Santa Monica police seek public's help to find suspected peeper

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

PUBLIC SAFETY FACILITY Santa Monica police are asking for the public's assistance to locate a suspected peeper.

Officers say the man was seen peering into a female's bedroom window near the intersection of Colorado Avenue and Centinela Avenue on three separate occasions between Nov. 23 and Nov. 30.

The man allegedly used a stepping device in order to reach the window each time, police said. Each incident took place between 5 p.m. and 10 p.m., according to a news release from the Santa Monica Police Department.

The suspect is described as a Hispanic male, 30 to 35 years old and 6 feet tall. He has short dark hair, dark eyes, a medium

Got the holiday blues? You're not alone

BY NICK TABOREK
Daily Press Staff Writer

MAIN LIBRARY Conventional wisdom has it that the holiday season is the most wonderful time of the year.

But, just ask any psychiatrist and you'll learn that for many people, December is synonymous not with merry making but with feelings of loneliness, sadness and even despair.

Dr. Andrew Leuchter, a UCLA psychiatrist, said it's fairly common for people with stresses in their lives to feel low around the holidays.

Part of the reason, he said, is that the holidays, like birthdays and anniversaries, are times when people tend to examine their lives and take stock of what they have. For many, the focus inevitably falls on what's missing, Leuchter told an audience at the Main Library's Martin Luther King Jr. Auditorium at a symposium sponsored by the UCLA Health System last week.

Am I moving forward? Am I achieving my goals? Am I doing better than I was last year?

They're questions that can put anyone in a tailspin. For some, the holidays are also when it's most difficult to avoid zeroing in on the gaps in their lives. A relationship that isn't working, a family member who passed away or even a loved one who doesn't make the effort to attend family functions — all of these things can take the

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS' BASKETBALL

Samohi wins tourney in overtime, 62-57

BY DANIEL ARCHULETA
Managing Editor

GARDENA Santa Monica High School's girls' basketball team has picked up where it left off last season.

The defending California Interscholastic Federation Southern Section Division 1A champs defeated Serra of Gardena, 62-57, in overtime on Saturday to win the Inglewood Circle of Champions Tournament. The game was played at Serra.

"Serra was tough," Samohi Head Coach Marty Verdugo said. "What made it difficult was having to go down there and beat them on their own court."

The Samohi Vikings had to rally from a 28-21 half-time deficit to force the overtime. Moriah Faulk led all scorers with 23 and was six of six from the free-throw line in OT.

The Vikings' second half push was surprising given that four starters were saddled with four fouls each.

JAMS educator honored at Lakers game

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

JAMS Shirley Compton is a loyal fan of the Los Angeles Lakers, but she hasn't been able to attend a game since the purple and gold played at the Great Western Forum.

It's been awhile, but on Friday Compton got a chance to check out her favorite team as it took on the Sacramento Kings, and she didn't even have to pay.

Compton, an assistant principal at John Adams Middle School, was a special guest of the Lakers, honored at half-time as part of the organization's "Educator and Student of the Month" program sponsored by Staples. Compton was nominated by parents at the school for her dedication to students.

"I'm very excited," Compton said Friday. "I'm a huge Laker fan and have been since the '80s and have the shiny jacket to prove it."

Compton, a third generation Santa Monican who attended local schools, took her father and hopes he falls back in love with her favorite squad. She said he was a die-hard fan but had a falling out when Shaquille O'Neal left for Miami. Apparently, he's not a Kobe fan.

Compton, who has been honored by NASDAQ for a lesson plan she created on economics, said she was inspired to become a teacher by those educators she met while growing up in the city by the sea.

"I always knew I wanted to be a teacher," she said. "As a kid I would always appoint myself to be the teacher's assistant ever since pre-school."

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

Mandy Moore's animated musical "Tangled," a new take on long-haired fairy-tale princess Rapunzel, sewed up the No. 1 spot with $21.5 million in its second weekend, according to studio estimates Sunday. That raised the Disney release's domestic total to $96.5 million.

"Tangled" had debuted in second-place over Thanksgiving behind "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1," which had been at the top of the box office the two previous weekends.

"Harry Potter" slipped to No. 2 this weekend with $16.7 million. The next-to-last chapter in the Warner Bros. franchise about the teen wizard lifted its domestic haul to $244.2 million.

Playing largely to family crowds, "Tangled" should hold on well through the holidays, said Chuck Viane, head of distribution for Disney.

"It's not very often the second week of a movie that it ends up the No. 1 movie," Viane said. "This will be one of those leggy movies that just keeps playing and playing."

With just $88 million in overall receipts, this was Hollywood's second-worst weekend of the year, behind the meager $81.8 million haul the weekend after Labor Day, according to box-office tracker Hollywood.com.

"It was a bad weekend," said Paul Dergarabedian, analyst for Hollywood.com. "It just shows that people got a lot of their movie-going out of the way over that five-day Thanksgiving weekend, and this weekend, they went, 'Ahh, we've seen it.'"

Overall revenues also were down from last year. The $88 million in revenue was off 11.5 percent compared to the same weekend in 2009, when "The Blind Side" led the box office with $20 million, according to Hollywood.com.

The weekend's only new wide release, Rogue Pictures' action tale "The Warrior's Way," was a dud with just $3.1 million. Playing in 1,622 theaters, "The Warrior's Way" averaged a weak $1,881 a cinema, compared to

Follow the law, folks

Editor:

I ride my bicycle to and from work every day and have lived in the Santa Monica/Venice area all my life. I agree that there are cyclist that do not adhere to the letter of the law just as pedestrians (jay walking, walking on restricted areas) and motorist (texting, cell phone use). I feel that the real problem is the sense of entitlement that some people feel that allows them to break the law and feel no concern for what their actions are creating for someone else. There would be less need to enforce these laws if people just thought about not only themselves but the people around them.

What about McKeown?

Editor:

I previously lived in a city where City Council members were all elected on the same day, and the one receiving the most votes became mayor. Since I always felt this to be the fairest way to fill such an important position, I was surprised to read Mr. Rosenberg's letter ("Mayor qualifications," Nov. 27-28, page 4) giving more credit to votes by our council than by the people of Santa Monica.

Mr. Rosenberg, however, is right when he says of Councilman Kevin McKeown "... City Council members ... know who he really is ... ." They know that, unlike them, he takes no developer money and is therefore his own man and can vote for the good of Santa Monica and not the good of developers.

Santa Monicans for Quality Chicanery

ALL OF THE VOTES CAST IN THE NOV. 2 election have finally been counted and five-term City Councilman Bob Holbrook won re-election by 56 votes. Holbrook nudged out Ted Winterer for the third of three full-term seats.

Many insiders believe that slow-growth Winterer was done in by a series of slick political mailings from an entity called Santa Monicans for Quality Government that were bought and paid for by hotel and developer money. SMQG was fronted by Fred Huebscher who runs a political consultancy/direct mail house out of Redondo Beach called The Political Scientists. The mailers featured Holbrook, Pam O'Connor, Gleam Davis and Terry O'Day — all incumbents. Huebscher also worked on O'Connor and Davis' campaigns.

I'd written previously that Huebscher told me that City Councilman Kevin McKeown was on one SMQG mailer and that Winterer's campaign consultant told him they had no money for slate mailers.

McKeown told me that his name appeared on a "Democratic Voter Guide" — a 20-page color booklet published by SMQG in part because he was named 41st Assembly District "Democrat of the Year" and his absence would have raised questions about the mailer's credibility. McKeown noted he didn't pay to be on the mailer.

Sharon Gilpin, Winterer's campaign manager, said they were offered and declined space on another Huebscher slate mailer — not a SMQG mailer.

SMQG's "Democratic Voter Guide" didn't mention Winterer even though he had the endorsement of both the Los Angeles County Democratic Party and the Santa Monica Democratic Club. The prevailing feeling is that the mailer's purpose was to mislead Democrats that Holbrook was endorsed by Democratic organizations. In this case, that guide may have pulled enough votes for Holbrook to beat Winterer.

It seems that neither Winterer nor McKeown were asked to appear on the public safety, school and environmental-themed SMQG mail pieces, which were heavily funded by developer and hotel interests. According to the tiny print on the mailers, O'Connor and Davis paid for space on the now controversial mailings while Holbrook and O' Day got a free ride.

CHOOSING THE BOSS

Tomorrow night, the new City Council will be sworn in. Members will decide amongst themselves who will be mayor and mayor pro tem. I see two options here that make sense. (1) Support McKeown for mayor for a two-year term. The popular McKeown has consistently received the most votes in elections — and after three terms (12 years) on the dais, he has yet to be mayor. He's way overdue. (2) Extend current Mayor Bobby Shriver for another year and award the second year to McKeown as a compromise.

ACADEMIC FREEDOM OR EXPLOITING STUDENTS?

Hotels, developers and their associates definitely hold the prize for dirty political deeds done dirt cheap, but Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights is close up their behinds. At issue is a classroom project involving Santa Monica College political science students campaigning for SMRR candidates in the last election.

On the surface this may seem benign, however, the professor of SMC's poli-sci class is Richard Tahvildaran-Jesswein, co-chair of SMRR.

Local attorney Stanley Epstein (also a student at SMC Emeritus College) filed a formal written complaint Dec. 1 with the college claiming this constitutes a conflict of interest and breach of professional ethics. He's asked for a full investigation. Epstein says that Tahvildaran-Jesswein's involvement is a conflict of interest because "the line is breached when an option is given for classroom credit in return for distribution of election materials of an organization in which the professor is co-chair."

This is nothing new and is standard operating procedure for Tahvildaran-Jesswein. It's been going on for years. Both SMRR and SMC traditionally have shrugged off criticism of the practice.

Don Girard, SMC's senior director of government relations and institutional communications, claims that students had a choice of volunteering for field work or completing an in-class assignment. The field work required 15 to 20 hours with a campaign and a report. Eighty of the 300 Political Science 1 students participated and distributed SMRR campaign material.

SMC administrators have avoided answering whether students had other choices, such as volunteering for a specific candidate or working with other political groups. Epstein told me that Tahvildaran-Jesswein already admitted to him that only SMRR materials were made available to the class.

Now that Epstein has pushed the issue, don't look to SMC's Board of Trustees for objectivity. It's entirely made up of SMRR old guard and activists.

Already its chair, retired Judge David Finkel, has dismissed Epstein's charges with a statement he posted online: "As long as student participation in political campaigns is not coerced, but is voluntary and comes with evenhanded choices, it is praiseworthy and should be applauded. Congratulations, Dr. Tahvildaran."

All students know the path to good grades is pleasing the professor. Unfortunately, before rushing to praise his fellow SMRR-mate, Judge Finkel should have recognized this assignment was not "evenhanded" (without partiality) and did constitute coercion.

I'm with Epstein on this. The whole situation smells like a cat's litterbox.

IAN JAMES
Associated Press

CARACAS, Venezuela From mangrove swamps in Venezuela to lowland forests in Indonesia, entire communities of plants and animals are under threat. Now scientists are figuring out how to catalog and map the world's most threatened ecosystems — just like their familiar list of endangered species.

Some experts say drawing up a global "Red List" of vanishing ecosystems would help them spot looming crises caused by everything from climate change to the cutting of forests, and would sharpen their focus on areas to conserve.

Along the shore of Venezuela's Lake Maracaibo, runoff filled with sediment and pesticides has been smothering animals that once lived among the roots of the mangrove trees, including crabs, fish hatchlings and shellfish, said Luz Esther Sanchez, a marine biologist and ecologist. She said saving the mangroves requires a comprehensive effort to reduce water pollution and halt the clearing of other forests upstream.

"Declaring the mangrove ecosystem threatened would be very useful for conservation," Sanchez said. "People stand up to defend dolphins. People stand up to defend turtles. But I've never seen them defend the mangrove forest with the same vehemence."

An international working group of biologists and conservation experts has been developing a system for classifying threats to ecosystems.

"If we can get a good, rigorous scientific system in place that is relatively easy to monitor worldwide ... you can follow these changes and describe them and ring the alarm bell where things might go wrong," said Dutch conservation expert Piet Wit.

He chairs the Commission of Ecosystem Management of the International Union for Conservation of Nature, or IUCN, which maintains the Red List of thousands of threatened plants and animals worldwide.

Some scientists caution that agreeing on precise categories to divvy up habitats would be a monumental task. But many already agree on some ecosystems that are threatened or endangered, including many coral reefs, salt marshes, mountain habitats threatened by rising global temperatures, grasslands in southern Russia and Brazil's Atlantic forest.

Logging poses a serious threat to the lowland forests on Indonesia's Borneo Island that are home to endangered orangutans. In the Andes, expanding farmland has fragmented the cloud forests where spectacled bears live.

"You usually get ecosystem decline occurring first, and then species decline later on," said Jon Paul Rodriguez, a conservation biologist at the Venezuelan Institute of Scientific Research who is leading the IUCN working group. He and 20 other experts laid out their proposals in an article published online by the journal Conservation Biology in November.

The list of habitats devastated by people has been growing. The once-vast Aral Sea between the former Soviet republics of Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan shrank by about 90 percent due to diversions of water, leaving behind a salty wasteland and abandoned fishing boats, and ruining the local economy. North American tall grass prairies have largely vanished, along with the game animals that once thrived in them. Some rivers, such as the Rio Grande, have been strangled by heavy pumping and now barely reach the sea.

Today, some efforts to save threatened species appear to be working. Humpback whales, for instance, have rebounded from "vulnerable" to being at low risk of extinction due to the international ban on commercial whaling. Strict regulations have helped the recovery of some fish that were once heavily overfished, such as striped bass along the U.S. mid-Atlantic coast.

One study released in October by a large international team of researchers found that efforts to save endangered animals are making a difference for dozens of species. The report concluded that the overall march toward extinction would have been about 20 percent faster if no conservation steps had been taken.

"Species Red Lists have already been a huge policy success, so there's reason to think that ecosystem Red Lists could be too, and could complement them," said Kathryn Rodriguez-Clark, an ecology and conservation specialist at the Venezuelan Institute of Scientific Research who is part of the IUCN effort.

Scientists and environmentalists have previously come up with their own systems for targeting habitats in danger of disappearing. Researchers in South Africa, Australia and Venezuela have begun to list and map out threatened ecosystems.

But the new effort aims to come up with a uniform, standard system of classifying habitats. Rodriguez said such a system could help identify new conservation goals, drawing on data from satellite images.

NOW THAT MANY CONSUMERS ARE beginning to care about their own environmental footprints, manufacturers are responding with loads of greener offerings. One good place to find them is the Greenpeace Guide to Greener Electronics, which ranks the 18 top manufacturers of personal computers, mobile phones, televisions and game consoles according to their policies on toxic chemicals, recycling and climate change. Greenpeace hopes that by publishing and regularly updating the guide they can both educate consumers about their choices and influence manufacturers to eliminate hazardous substances, take back and recycle their products responsibly, and reduce the climate impacts of their operations and products.

According to Greenpeace, the top five electronics manufacturers from a green perspective are Nokia, Sony Ericsson, Philips, HP and Samsung. These companies get high marks with Greenpeace for eliminating or scaling way back on the use of hazardous chemicals linked to cancer and other health and environmental problems, which in turn makes recycling their products less problematic.

Nokia gets top honors from Greenpeace for the second year in a row: All of the company's new phone models and accessories for 2010 are free of brominated compounds, chlorinated flame retardants and antimony trioxide, three of the most toxic chemicals used commonly in most mobile phones and other consumer electronics today. Toshiba, Microsoft and Nintendo are the last place finishers on Greenpeace's list for various reasons, including backtracking on or failing to make commitments to phase out chemicals used in the production of vinyl plastic (PVC) and brominated flame retardants (BFRs).

Aother good place to find info on green electronics and related products is the new website of TopTen USA, a non-profit that identifies and publicizes the most energy-efficient products on the market. The goal of the group—which is part of a global alliance of like-minded non-profits—is to make it easier for consumers to find the most energy- and money-saving models, which in turn encourages manufacturing innovations that will shift the whole market in a greener direction. Besides listing the greenest individual models of desktop computers, laptops, monitors and televisions TopTen USA also lists the greenest refrigerators, freezers, dishwashers, clothes washers and even vehicles.

The non-profit Green Electronics Council, initially set up to help government, institutional and corporate purchasers evaluate, compare and select electronic products based on various environmental attributes, has now opened up its EPEAT green certification database to consumers. Some 1,300 computers, thin clients, workstations and monitors from dozens of manufacturers now bear the EPEAT certification label ensuring compliance with green manufacturing and recycling standards. All federal purchasers are required to choose between EPEAT-certified models when possible, and the database has steadily gained traction across a wide range of industries. Now consumers can freely browse the listings to see how various items from the likes of Apple, LG, Panasonic, Lenovo and Sony, among others, stack up.

CHARLES J. HANLEY
AP Special Correspondent

CANCUN, Mexico Mexico's foreign secretary told the global climate conference on Sunday there will be "no hidden text and no secret negotiations" in the meeting's final days, assuring delegates Cancun will not see a repeat of the last hours of 2009's Copenhagen climate summit.

"The Mexican presidency will work with full transparency in the coming days," Foreign Secretary Patricia Espinosa declared at an unusual Sunday session of all parties in the difficult, slow-moving annual talks to find ways to combat climate change.

In closed-door midnight talks at last December's summit in the Danish capital, U.S. President Barack Obama and a handful of other leaders, including Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao, produced a "Copenhagen Accord," a document envisioning only voluntary reductions in global-warming gases and disappointing treaty nations ranging from Europe to small island states facing seas rising from global warming.

Dissident delegations led by Venezuela, Bolivia and other left-leaning Latin American governments, unhappy about the closed nature of the decision-making, refused to endorse the U.S.-brokered accord, leaving it without consensus support under the U.N. climate treaty.

Concerns arose of a similar problem here, where environment ministers, not government heads, are gathering to reach decisions in the conference's second week. Delegates spoke Sunday of a "ghost of Copenhagen" haunting the Cancun talks.

Seeking to dispel such concerns, Espinosa told delegates Sunday that "there will be no separate ministerial process" — that any smaller-scale consultations involving the ministers would be closely meshed with the full, 193-nation negotiation scheduled to end next Friday.

"I must say that there is no hidden text and no secret negotiations," she said.

The Cancun talks, at best, may produce decisions on side matters under the treaty: establishing a "green fund" to help poorer nations rein in greenhouse gases and to adapt their economies and infrastructure to a changing climate; an agreement making it easier for developing nations to obtain patented green technology from advanced nations; pinning down more elements of a system for compensating developing countries for protecting their forests.

What will not be resolved at Cancun is the core dispute in the climate talks: the issue of reducing carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases emitted by industry, vehicles and agriculture.

The U.S. has refused to join the rest of the industrialized world in the Kyoto Protocol, a 1997 add-on to the climate treaty that mandates modest emissions reductions by richer nations. The U.S. complained that it would hurt its economy and that Kyoto should have mandated actions as well by such emerging economies as China and India.

For their part, those poorer but growing nations have rejected calls that they submit to Kyoto-style legally binding commitments — not to reduce emissions, but to cut back on emissions growth.

Developing nations, generally with more to lose from climate change, are pressing for the richer countries to agree to a second period of legally binding emissions reductions under Kyoto, which otherwise expires in 2012.

But the election of a Republican majority in the U.S. House of Representatives last month all but guarantees that the U.S. will not take significant action to cut back emissions — essential to forging a broader deal for deeper emissions reductions, to include actions by China, India, Brazil and other emerging economies.

Under the Copenhagen Accord, the U.S. and others made voluntary pledges to cut emissions or limit their growth by specific percentages by 2020. But the U.N. says that even if they fulfill all those pledges, it will take the world only 60 percent of the way to keeping temperatures from rising.

San Diego landfill cited for high methane levels

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO High methane levels at San Diego's Miramar Landfill led to more than two dozen environmental violations in the past two years and the state declared the dump doesn't meet basic operating standards.

The city was cited 14 times for elevated gas levels underground, and an onsite contractor, Fortistar Methane Group, received 12 violations for air pollution and related problems, the San Diego Union Tribune reported Saturday.

The recurring problems at Miramar could lead to increased fines, technical assistance and harsher measures for Fortistar, said John Adams, compliance director with the San Diego Air Pollution Control District.

"When there is a repeat problem, we consider taking it to another level — taking it to county counsel, considering an abatement order or other legal remedies that would bring about a better compliance rate," said Adams, whose agency regulates gas releases from Miramar and other landfills.

In addition to gas leaks, Fortistar's violations at Miramar include reporting errors and failure to keep equipment in good working order. The company's president, Tom Gesicki, told the newspaper Fortistar is responding to regulators' concerns.

"We think our environmental record is excellent there and to the extent that we have issues, they are relatively minor," Gesicki said. "We are responsive and that landfill is very important to us."

Fortistar operates the methane collection system at Miramar. The company sells the collected gas as fuel to San Diego Gas & Electric.

Chris Gonaver, who heads San Diego's Environmental Services Department said Fortistar had not notified the city about the air quality violations as required by contract.

"Moving forward, I assure you that those will be part of our monthly meetings and we have requested from Fortistar complete documentation ... of violations they have received in the past two years so we get ourselves back on track where we should have been," Gonaver told the Union Tribune.

Methane, produced by decaying waste, is a greenhouse gas 23 times more potent than carbon dioxide. It's also flammable and explosive, making it a public safety threat.

County regulators said since 2007 the Miramar Landfill has generated about five times as many air quality violations as the other two major dumps, Sycamore and Otay. Unlike Miramar, those landfills are both privately operated.

Credit Card Debt?

Solutions that can help you get out of debt.

Tom Hill
CGA STAFF WRITER

Every three minutes another person falls behind on credit card debt. It's no wonder, since every major credit card company has nearly doubled the minimum monthly payment on consumers' bills. Federal Regulators forced the change because of their concern about the growing mountain of consumer debt, which stands at $2.17 trillion. Many consumers can only pay the minimum payment, which can take up to 30 years to pay off. Now, relief is in sight for millions of Americans.

CreditGUARD of America, a non-profit licensed debt management service provider, is making a new program available to lower debt payments and become free of all credit card debt in only three to five years. Consumers need only $2,000 or more in total credit card debt and falling behind on any account, to cut their payment by 35% to 50%, and reduce or eliminate interest charges altogether.

Over 200,000 families, located throughout the U.S. have regained financial independence with CreditGUARD's licensed, bonded and insured service. CreditGUARD of America has received high marks in consumer surveys showing high consumer satisfaction and confidence. The CreditGUARD debt management program can lower your monthly payments by hundreds and save you thousands!

One such case is Sandra L. who proclaimed "CreditGUARD cut my monthly payment by $656 and saved me over $29,206.53 in interest. They saved my way of life and gave me back my piece of mind! Now I can see myself on my way to becoming debt free." or Jeffery C. who said "CreditGUARD of America helped me consolidate 3 of my credit cards into one affordable payment. They are now saving me nearly $200 a month. Now I will be debt free in 2 years or less"

Native Americans must wait for money from Congress

MATT VOLZ
Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. Native Americans who sued the federal government over lost royalties have been waiting nearly 15 years for the $3.4 billion settlement Congress passed last month. Now they'll have to wait some more.

The plaintiffs expect it will be at least next August before Indian trust landowners see a dime, and six months after that before the last claims are settled with trust account holders.

The lead plaintiff in the class-action lawsuit, Elouise Cobell of Browning, Mont., said the biggest obstacle by far to the settlement was obtaining congressional approval — indeed, it took nearly a year and a couple of false starts before the Senate authorized the deal.

"I want to run out and thank the whole world for getting it through the Senate," Cobell told The Associated Press. "We still have work to do. One thing about this case, it hasn't been easy. You don't take anything for granted. You make sure it all gets approved."

Once President Barack Obama signs the legislation, the settlement must still go through a gauntlet of court hearings, a media campaign to notify beneficiaries, waiting periods for comments and appeals. Even after the first checks are cut, it will still take months more to sort through the process of deciding who should or should not be included as a plaintiff — a number that will likely end up somewhere between 300,000 and 550,000, plaintiffs' representatives said.

"Making sure it is a fair process takes time," said Geoffrey Rempel, an accountant consulting for Cobell's Washington, D.C., legal team.

The dispute began over property owned by the Indians and held in trust by the government. The Department of Interior leases that land to others for farming or resource development, and is supposed to pay the Indians the money generated by the land into Individual Indian Money trust accounts, or IIMs.

Those IIMs were created in 1887 by lawmakers who believed at the time that Indians could not handle their own financial affairs.

But Cobell found there was no real accounting of how much money was in the trust pool of IIM accounts. She estimated the amount of money mishandled, stolen or squandered from those accounts over the last century may actually total more than $100 billion.

Under the settlement, $1.5 billion would go to individual Indian account holders. Another $1.9 billion would be used by the government to buy up fractionated Indian lands from individual owners willing to sell, and then turn those lands over to tribes. Another $60 million would be used for a scholarship fund for Indian students.

But it will take time to divvy up that $3.4 billion pie.

The White House said it has not picked a date to sign the legislation. which also includes a $1.2 billion settlement with black farmers who say they were discriminated against. The Cobell plaintiffs said they expect the signing to happen this week.

If that happens, Rempel said, it will kick off a complicated process that would span into early 2012 in a best-case scenario.

First, a preliminary court hearing would be scheduled for mid-December. That hearing would trigger a 30-day ramp-up notice to buy advertisements and get the material together for the class notification.

Under that time frame, the 90-day class notification period involving ad campaigns would begin in January and run until April. Another 30-day period is required after that to give the parties a chance to respond to any questions that come up.

The settlement would then be finalized at a fairness hearing, which would be held in May in this scenario. Any beneficiary who wished to comment on the settlement would be able to speak, and the judge would then give his final ruling.

Another 60-day waiting period would follow that hearing, during which time any party can appeal the court's ruling. The deal is final after that period elapses, which would be August in this scenario.

Only then would the first checks go to the 337,000 plaintiffs in the lawsuit's first class, the group known as the "historical accounting class" who have been identified by the Department of Interior since 1994, just before the lawsuit was filed, Rempel said.

Then Rempel expects it to take another six months to determine who is entitled to receive a portion of the settlement in the second class of the lawsuit, the trust administration class.

Those plaintiffs, which can also include Indians from the historical class, could receive anywhere between $500 to $1 million each, depending on the estimated value of their trust accounts.

But the Interior Department has lost track of some beneficiary records, have records that may be in conflict or have old addresses for beneficiaries, Rempel said.

BLUES

When feeling low around the holidays, Leuchter said there are a number of things to keep in mind. First, it's important to differentiate between clinical depression and a case of the seasonal blues.

Serious depression usually causes a low mood in conjunction with physical symptoms like sleep disturbance (both the inability to get a good night's sleep and excessive sleeping can be signs of depression), a change in energy level, physical aches and pains and a change in appetite. Psychiatrists say the symptoms of major depression have to last at least two weeks.

If December has you feeling down, here are some psychiatrist-approved tips to keep in mind:

APPRECIATE WHAT YOU HAVE

It's most likely a good idea not to dwell on the past.

"Holidays are about the here and now," Leuchter said. "It's not about reflecting on who you've lost or what you don't have."

Focus on what you've got rather than on what you don't — even if it's not what you want.

TRY NOT TO BE ALONE

Don't fret about who isn't around or who doesn't want you around. Find whatever community you do have and get engaged. Establishing connections is at the root of getting in the holiday spirit.

BE FLEXIBLE

For many, holidays are when they most notice the shifts in roles that occur throughout life. Maybe Christmas or Chanukah always used to be at your house, but now your children have grown up and are hosting their own celebrations. According to Leuchter, it's important to accept these changes and allow people to have their new identities. Instead of seeing the change as a loss, try to see it as an exciting new part of life and do your best to adapt.

LIMIT ALCOHOL INTAKE

Some people drink because they're feeling down. But according to Leuchter, excessive drinking is actually a factor that causes depression. While holiday functions usually mean a drink is never far away, don't fall into a vicious cycle by overdoing it.

LEARN WHEN TO CUT LOSSES

There are some relationships that have such a troubled history that it's best not to fret every time something goes wrong. If a family member or someone else in your life is a constant source of bad feelings, it's probably best to take comfort in knowing you've done your best and move on.

Samohi's Bianka Balthazar was named MVP and point guard Kristina "KJ" Johnson was named to the all-tourney team. Verdugo said he was surprised that Faulk wasn't honored. It was the second time that the UCLA-bound Faulk scored 23 points during the tourney.

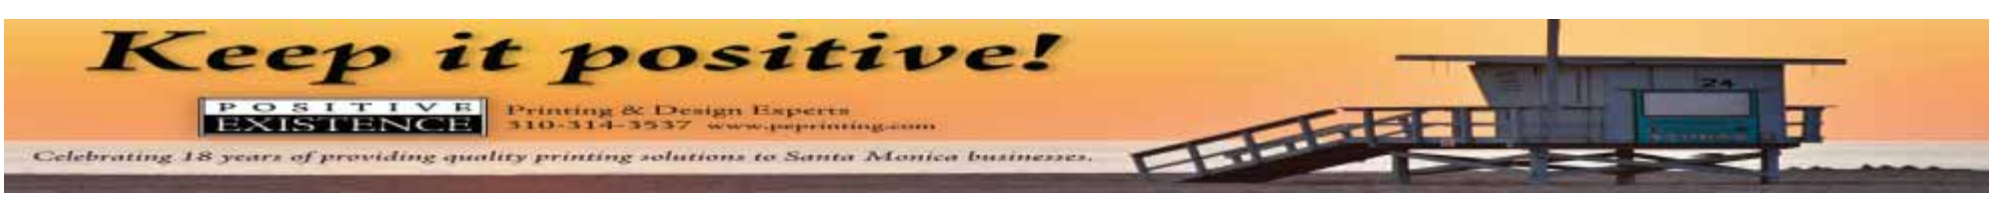

The win improves Samohi's record to 5-0, the best start in Verdugo's five years as coach. Also, the win was the first preseason tournament that the team has taken home in that time.

Next for the Vikings comes the Redondo Tournament, which begins this week. The field includes fellow Ocean League teams Beverly Hills and Inglewood, Bishop Montgomery and Long Beach Millikan. The Vikings open against Peninsula on Tuesday at Redondo High School.

"This should work out well for us," Verdugo said. "I like our chances."

South Korean trade minister defends deal

KELLY OLSEN
AP Business Writer

SEOUL, South Korea South Korea's top trade official defended a hard-fought compromise with the United States to salvage a stalled free trade agreement, rejecting accusations that his government gave up too much to seal the deal.

Trade Minister Kim Jong-hoon and U.S. Trade Representative Ron Kirk reached a final agreement Friday after four days of negotiations focusing on U.S. demands that South Korea rework the accord to address its big trade surplus in automobiles.

The South Korea-U.S. free trade agreement was originally signed in June 2007, but steps to ratify it stalled amid changes in government in both countries, the global financial crisis and American demands that South Korea take steps to reduce their imbalance in auto trade and ease restrictions on imports of American beef.

South Korea, which long said it would not budge on the initial deal, ultimately compromised and addressed key U.S. concerns on cars, though it also received benefits in return such as a two-year delay in the elimination of its tariffs on American pork. Beef was not included in the deal.

"I cannot agree with some views that (the agreement was the result) of our unilateral concession," Kim, the trade minister, told reporters Sunday, calling it a "win-win" deal.

Kim returned to South Korea on Saturday after participating in the talks near Washington. Before becoming trade minister he was South Korea's chief negotiator for the original agreement.

The pact, which requires approval by the U.S. Congress and South Korea's National Assembly, is the largest for the U.S. since the North American Free Trade Agreement with Canada and Mexico in 1994.

Among key provisions of the revised deal, Seoul would allow the U.S. to lift a 2.5 percent tariff on South Korean passenger cars four years after the agreement takes effect, instead of immediately. South Korea, meanwhile, would halve its tariff on U.S. cars to 4 percent from 8 percent and eliminate it after four years. Also, each U.S. automaker would be able to export up to 25,000 cars to South Korea as long as they meet U.S. safety standards. U.S. vehicle exports beyond that figure would have to meet South Korean safety standards. Disputes over safety standards had stood as a barrier to U.S. auto exports to South Korea.

Figures compiled by auto industry groups in South Korea show that it exported 449,403 vehicles to the U.S. last year, while South Koreans purchased 6,140 vehicles made by American manufacturers, based on vehicle registrations.

The South Korean figures do not include the some 200,000 vehicles sold in the U.S. last year by Hyundai Motor Co. that were made at its American plant nor the more than 100,000 sold in South Korea by GM Daewoo Auto & Technology Co., the South Korean unit of General Motors Co.

The Korea Automobile Manufacturers Association welcomed the agreement, saying it eliminated uncertainties in the U.S. market and that South Korean automakers were forecast to increase their market share, Yonhap news agency reported.

The new agreement, however, does not address South Korean restrictions on American beef. The U.S. has sought greater access to the market in South Korea, which imposes controls on shipments of U.S. meat from older animals over fears of mad cow disease.

The renewed push to move the deal forward came after talks last month in Seoul between President Barack Obama and his South Korean counterpart Lee Myung-bak failed to achieve a breakthrough.

Last week's negotiations also took place after a deadly North Korean artillery barrage on a small South Korean island, though Kim said the attack did not affect the talks and that he engaged in them completely from an economic point of view.

Hours before Kim spoke in Seoul, Obama praised the deal as a landmark agreement that promises to boost the U.S. auto industry and support tens of thousands of American jobs.

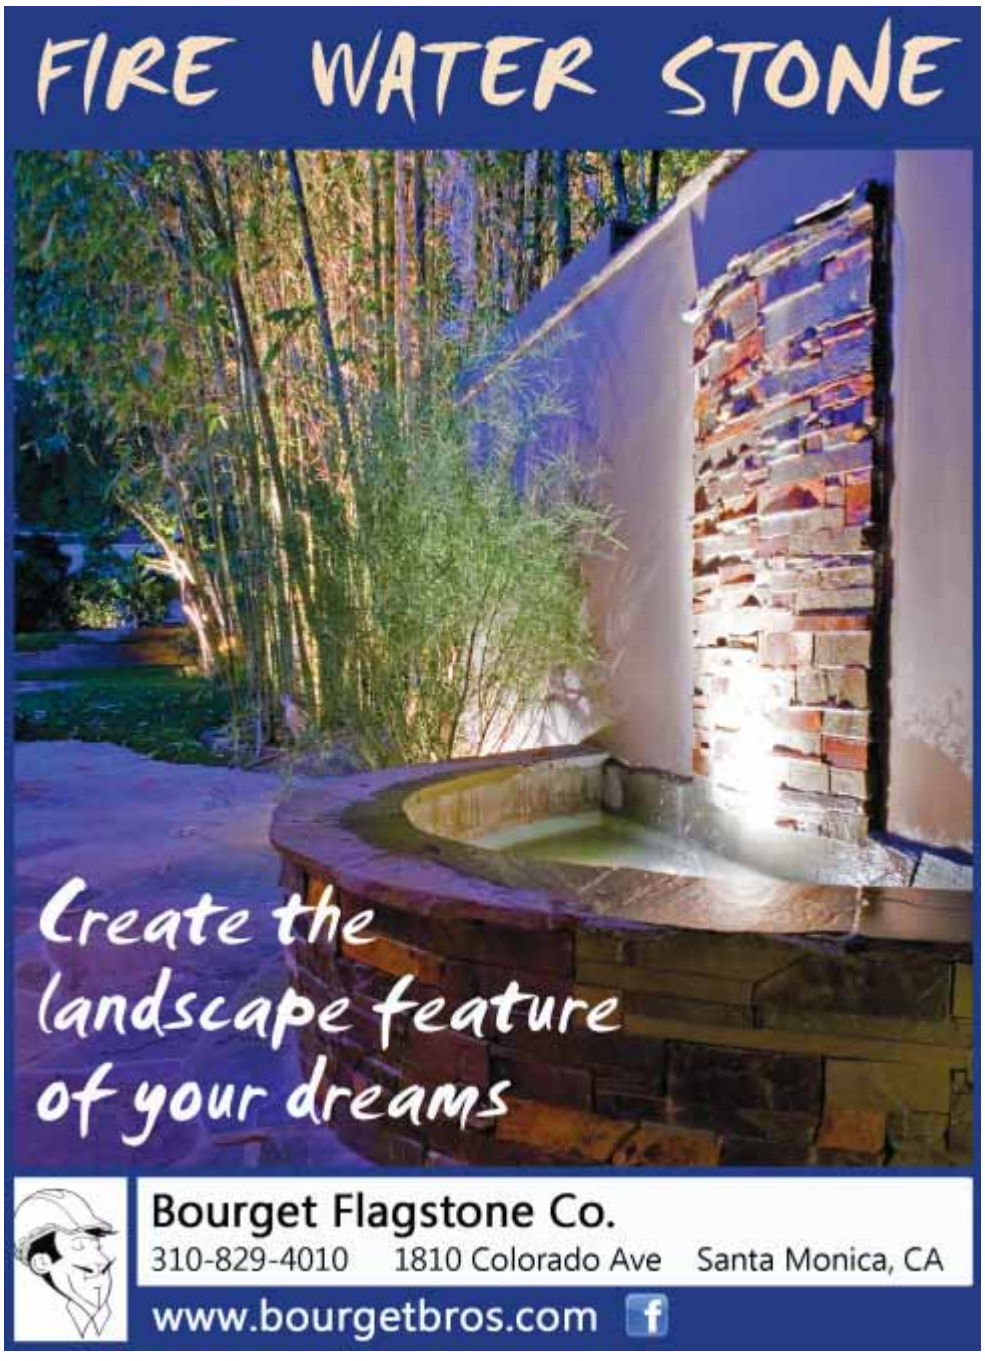

"This agreement shows the U.S. is willing to lead and compete in the global economy," he told reporters Saturday at the White House, calling it a triumph for American workers.

The breakthrough can be seen as an achievement for Obama, who has drawn criticism over the slow U.S. economic recovery and stubbornly high unemployment rate. He had long criticized the original deal as being bad for the U.S.

South Korea's president, meanwhile, has drawn flak at home for an allegedly weak and indecisive response to the North Korean artillery attack. His government has come under further scrutiny over the trade deal, with opposition parties seeing it as a capitulation to Washington.

Lee Chun-seok, spokesman for the main opposition Democratic Party, accused the government of making "massive concessions against our national interests," his party said. "We cannot find the principle of reciprocity anywhere in the agreement."

Protesters, including Kang and other opposition lawmakers, shouted slogans and held up signs Sunday in central Seoul criticizing the president and his policies. Police said the crowd numbered about 2,200 and the protest was peaceful.

NCAA FOOTBALL

RALPH D. RUSSO
AP College Football Writer

CORVALLIS, Ore. As the third quarter turned to the fourth and AC/DC blared in Reser Stadium, Oregon State's sideline was rocking, its players thinking they just might pull off a monster upset.

On its side, top-ranked Oregon stayed cool — focused on winning the day.

When it was done, and a spot in the BCS national title game was secured, that's when the Ducks finally let loose.

Heisman Trophy contender LaMichael James, Kenjon Barner and the fast-paced Ducks negotiated the last speed bump on the way to Glendale, Ariz., grinding out a 37-20 victory over the Beavers in the Civil War on Saturday.

The matchup becomes official Sunday, but there will be no surprises when the final Bowl Championship Series standings come out: Oregon will play Auburn on Jan. 10 for its first national championship.

"The best part about it is ... we expected this," Ducks defensive tackle Brandon Bair said. "It's the way we prepared, the way we planned, we expected this."

James ran for 134 yards and two touchdowns while Barner had 133 yards and scored twice for the Ducks (12-0, 9-0 Pac-10), who used some stiff defense in the red zone — led by Bair and Casey Matthews — and three interceptions to fend off their feisty rivals.

Not until the fourth quarter did Oregon finally shake free.

Barner's 23-yard touchdown run with 12:16 made it 30-13 and James popped through the middle for a 10-yard score with 4:27 left to seal it.

Jacquizz Rodgers had 87 yards rushing for the Beavers (5-7, 4-5) and scored a touchdown, but they were forced to settle for short field goals twice after good third-quarter drives — and that just won't do against the most prolific offense in the country. Oregon State's offense was led by quarterback Ryan Katz, who starred for Santa Monica High School.

"We should have gotten into the end zone on those field goals. It hurt us bad," said Markus Wheaton, who had 10 catches for 137 yards and a fourth-quarter touchdown that was too little too late.

When the clock hit 00:00, James and his teammates bounded over to a corner of the stadium to celebrate with their band, their famous Donald Duck-clone mascot and their fans.

The Oregon faithful spilled onto the field and the push up-pumping mascot got swallowed up as he crowd surfed. The party was headed south, 40 miles down Interstate 5 to Eugene.

The Ducks, the Pac-10's new power with their high-speed spread offense, rising star coach Chip Kelly and the wildest uniforms Nike and Oregon alumnus Phil Knight can provide (silver helmets and pants on this day), are relative newcomers among college football's elite.

Yet Kelly disdains such big-picture talk about a shift in the landscape. "Win the day," is his motto — and there are 37 between now and the national title game.

"We're not going to play a national championship right now, we're going to prepare for one," he said. "But we got to this point by our preparation and we know we're going to have to go to work for the next month to show up on the 10th."

TCU, which was sitting in third-place in the BCS standings coming into the weekend and needed an upset to get to the championship game, didn't get it from the Beavers in the 114th Civil War. No. 2 Auburn, meanwhile, crushed South Carolina in the SEC championship, ending the Frogs' hopes.

Oregon State was simply looking to get to .500 and avoid sitting out the bowl season for the first time since the 2005 season. The Beavers didn't play like a three-touchdown underdog and Oregon never did unleash a wave of big plays, like those that have consumed so many other teams.

The Beavers' blitzes got to quarterback Darron Thomas and the Ducks sometimes sputtered, failing to land a knock-out shot until late.

"We understand when it's time to grind it out you've got to grind it out," receiver Jeff Maehl said. "We're not going to have those explosive plays all the time."

The Ducks' longest play of the day came from a linebacker on a fake punt in the third quarter. Michael Clay, the upback, took a snap and burst through the middle of the line, rumbling 64 yards on a fourth down deep in Oregon territory.

That set up a 19-yard touchdown pass off a screen to D.J. Davis that made it 23-7.

The Beavers inched closer with two short field goals by Justin Kahut (26 and 22 yards), and 10 seconds into the fourth quarter Oregon's lead was 23-13. It could have been 23-21 if Oregon State turned those field goals into touchdowns.

"Big time. Big time stops," Thomas said. "Most people talk about our offense, but our defense came out big time."

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

BETH HARRIS
AP Racing Writer

INGLEWOOD Zenyatta bid a final farewell to her legions of fans on Sunday at Hollywood Park, pricking her cotton-stuffed ears at the gaggle of cameras one more time before heading into retirement.

The superstar mare who won 19 of her 20 career races patiently walked around the paddock before taking to the track for a last stroll. Fans cheered and snapped photos as Zenyatta made her way along the grandstand so everyone could see her.

"It's amazing the following she has and we're fans ourselves," Hall of Fame trainer Bob Baffert said.

Zenyatta entered the paddock in between races wearing a pink saddlecloth from one of her wins in the Apple Blossom Handicap. Groom Mario Espinoza walked her in circles as 11,216 fans yelled her name and photographed every shake of her head.

She made her farewell tour without a rider in the saddle, a way to keep her low-key in an atmosphere that otherwise suggested she would be racing. It was several minutes before Zenyatta briefly high-stepped, a move that drew an approving roar from the crowd that mostly ignored the running of the sixth race while watching her.

"You can have a 20-year lull and when something like Zenyatta comes along, the public responds," said Bo Derek, a member of the California Horse Racing Board. "The fans confirm I'm not the only horse racing fan."

Owners Jerry and Ann Moss looked on lovingly as the 6-year-old mare made the rounds.

"We've been very lucky and blessed to have Zenyatta. This is a great day," a smiling Jerry Moss said, his arm wrapped around his wife. "We're feeling fantastic. We have a great horse retiring 100 percent sound."

The Mosses were joined by trainer John Shirreffs, his wife and the Mosses' racing manager Dottie Ingordo-Shirreffs, jockey Mike Smith, exercise rider Steve Willard, Espinoza, hotwalker Carmen Zamona and pony boy Freddy Wilson.

"It was a tough morning to say goodbye to 'Big Mama.' I think I'm going to miss her more than all my wives," said Wilson, who has been married four times.

As Zenyatta walked onto the track, a replay of her victory in the 2009 Breeders' Cup Classic played on the videoboard. Smith leaned against the rail, watching intently as she beat the boys in a race that bolstered her credentials.

Share with a pal, Gemini

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Let your intellect blend with your imagination. Take the lead role in a conversation or on a project. Though you might be jolted by some realization, you need to know the complete picture. Tonight: Count on a late one, as you mull over the day's happenings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You can be found deep in thought. Know that this act of reflection is the smart move as you decide what you want and the appropriate action to take. Tonight: Let your mind wander while listening to great music.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Others want to steer, and you won't even have the luxury of being a backseat driver. Though you might bend for a while, know that this implicit demand is not reasonable. When waters seem smoother, be willing to step in and change course. Tonight: Share with a pal.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ You might be one of the foot soldiers today. You perform many necessary tasks at home and/or at work to keep life moving in the right way. If you decide this course of action doesn't really work, take your time expressing that thought, or just wait. Tonight: Let a loved one vent.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Tap into your renowned innovative style. You'll come up with answers much quicker than you anticipated. You find solutions today but act tomorrow. Don't run matters to a speedy conclusion. Remember, there could be a glitch on the way. Tonight: Take some much-needed time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Your innate resourcefulness could be tested. Where you thought you had answers and could get results, you discover otherwise. Take your time. If you're not feeling 100 percent, slow down. You easily could make an error. Tonight: Acting like it is the weekend!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Keep a discussion moving. Yes, you might not want to hear someone's opinions, but trust that you need to. Schedule meetings and return calls. Your efficiency will be tested soon enough. Use care while driving later today. Tonight: Isn't it time to do nothing?

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Your sense of what is appropriate easily could be off. You might want to rethink an idea or plan. You might not always be right about everything, but neither is anyone else. Startling behavior sends you back into thought. Tonight: Chat with a friend. Catch up on news.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Others look to you because you exude energy and zest. If you don't want to play this leadership/mentoring role, let people know. Your creativity seems like an endless well right now. Tonight: Stop. Treat yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Tune in to your inner self. You could discover that you have a lot less energy than you realize. If you don't, you could see more backfires in one day than you care to. Accept yourself and allow for off moments. Tonight: Starting to feel restored.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Zero in on what you want. For some, this emphasis could involve a meeting and a new direction. If you can deal with a risk, go ahead. Do use care with your finances and a purchase, in any case. Tonight: On top of your game.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Read Sagittarius for a hint. Your drive and follow-through will make all the difference. Understanding evolves to a new level because of a discussion. Remember that you don't need to create an uproar in order to gain the results you want. Tonight: Join friends.

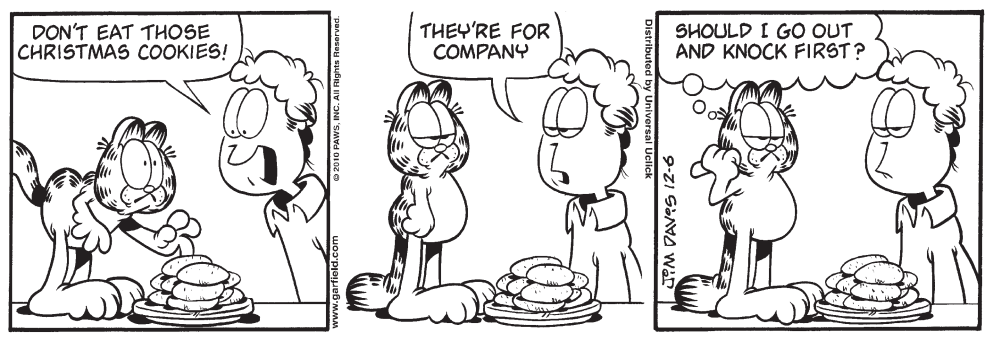

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

This year, you open up to a new beginning, making a longtime desire or hope possible. Use your imagination as inspiration. Your creativity flows beyond the obvious ideas. ARITHMO™

CrossMath + × − ÷

• Fill the grid with the set of given numbers (1 to 12) to satisfy the Equa demands (7 to 24) in the shaded boxes. The Equa demands represent the sum of the digits that you will insert into the empty squares.

• Each horizontal row has one Equa demand to satisfy; each vertical column also has one demand to satisfy. Each empty square in the grid dictates the math operation (addition +, subtraction -, multiplication X, and division ÷) that must be performed to meet the demands.

• You must follow the given math operations for each square and you must make sure all the numbers satisfy the demands in the shaded boxes when connected in adjacent threes and calculated together from left to right, and top to bottom.

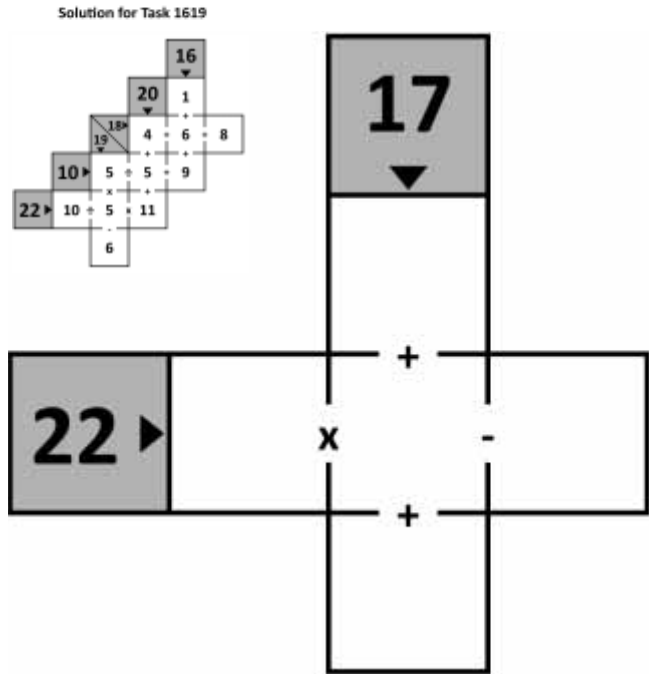

• The numbers you insert into the grid must satisfy the Equa demands both horizontally and vertically.

For more games, go to www.arithmo.com

Fill in the empty fields with the given numbers so when calculated together they satisfy all Equas in the gray boxes:

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ The collapse of the economy in 2008 might have reached the far corners of Earth, but evidently not to Planet Calypso, the make-believe asteroid containing make-believe real estate in the multiplayer online game Entropia Universe, where resort entrepreneur Jon Jacobs recently cashed out his properties for $635,000 -- in real (not make-believe) U.S. dollars. Since Jacobs' original 2005 investment was $100,000 (a record at that time), he thus has earned an average 35 percent annual return. As players landed on Jacobs' properties, to hunt or to mine precious substances, they paid fees, and Jacobs' buyers are obviously optimistic they can maintain that income stream. A recent study by the marketing firm In-Stat estimated that online players will spend $7 billion in 2010 on make-believe property and goods.

■ In September, the U.K.'s coalition government announced the imminent consolidation of anti-discrimination laws known as the Equality Act -- despite critics' warnings that it could stunt economic growth by tying up the workplace in a morass of lawsuits in which workers could sue for almost any perceived offense. Under the new concept of "third-party harassment," for example, an employee who merely overhears another person -- even a customer of his employer -- say something he finds offensive could sue the employer. Critics also complained that the law adds to the traditional group of specially protected, oppressed people the minorities vegans, teetotalers, Gypsies and "travelers" (grifters).
