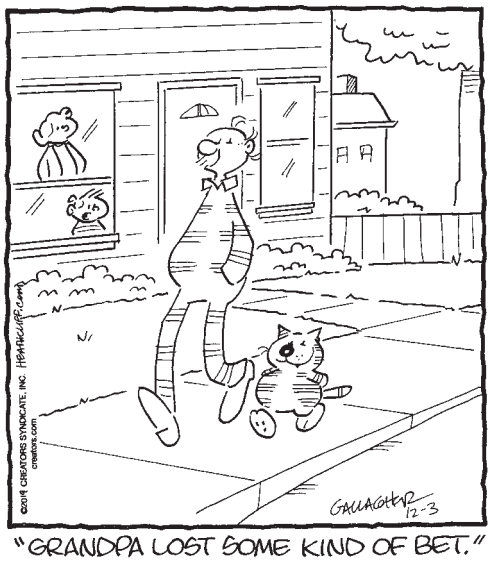

Amanda Seyfried started her career as a child model and was soon working in soap operas, followed by primetime television and movie parts such as Meryl Streep's on-screen daughter, "Sophie," in the star-studded movie musical "Mamma Mia!" Seyfried has five luminaries in the fiery station of Sagittarius, and an entertainment-oriented Leo moon fuels that burning passion to succeed. Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis.com.

NBC, union investigate 'America's Got Talent' racism report

NBC and the union that represents television performers are investigating an allegation by an "America's Got Talent" judge that she was fired because she complained of racism and other on-set issues.

The Screen Actors Guild-American Federation of Television and Radio Artists says in a statement Monday that it is investigating the allegations from Gabrielle Union, and that it takes such claims seriously.

A statement Sunday from NBC and the production companies behind the show says they are committed to ensuring a respectful workplace and are talking to Union's representatives about her concerns.

According to reports, Union, who is black, sought action to address an environment she said allowed racist jokes and comments and other troubling behavior, including judge-producer Simon Cowell's smoking indoors.

Billionaire Alki David faces $58M in damages in battery case

A plaintiff's attorney says billionaire Alki David has been hit with more than $58 million in damages after a jury found him liable for battery, sexual battery and sexual harassment against a former employee.

Attorney Gloria Allred says jurors on Monday ordered David to pay $50 million in punitive dam-ages to Mahim Khan, a former production assistant who worked at David's Los Angeles-based media companies. The same panel last week awarded $8.25 million in compensatory damages.

Spokesman Owen Phillips says David plans an appeal. In a statement Monday, David maintained his innocence.

Khan alleged in her lawsuit that David thrust his pelvis into her face and simulated oral sex.

David is heir to a Greek Coca-Cola bottling fortune. He heads several media firms, including FilmOn TV and Alki David Productions.

Tech aims to predict problems on power lines before disaster

BRIAN MELLEY
Associated Press

B. Don Russell wasn't thinking about preventing a wildfire when he developed a tool to detect power line problems before they cause equipment failures, blackouts or even deadly accidents.

The electrical engineering professor at Texas A&M University figured he might save a life if his creation could prevent someone from being electrocuted by a downed live wire.

But fire prevention may be his product's biggest selling point in California and other places that have experienced devastating wildland blazes blamed on electrical equipment.

"If we can find things when they start to fail, if we can find things that are in the process of degrading before a catastrophic event occurs, such as a downed line that might electrocute someone or a fire starting or even an outage for their customers, that's kind of the Holy Grail," Russell said.

The technology he bills as a one-of-a kind diagnostic tool called Distribution Fault Anticipation is now in use in Texas and being tested in California by Pacific Gas & Electric Co. and Southern California Edison. The utilities have been blamed for some of the most destructive and deadliest fires in California.

Texas A&M said the technology will also be tested in New Zealand and Australia, which is currently reeling from destructive wildfires.

The tool detects variations in electrical currents caused by deteriorating conditions or equipment and notifies utility operators so they can send a crew to fix the problems, Russell said.

It can anticipate many problems in their early stages — sometimes years before they cause an outage — or direct a utility where to preemptively shut off circuits to prevent sparking wildfires, which utilities in California are now doing during fire conditions.

Before the technology was developed, electric companies often didn't know they had a problem until there was a failure or a customer called to report sparks on power lines or a loss of electricity.

"The assumption the utility has to make today is it's healthy until we get a call that says somebody's lights (are) out," Russell said. "By then the fire's started or the outage has happened or the person's electrocuted."

Pedernales Electric Cooperative Inc. that serves about 330,000 customers outside San Antonio and Austin, Texas, began implementing the system after successful tests that began in 2015. The utility serves areas so rural that before the technology was installed, electricity powering a pump on a well could have been off for days before being detected by a farmer.

The devices installed at substations are now trouble-shooting all kinds of problems, said Robert Peterson, principal engineer for the utility.

"We've found tree branches on the line. Failing arrestors. Failing capacitors. Failing connections," Peterson said. "It's pretty amazing."

In California, the testing process has just begun and there are no results yet, according to PG&E and SoCal Edison.

In Southern California, the software is running on just 60 of Edison's 1,100 circuits in the utility's high-risk fire zone, which accounts for about a quarter of its total circuits.

It's just one of several tools the utility is testing to continue to modernize its system.

"There is no silver bullet," said Bill Chiu, managing director of grid modernization and resiliency at SoCal Edison. "This is really more of a preventive measure. ... The important point is this will be one of the suite of technology that will help us better assess the condition of the grid."

Chiu said the technology was not at the point where it could be used by the utility to determine where to shut off power when dangerous winds are forecast during dry conditions. He also said it won't pinpoint problems but can help dispatch crews closer to the source of equipment that needs to be fixed, saving time that would be wasted patrolling miles of power lines.

One question is whether the technology is economically feasible to deploy across tens of thousands of miles of power lines, Chiu said.

At an expense estimated between $15,000 to $20,000 per circuit, it could cost the utility $22 million in its high-risk fire area and that doesn't include installation, operation and maintenance costs.

That's a fraction of what a moderate wildfire sparked by a utility could cost, Russell said.

PG&E, which is testing the technology in nine locations, was driven into bankruptcy protection this year while facing at least $20 billion in losses from a series of deadly and destructive wildfires in 2017 and 2018.

SoCal Edison recently agreed to pay $360 million to local governments to settle lawsuits over deadly wildfires sparked by its equipment during the last two years. That figure doesn't include lawsuits by thousands who lost their homes in those fires or family members of 21 people killed when a mudslide tore down a fire-scarred mountain. Two other people were never found.

Bluebonnet Electric Cooperative found the cost was feasible and has installed it on about a sixth of its circuits for the utility that has about 100,000 customers in Central Texas, said Eric Kocian, chief engineer and system operations officer.

While the system has helped proactively diagnose problems and detect the cause of outages, the university team that developed it can often find problems the utility's control room operators don't detect.

Pedernales Coop is working with an analytics company to streamline the analysis of the myriad information the software evaluates to find and fix problems in a day, Peterson said.

Russell said he never had a hint the device his research team created 15 years ago would have fire prevention applications until a series of bad wildfires in Texas in 2011. They were focused on keeping power systems safe and the lights on.

"It's obvious now in today's context of the drought that we've had in California and other places," Russell said. "Serendipitously, that's where we find ourselves today."

of increased density is not an incentive to redevelop, the potential windfall from the sale of redeveloped condominiums or exorbitant home values and market-rate rental costs are," the report said. "Therefore, maintaining, communicating and increasing tenant protections available to vulnerable renters is key to preserving the existing Pico community representing a diversity of incomes, ethnicities and cultures."

The report proposes providing legal assistance and outreach to tenants at risk of eviction in addition to the tenant protection measures the city already provides.

James and Yeo pointed to Los Angeles' Right to Counsel ordinance, which provides legal assistance to tenants, as a possible model. The Santa Monica City Council has not yet discussed such an ordinance, according to the report.

They also suggested creating a tracking system to identify indicators of potential displacement and outreach to potentially impacted tenants.

The report was released as an update on potential changes to Pico's zoning as part of the Pico Wellbeing Project, which the city launched in 2018.

The Pico Neighborhood Association made seven zoning requests to preserve the scale, character and diversity of the area. Six of the proposed changes were already in place, according to the report.

The seventh — a request to downzone Pico Boulevard — would conflict with the association's and the community's stated desire for more affordable housing. James and Yeo said downzoning could potentially cost the neighborhood 1,000 new units.

"The idea of producing more affordable, senior, workforce and/or middle-income housing was one of the most common recommendations from the community that came out of the public outreach for the Pico Wellbeing Project," the report said. "Reducing density is in direct conflict with the Pico goal to support more affordable housing."

Public outreach also revealed that many Pico residents are concerned about gentrification and the loss of longtime community members, not development, according to the report.

"Very few concerns were expressed about over-development, compared to many more comments on the inadequacy of the housing stock and the wish to build more housing for all income levels, especially for low-income," the report said. "In particular, Pico teenagers who attended the two youth workshops expressed worry that they would not be able to stay in the neighborhood in the years to come."

ROGERS

transdisciplinary framework challenges students to think for themselves and take responsibility for their learning as they explore local and global issues and opportunities in real-life contexts, according to the program's website.

"So rather than the traditional model of education where it's sit down, be quiet and let's listen to the teacher and learn what I say, we do the exact opposite," Bourke said. "We encourage students to ask questions; we encourage them to make observations and develop ideas about the world."

Brennon Dixson

WILL ROGERS: Educator Ellen Altquist visited Will Rogers to help a group of parents explore the International Baccalaureate program and its 6 transdisciplinary themes. The meeting is one of many that have been held in an effort to bring International Baccalaureate's Primary Years Programme to campus.

Bourke added one of the most important aspects and benefits of IB's Primary Years Programme is the concept of learner agency.

"We want students to understand themselves as agents who can direct their education, who can make a difference in the world; who can make a difference in the world — even in a kindergarten classroom," Bourke said, before discussing the program's focus on global thinking and international mindedness.

"Another part of the program's mission is they want children to be aware of different ways of thinking, living and the fact that more than one opinion can be right," Bourke said. "So we also hope to instill the idea that it doesn't have to be us versus them or black and white; we can come together and have that dissonance and conversation and learning, and at the end of the day, we know it's okay to think differently because we're different people."

Bourke added he believes the school's focus on STEM — science, technology, engineering and math — will help students excel in the new inquiry-based curriculum.

"We are a STEM school and that's all about asking questions and inquiry, so we've been doing this stuff for a long time and we are really well-positioned to move into this," he said.

Will Rogers became a candidate school this year and it will remain so until it applies for authorization about a year from now, according to Bourke. Once the school applies for authorization, a team from IB will then visit to ensure the various PYP standards and practices are in place on-campus.

"They're going to interview students, staff, parents and the community all just to see if the program is happening as they expect it to. They don't expect perfection," Bourke said. But the team does want to see that children are developing agency, taking what they learned and applying it to real-world scenarios. There are a lot of guidelines and organizing themes listed out in the program's framework that govern what kids are learning, and IB wants to see those in action.

"We identify Santa Monica-Malibu as a 21st-century district and this is just another layer of that cake," Bourke said. "We need to raise students who are prepared to enter a very complex and nuanced society and we need them to be thinkers. We cannot just have people who are automatons that receive information. We need students to be doing something with that information and that's what IB does in an effort to create a more just and better world."

further hearings before Trump would decide whether to participate.

Nadler said Monday if the president really thought his call with Ukraine was "perfect," as he repeatedly says, he would "provide exculpatory information that refutes the overwhelming evidence of his abuse of power."

House rules provide the president and his attorneys the right to cross-examine witnesses and review evidence before the committee, but little ability to bring forward witnesses of their own.

Asked why not have his lawyers participate, Trump said Monday: "Because the whole thing is a hoax. Everybody knows it."

Associated Press writers Zeke Miller and Jill Colvin contributed to this report.
