Frank Gehry, the most celebrated architect of his time, dies at 96

Frank Gehry, who designed some of the most imaginative buildings ever constructed and achieved a level of worldwide acclaim seldom afforded any architect, has died. He was 96.

Gehry died Friday in his home in Santa Monica after a brief respiratory illness, said Meaghan Lloyd, chief of staff at Gehry Partners LLP.

Gehry's fascination with modern pop art led to the creation of distinctive, striking buildings. Among his many masterpieces are the Guggenheim Museum in Bilbao, Spain; The Walt Disney Concert Hall in Los Angeles and Berlin's DZ Bank Building.

He also designed an expansion of Facebook's Northern California headquarters at the insistence of the company's CEO, Mark Zuckerberg.

Gehry was awarded every major prize architecture has to offer, including the field's top honor, the Pritzker Prize, for what has been described as "refreshingly original and totally American" work.

Other honors include the Royal Institute of British Architects gold medal, the Americans for the Arts lifetime achievement award, and his native country's highest honor, the Companion of the Order of Canada.

UCLA studies reveal extent of air quality damage from Los Angeles, California wildfires

MAAZ ALIN
SMDP Staff Writer

Two peer-reviewed studies led by UCLA researchers have documented the severe air quality impacts of recent California wildfires, revealing how dangerous smoke particles spread across communities and highlighting gaps in current monitoring systems.

The studies, published by UCLA Fielding School of Public Health researchers, examined both the devastating January 2025 Los Angeles County fires and the major 2018 blazes across California, providing crucial insights into wildfire smoke exposure as fire seasons continue to lengthen across

City Clerk Nikima Newsome to resign in January continuing wave of departures

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

City Clerk Nikima Newsome has announced she will resign from her position in January for a new career opportunity, becoming the latest in a series of high-level exits from Santa Monica's senior leadership in 2025.

Newsome has worked for the city since 2019 and was appointed city clerk in July 2024 after serving in the interim role for six months following the retirement of Denise Anderson-Warren. Her last day with the city will be Jan. 7, 2026.

"Niki has played an important role in helping keep the city's work moving during some very difficult moments," Mayor Lana Negrete said. "I appreciate the steady commitment she brought to her position and thank her for her service to Santa Monica. I wish her nothing but success ahead."

During her tenure, Newsome implemented remote public comment and streamlined the public comment process for Council meetings. She also developed the Loving Democracy – Why We Vote program during the 2024 election.

The City Council is slated to begin discussions about the recruitment process for a new city clerk in closed session on Dec. 9.

'We may be deporting the wrong people': New poll shows doubts about immigration crackdown

If you found out your neighbor had a past criminal conviction, your knee-jerk reaction might be that you'd want them relocated.

But what if that person committed a burglary in their late teens, served years in state prison, turned their life around, and now mentors at-risk youth?

Do the details matter? Researchers found that they do.

A new poll by Goodwin Simon Strategic Research examines California voters' attitudes toward due process for immigrants with criminal convictions during the Trump administration's nationwide crackdown on unauthorized immigration. The survey also examined support for how tax dollars are spent and Californians' views on the state's sanctuary policies.

> This survey shows that there's clear concern about the current administration's approach to immigration enforcement
> - Sara Knight, a research director at Goodwin Simon Strategic Research

It found bipartisan support for ensuring that immigrants facing deportation receive due process, including ones with criminal records.

"This survey shows that there's clear concern about the current administration's approach to immigration enforcement," said Sara Knight, a research director at Goodwin Simon Strategic Research. "I'm not surprised by the results, but I am heartened to see how strong the support for due process is and the growing frustration with treating people inhumanely in our immigration system."

President Donald Trump campaigned on the promise of mass deportations that targeted criminals, among other things, and he has made good on that. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents have arrested more than 160,608 noncitizens nationwide with criminal convictions or pending charges, since his inauguration.

The Trump administration has sought to expand the use of "expedited removal," which allows immigration officers to remove certain non-citizens, like those convicted of crimes, from the United States without a hearing before an immigration judge.

Researchers say this latest poll by Goodwin Simon Strategic Research, released to CalMatters this week, also reflects waning support, even among a small majority of Republicans for the harshest immigration enforcement practices. It showed 84% of Democrats, 61% of independents, and 54% of Republicans agreed that "even if someone does have a record, they deserve due process and the chance to have their case heard by a judge before being deported."

The poll was commissioned by the Immigrant Legal Resource Center and the National Day Laborer Organizing Network, both pro-immigrant organizations. Goodwin Simon Strategic Research describes itself on its website as an "independent opinion research firm." Researchers wrote the survey questions and polled more than 1,200 self-identified voters. Knight said the partisan divide among those polled mirrored the party-affiliation split in the electorate. The margin of error was 3 points.

Some other recent polls echo similar conclusions released in recent weeks, including one released last week by UC Berkeley's Possibility Lab that found one-third of Latino voters who supported Trump now regret their choice. Another public opinion poll by the nonpartisan research firm Public Policy Institute of California found 71% of Californians surveyed said they disapproved of the job ICE is doing. And, a CNN exit poll after the Proposition 50 redistricting election on Nov. 4 found that about three-quarters of California voters said they're dissatisfied with or angry about the way things are going in the U.S., and 6 in 10 said the Trump administration's actions on immigration enforcement have gone too far.

Tricia McLaughlin, an assistant secretary at the Department of Homeland Security, pointed to other recent national polls to argue the public supports Trump's immigration policies.

"President Trump and Homeland Security) Secretary (Kristi) Noem are delivering on the American people's mandate to deport illegal aliens, and the latest polls show that support for the America First agenda has not wavered – including a New York Times poll that nearly 8 in 10 Americans support deporting illegal aliens with criminal records," McLaughlin said in a written statement.

"The American people, the law, and common sense are on our side, and we will not stop until law and order is restored after Biden's open border chaos flooded our country with the worst of the worst criminal illegal aliens," she continued.

FROM PRISON TO ICE

In the more recent Goodwin Simon Strategic Research poll, 61% of voters surveyed said they want California's prison system to stop directly handing immigrants over to Immigration and Customs Enforcement for deportation.

The state's sanctuary law does not apply to immigrants who have been convicted of serious crimes. State prisons have transferred

LA County supervisors vote to ban masked law enforcement officers

Martin Zamora

RALLY: Supervisor Hahn, Supervisor Horvath, and supporters rally outside of the Hall of Administration ahead of vote on ordinance.

The Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors voted 4-0 last week to prohibit law enforcement officers, including federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents, from wearing masks or concealing their identities while conducting operations in unincorporated areas of the county.

The proposed ordinance, which requires a second vote next week before taking effect, would also mandate that all law enforcement officers wear visible identification showing their agency name and either their last name or badge number when interacting with the public.

"This is how authoritarian secret police behaves — not legitimate law enforcement in a democracy," said Supervisor Janice Hahn, who proposed the ordinance with co-author Supervisor Lindsey P. Horvath. "ICE agents are violating our residents' rights every day they are on our streets. These agents hide their faces. They refuse to wear badges."

The measure comes amid heightened tensions over federal immigration enforcement and follows a similar state law recently passed in California. Los Angeles County declared a state of emergency over federal officers' actions in recent months, according to Horvath.

"For months, federal officers have taken actions that erode the trust of our communities," Horvath said. "Today, we are taking a necessary step toward restoring transparency. Los Angeles County is ending anonymous policing in our neighborhoods."

The ordinance amends Title 13 of the Los Angeles County Code and applies to all law enforcement officers operating in unincorporated areas, including local, state and federal agents. Supervisor Kathryn Barger abstained from the vote.

Hahn acknowledged the ordinance will likely face a legal challenge from the Trump Administration, which has already sued California over its similar state law.

"This is about defending the constitutional rights of the people we represent," Hahn said. "We cannot stand down now and allow this type of policing to be acceptable in America. So, if this means a fight in the courts with the federal government, I think it is a fight worth having."

The county ordinance differs from the state law in key ways. Unlike the state measure, the Los Angeles County version would apply to state law enforcement agencies such as the California Highway Patrol.

The ordinance also includes several pre-approved exceptions crafted in consultation with local law enforcement. Officers may wear facial coverings for medical reasons, including N95 or surgical masks to prevent disease transmission. Other exemptions include breathing apparatuses for hazardous conditions, motorcycle helmets while riding, SWAT team operations, and active undercover assignments.

According to the ordinance's legislative findings, masked officers can increase public fear and make it difficult for people to distinguish legitimate law enforcement from imposters. The Los Angeles Times reported instances of people in Fresno and Orange counties impersonating officers, with some committing thefts.

"Facial coverings limit the visibility of facial expressions, which are an essential component of nonverbal communication," the ordinance states. "In high-stress or emotionally charged interactions, a person's inability to read an officer's expression may lead to a misinterpretation of tone or intent, increasing the risk of conflict."

GUEST COMMENTARY

Assembly Speaker Rivas promises to scrutinize how California's new laws work

The California Legislature not only habitually passes legislation without considering downside risks, it also only rarely examines whether those new laws deliver the promised results.

The latter is called "oversight," and while legislators often tout its virtues, only rarely do they seriously implement it. What are termed "oversight hearings" are often merely exercises in self-congratulation or vehicles for grinding political axes, rather than objective inquiries into efficacy.

Robert Rivas, the speaker of the state Assembly, says he wants to make real oversight a regular practice starting next year, terming it "outcomes review."

"Passing laws is only the first step," Rivas said in a statement as he announced the new effort. "The real test is ensuring they work. Gone are the days when laws can be signed and forgotten. The outcomes review tool empowers Assembly members to evaluate real-world outcomes, engage directly with residents, and refine our solutions for greater impact. It's a forward-looking approach to oversight that every 21st century Legislature should adopt."

The program includes identifying specific laws to be examined, scheduling hearings and community meetings to invite public comment on how the targeted laws are working and, finally, announcing what was learned and what, if any, changes need to be made to make the laws more effective.

Rivas said the new process would begin with four measures:

Assembly Bill 744, passed in 2019 and carried by Assemblywoman Cecilia Aguiar-Curry, a Davis Democrat, requires health insurers to cover medical appointments via the internet the same way as in-person treatments.

AB 2011, a 2022 measure carried by Assemblywoman Buffy Wicks, an Oakland Democrat, makes it easier to build housing for low-income families in commercial areas.

AB 488, a 2021 law authored by Assemblywoman Jacqui Irwin, a Democrat from Thousand Oaks, enables the state Department of Justice to regulate online charitable solicitations.

AB 457, a measure passed this year and carried by Assemblywoman Esmeralda Soria, a Merced Democrat, streamlines permitting for farm worker housing.

On paper, what Rivas proposes makes a lot of sense. The Legislature should have always been checking up on the effects of its decrees, rather than assuming that what it does will automatically have the desired effects.

However, it appears that legislators will have to volunteer their bills for scrutiny, which could mean that only obviously successful ones will be subjected to the process.

SACRAMENTO: Speaker of the Assembly Robert Rivas addresses the media at the Capitol Annex Swing Space in Sacramento on Aug. 18, 2025.

It's difficult to believe that the turkeys — measures that are publicity stunts or payoffs to campaign contributors, for instance — will be scrutinized, much less those with unintended and negative consequences.

If Rivas is serious about oversight, the most controversial measures should be on the list even if their authors don't volunteer.

One of many examples: a measure Gov. Gavin Newsom signed in 2023 that raises the minimum wage for fast food workers to $20 an hour. Since it took effect, labor unions and the fast food industry have jousted over its impact.

The unions, backed by research from pro-union academics, have argued that the law increases economic security for fast food workers without having negative effects on employment or food prices. The industry counters that it has reduced fast food jobs, hastened the adoption of labor-saving technology and forced outlets to raise prices.

The situation cries out for objective research as part of an oversight process. California has two watchdog entities that could provide it, the State Auditor and the Legislative Analyst's Office.

To be taken seriously, the Assembly's new oversight process would have to tackle the tough bills, not just the low-hanging fruit, and ensure that the measures get rigorous and authoritative examination.

LA County Board Approves Support for Lawsuit Challenging Trump Administration Housing Funding Restrictions

The Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors approved Supervisor Lindsey P. Horvath's motion to support a multistate lawsuit challenging the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's 2025 Continuum of Care Notice of Funding Opportunity.

The action reflects the county's commitment to protecting critical housing resources at a moment when the federal government is imposing restrictions that threaten the stability of thousands of households and families. The new NOFO limits the county's ability to invest in proven solutions, undermines effective regional coordination and destabilizes programs designed to end homelessness.

"As this Trump Administration plays political games from a place of comfort and privilege, our communities are left to deal with the fallout. In Los Angeles County, families are stretching every dollar to stay housed while Washington pushes policies that pull the floor out from under them," Horvath said. "This HUD NOFO isn't leadership — it's an attack on the very tools that keep people safe and stably housed."

Horvath said the county knows what ends homelessness: housing, care and real partnership across every level of government.

"We will not stand by while an Administration more interested in spectacle than solutions undermines proven pathways out of homelessness," she said. "Many thanks to Governor Gavin Newsom's leadership, along with the State Attorneys General, for this action. We proudly stand together to protect our most vulnerable."

By joining the lawsuit led by Gov. Newsom and a coalition of states, Los Angeles County reaffirms its commitment to evidence-based solutions and defends the region's coordinated response to address the homelessness crisis.

Local Photographer Showcases Ocean Park History and Culture

Martin Makaryan, a Santa Monica resident and hobbyist photographer, will present "Ocean Park in Focus," a photography exhibition exploring the history, culture and everyday stories of the Ocean Park neighborhood.

The exhibition will be on public view Thursday, Dec. 11, from 11:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Bruce Lurie Gallery, 608 Santa Monica Blvd. An artist talk and brief remarks from community members, including former Mayor Judy Abdo and the president of the Santa Monica Chamber of Commerce, will take place at 4 p.m.

The project is supported by a City of Santa Monica 150th Anniversary microgrant and explores the neighborhood through a photographic lens. As a new resident, Makaryan said this work has been a way for him to learn about the community and highlight its character in an accessible, visual way.

"Ocean Park in Focus" features portraits and street scenes of one of Santa Monica's most storied neighborhoods. Once a seaside resort and amusement district, Ocean Park has evolved into a vibrant, inclusive community embodying the city's coastal character, where craftsman cottages, local shops and generations of residents coexist against the rhythm of the Pacific.

Makaryan, who moved to Ocean Park in August, turns his lens toward his own community to uncover its everyday poetry: the light, the people and the places that define its sense of belonging. His work blends documentary detail with an eye for intimacy, seeking to focus on what makes this corner of Santa Monica uniquely alive.

Limited-edition prints will be available for purchase.

The exhibition is open to the public from 11:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., with the artist talk at 4 p.m.

SMC Piano Ensemble to Perform Concerts Dec. 9 and 13

The Santa Monica College Piano Ensemble will present two concerts featuring music ranging from French Impressionists Claude Debussy and Erik Satie to American jazz and avant-garde composers Duke Ellington and John Cage.

Under the direction of SMC music instructor Sumy Takesue, intermediate and advanced SMC piano students will demonstrate the uniqueness and diversity of four-hand piano and piano duo compositions. The program will also feature "Living Room Music," along with the popular "Carnival of the Animals," narrated by SMC Music Department Chair Brian Driscoll. The concerts are "guaranteed to be more than twice as much fun as a solo piano performance."

A free concert will be held at 11:15 a.m. Tuesday, Dec. 9. Tickets for the morning concert are available at the SMC Music Office in PAC 211.

An early afternoon concert will be presented at 12:30 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 13. Tickets for the afternoon concert are $10 general admission, plus a modest service charge, and free for students with any student ID. Advance tickets can be purchased online at smc.edu/tickets.

Tickets may also be purchased starting 45 minutes before the performance begins at The Broad Stage Box Office at the SMC Performing Arts Center.

Both concerts will be held in The Edye at the SMC Performing Arts Center at Santa Monica Boulevard and 11th Street. Free parking is available on premises.

Seating is strictly on a first-arrival basis. More information is available by calling 310-434-4323.

Concerts are subject to change or cancellation without notice.

AIR QUALITY

the western United States.

The January fires in Pacific Palisades-Malibu and Altadena-Pasadena claimed at least 31 lives and damaged or destroyed more than 18,000 structures, according to county estimates. The blazes also sent dangerous airborne particles spreading across the Los Angeles basin, affecting air quality for millions of residents.

"Wildfires can degrade air quality in downwind communities," said Dr. Miriam Marlier, assistant professor in UCLA Fielding's Department of Environmental Health Sciences and a co-author of both studies. "By integrating data from multiple sources — ground monitors, atmospheric models, and satellites — our research aims to provide a more complete picture of smoke exposure during wildfire events."

Both studies focused on PM2.5, dangerous particles less than 2.5 micrometers in diameter — 30 times smaller than a human hair. These microscopic particles pose serious health risks because of their ability to penetrate deep into lungs and enter the bloodstream.

"Because these particles are so small, they can travel deep into your lungs and even enter your bloodstream — potentially leading to serious problems like heart or lung disease," said Dr. Michael Jerrett, professor in UCLA Fielding's Department of Environmental Health Sciences and co-director of the UCLA Center for Healthy Climate Solutions. "For anyone, exposure to fine particles can contribute to health issues, and for those with existing conditions or heightened sensitivity, the risks are even greater."

The 2025 Los Angeles County study, published in Environmental Science & Technology Letters, compared three air quality monitoring methods: federal monitoring stations, low-cost sensors and satellite imagery. Each data source showed distinct advantages and limitations.

Federal monitors provided highly accurate data but exist in limited numbers. Low-cost sensors are less accurate but more widespread. Satellite imagery covers larger areas but does not always reflect ground-level conditions.

"Timely and accurate air quality information is crucial for the public to reduce their smoke exposure during wildfire events," said Dr. Claire Schollaert, the study's lead author and a UCLA Fielding postdoctoral research scientist. "Combining federal monitors, low-cost sensors, and satellite data can provide a more complete picture of local air quality, which can help people make safer choices in real time."

The research showed smoke plumes traveled downwind and affected large portions of the LA basin, though the extent varied dramatically from day to day and neighborhood to neighborhood as fires progressed and wind patterns shifted.

The companion study of 2018 California fires, published in Environmental Science & Technology Air, found that the 10 largest fires that year accounted for nearly all detected fire-derived PM2.5 pollution. The team used atmospheric modeling with satellite-based wildfire emissions inventories to separate wildfire contributions from other pollution sources.

"The largest 2018 wildfires were responsible for the vast majority of downwind fire-derived PM2.5 concentrations in the locations that we examined in California," Marlier said.

However, researchers noted significant gaps remain in current monitoring capabilities, particularly for urban wildfires.

"During and after wildfires, people want to know whether it's safe to go outside or take their kid to school or the playground," said Dr. Lara Cushing, associate professor in the UCLA Fielding Department of Environmental Health Sciences. "We can't currently answer those questions thoroughly because existing air quality monitoring networks do not measure all pollutants of concern — including heavy metals and air toxics that are released when buildings and cars are burned in urban wildfires — and we lack data about the persistence of pollutants in indoor spaces that were exposed to smoke and ash."

The research teams included scientists from UCLA, UC Merced and the University of British Columbia. Members are currently seeking public participation in an ongoing study examining public health impacts after the 2025 fires.

The studies received funding from the National Science Foundation, California Air Resources Board, University of California Multicampus Research Program and Initiatives, and the Gordon and Betty Moore Foundation.

prohibition would be punishable as an infraction or misdemeanor. Violations of the identification requirement would be punishable as a misdemeanor. However, penalties would not apply to agencies that maintain and publicly post written policies in compliance with California Government Code sections 7288 and 7289.

Before the vote, Hahn and Horvath rallied with supporters outside the Kenneth Hahn Hall of Administration. They were joined by immigrant rights organizations including CHIRLA, Centro CHA, the TransLatina Coalition and the Filipino Migrant Center, as well as grassroots groups that have documented ICE activity since June, including the Harbor Area Peace Patrols and the Long Beach Rapid Response Network.

The second and final vote on the ordinance is scheduled for Dec. 9. If approved, the measure would take effect 30 days later.

The ordinance includes a severability clause stating that if any provision is found unconstitutional, the remaining portions would remain valid.

JOBS

More details will be shared when available.

Newsome's departure marks the latest change in Santa Monica's top ranks during a year of significant turnover that began when former City Manager David White left in February 2025. White announced in late 2024 he would leave his post after three years of service to take a deputy city manager position in Berkeley, prompting an interim appointment until Oliver Chi was hired.

The wave of exits accelerated following Chi's arrival, with multiple department heads resigning in quick succession. The cultural realignment underway at City Hall is also reflected in Chi's realignment plan that alters staffing levels in several departments, including hires to some positions.

In August, Police Chief Ramón Batista resigned in a sudden exit that stirred controversy. Batista, who had led the Santa Monica Police Department for nearly four years and was widely respected, stepped down amid what some accounts indicated were policy disagreements with the new city manager, though the city maintained it was a voluntary resignation. His departure shocked many residents.

City Attorney Doug Sloan announced in July that he would step down. Sloan had served as city attorney since 2022. The reasons for his resignation were not detailed publicly, but his departure added to the exodus of senior staff and required the appointment of an interim or new city attorney to fill the key legal role.

Heather Averick, Santa Monica's director of housing and human services, left her position in summer 2025 after serving from 2023 to 2025. The city announced the search for her replacement by August. Her departure was described as a voluntary move, though detailed reasons were not disclosed in public reports.

Community Development Director Arminé Chaparyan resigned after roughly seven months on the job. She had been appointed in early 2025 to lead the Community Development Department following a predecessor's retirement but decided to pursue another professional opportunity. In her resignation letter, Chaparyan expressed pride in her team and cited a chance to advance her career as the reason for leaving.

IMMIGRATION

to ICE more than 9,500 people with criminal records since Gov. Gavin Newsom took office in 2019, according to data released to CalMatters. So far in 2025, ICE has picked up 1,217 inmates directly from the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, the data shows.

The corrections department also provides ICE with information that helps the agency locate, arrest, and deport people who are not directly transferred. CalMatters obtained and reviewed more than 27,000 pages of emails between state prison employees and ICE. The emails show prison employees regularly communicate with ICE about individuals in state custody, including U.S. citizens. They often share personal details about their families, visitors, and phone calls. Often, these family members have no criminal records and are U.S. citizens

Newsom, U.S. Senator Alex Padilla, and Speaker Robert Rivas have all denounced ICE's broader deportation efforts. But all three have also indicated some level of support for having federal immigration officials remove noncitizens with prior convictions for violent crimes from the community.

The governor has stated he would veto legislation that seeks to restrict the state prison system's ability to coordinate with federal immigration authorities for the deportation of felons.

'WE MAY BE DEPORTING THE WRONG PEOPLE'

Goodwin Simon researchers found that voters' opinions change when they find out more details about the personal circumstances of a noncitizen with a past criminal conviction, even for violent crime. Pollsters gave two narratives to voters.

One was about a man who was brought to the United States from Mexico as a child. He got into a fight in his early 20s that left someone injured. The man was sentenced to seven years in state prison, where he turned his life around by taking college classes and helping other inmates get their high school diplomas. When he got out of prison, he was deported to Mexico before an immigration judge could decide on his case.

The other narrative was about a person closely connected to a man whose family fled genocide in Cambodia when he was a baby. In the U.S., the man was the lookout for a robbery when he was a teenager and served 30 years in state prison. Upon his release, prison officials turned him over to ICE.

"We may be deporting the wrong people. Although this last person did commit a crime, he has served his time and is now a valuable member of society, so it would be hard to say for sure if a person ever committed a crime deserves to be sent back. That is why the due process is important," one Republican voter from Sacramento responded to the poll. She shifted her opinion from the view that people with past criminal convictions should be automatically deported to favoring a judge reviewing each individual case after hearing the narratives.

After voters reviewed both pro- and anti-messaging and the two stories, support for having an immigration judge review individual cases before deportation increased from 84% to 90% among Democrats; from 61% to 74% among independents, but it dropped from 54% to 51% among Republicans. Central Coast voters and Republican women voters increased support for due process by 9 points after hearing the stories.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Dec. 8)

In this Year of Astute Awareness, you will see the world deeply, curiously and with a reverence that turns observation into art. You'll love people through their chaos and your own, and you'll turn that labor into poetry, laughter and insight. More highlights: a viral moment, an inspiring mentorship and the chance to transform passion into profit. Pisces and Capricorn adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 2, 10, 35, 44 and 16.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). It's OK to want to move up in the world. But it's also OK - even smart - to notice when there is no point in advancing. Take stock of where you are. The next rung up may actually be a step down.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). People usually do what seems best at the time. Trouble starts when there's nothing better to do. To give others good options like purpose, work, beauty and belonging is to provide a real service. It changes outcomes more than judgment ever could.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You may not be in the mood, but you'll still show up motivated, kind and fun. Keep giving love. Love inspires action, generosity and humor. It breaks the stagnation. Love is the antidote to stagnation.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Wanting food, attention, pleasure or rest is not always self-indulgent. In fact, cravings are actually signals of wisdom from the body and soul saying, "We need this." Your system is intelligent, and it's trying to guide you toward balance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). What you roll out today charts like a hit single - catchy, bright and totally you. It's not that the tune is brand-new. It's that your delivery makes it unforgettable. Your energy is a hook the world hums to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You'll give your best because you care about the outcome. If others don't notice, don't retreat. Just remind them. Some people need a little nudge to recognize good work. You'll be glad you spoke up for yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Living in a rerun? This scenario has been running a long time, perhaps since childhood. It's unwanted, but it's still familiar - and therefore, the pattern is comfortable in a weird way. And yet, you can, and will, break it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You're skilled in one realm and assume success should translate elsewhere, but each world has its own rules. Stay curious, ask questions, and study the lay of the land. When you finally move, it will be with ease and momentum.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You were made from the same stardust that lights up in your idols when they perform. You only see the qualities you admire in others because those same qualities are also in you. When you celebrate others, you celebrate you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Today calls for subtle glamour. Say less, mean more. Mystery draws the eye like light behind a curtain. An artful reveal happens in glimpses. You can feel the room from behind that curtain and sense when to step into view.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You learned it before: When you ask a question and get no response, that's your answer. Don't wait around. Let it be a liberation and a cue to keep moving. You're working a numbers game here, and you won't have to go much further to get your "yes."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Seeing others further along might make you wish you'd started sooner, but you're right on time. The fact that you began at all is what matters. Trust in the universal timing. Bonus: Love and support are gathering around this new chapter.

FRANK GEHRY

architecture from the University of Southern California in 1954 and serving in the Army, Gehry studied urban planning at Harvard University.

But his career got off to a slow start. He struggled for years to make ends meet, designing public housing projects, shopping centers and even driving a delivery truck for a time.

Eventually, he got the chance to design a modern shopping mall overlooking the Santa Monica Pier. He was determined to play it safe and came up with drawings for an enclosed shopping mall that looked similar to others in the United States in the 1980s.

To celebrate its completion, the mall's developer dropped by Gehry's house and was stunned by what he saw: The architect had transformed a modest 1920s-era bungalow into an inventive abode by remodeling it with chain-link fencing, exposed wood and corrugated metal.

Asked why he hadn't proposed something similar for the mall, Gehry replied, "Because I have to make a living."

If he really wanted to make a statement as an architect, he was told, he should drop that attitude and follow his creative vision.

Gehry would do just that for the rest of his life, working into his 90s to create buildings that doubled as stunning works of art.

As his acclaim grew, Gehry Partners LLP, the architectural firm he founded in 1962, grew with it, expanding to include more than 130 employees at one point. But as big as it got, Gehry insisted on personally overseeing every project it took on.

The headquarters of the InterActiveCorp, known as the IAC Building, took the shape of a shimmering beehive when it was completed in New York City's Chelsea district in 2007. The 76-story New York By Gehry building, once one of the world's tallest residential structures, was a stunning addition to the lower Manhattan skyline when it opened in 2011.

That same year, Gehry joined the faculty of his alma mater, the University of Southern California, as a professor of architecture. He also taught at Yale and Columbia University.

IMAGINATIVE DESIGNS DREW CRITICISM ALONG WITH PRAISE

Not everyone was a fan of Gehry's work. Some naysayers dismissed it as not much more than gigantic, lopsided reincarnations of the little scrap-wood cities he said he spent hours building when he was growing up in the mining town of Timmins, Ontario.

Princeton art critic Hal Foster dismissed many of his later efforts as "oppressive," arguing they were designed primarily to be tourist attractions. Some denounced the Disney Hall as looking like a collection of cardboard boxes that had been left out in the rain.

If the words of his critics annoyed Gehry, he rarely let on. Indeed, he even sometimes played along. He appeared as himself in a 2005 episode of "The Simpsons" cartoon show, in which he agreed to design a concert hall that was later converted into a prison.

He came up with the idea for the design, which looked a lot like the Disney Hall, after crumpling Marge Simpson's letter to him and throwing it on the ground. After taking a look at it, he declared, "Frank Gehry, you've done it again!"

"Some people think I actually do that," he would later tell the AP.

GEHRY'S LASTING LEGACY AROUND THE WORLD

Ephraim Owen Goldberg was born in Toronto on Feb. 28, 1929, and moved to Los Angeles with his family in 1947, eventually becoming a U.S. citizen. As an adult, he changed his name at the suggestion of his first wife, who told him antisemitism might be holding back his career.

Although he had enjoyed drawing and building model cities as a child, Gehry said it wasn't until he was 20 that he pondered the possibility of pursuing a career in architecture, after a college ceramics teacher recognized his talent.

"It was like the first thing in my life that I'd done well in," he said.

Gehry steadfastly denied being an artist though.

"Yes, architects in the past have been both sculptors and architects," he declared in a 2006 interview with The Associated Press. "But I still think I'm doing buildings, and it's different from what they do."

His words reflected both a lifelong shyness and an insecurity that stayed with Gehry long after he'd been declared the greatest architect of his time.

"I'm totally flabbergasted that I got to where I've gotten," he told the AP in 2001. "Now it seems inevitable, but at the time it seemed very problematic."

The Gehry-designed Guggenheim Museum in Abu Dhabi, first proposed in 2006, is expected to finally be completed in 2026 after a series of construction delays and sporadic work. The 30,000-square-foot structure will be the world's largest Guggenheim, leaving a lasting legacy in the capital city of the United Arab Emirates.

Gehry continued to work in his home town and had two projects pending along the local coast. The first is a city block-sized overhaul opposite Palisades Park that includes a hotel, commercial space, residential units including rent controlled and affordable housing, and a museum, plus a public rooftop deck, interlaced by pedestrian "paseos" that are also open to the public. Gehry had been working on that development since 2007 but it has remained on the drawing board despite receiving Council's approval in 2022.

The second nearby work in progress is a joint venture with celebrity chef Wolfgang Puck to build a new restaurant at the former Gladstones location. The Coastal Commission recently approved the project that calls for demolishing the existing 12,091-square-foot restaurant and its 7,900-square-foot public deck to construct a new 17,500-square-foot restaurant with a 2,000-square-foot public deck.

"Frank Gehry was an honored and inspirational member of the Santa Monica Community," said local architect Gregory Ginter. "In addition to his uniquely imaginative residence on Washington Avenue, he created some of the most recognizable architectural works throughout the area, and the world. As an architect, I will continue to remain inspired by his innovative process, which ignored conventional design formulas. His distinctive play between light and shadow produced captivating, one-of-a-kind architectural spaces."

His survivors include his wife, Berta; daughter, Brina; sons Alejandro and Samuel; and the buildings he created.

Another daughter, Leslie Gehry Brenner, died of cancer in 2008.
