Police arrest man in connection with violent attack on elderly woman

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Police arrested a man last week in connection with a November assault on an elderly woman and are seeking the public's help in identifying any additional victims of similar assaults.

The woman was assaulted Nov. 16 around 6 p.m. while walking home from a grocery store in Ocean Park, said Candice Cobarrubias, a Santa Monica Police Department lieutenant. A man grabbed her from behind, took her to the ground and began to violently strangle her, causing her to lose consciousness multiple times. A random car driving by caused the suspect to stop his attack and flee, Cobarrubias said.

After a neighborhood canvas and a review of surveillance videos from the area, SMPD was able to identify the man as Kenneth Jordan Wilburn, a 28-year-old Sacramento resident.

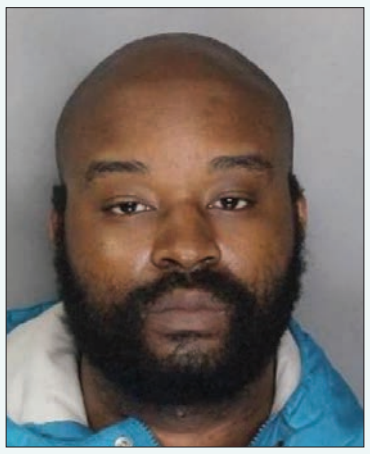

Wilburn was taken into custody Dec. 3 by SMPD with the assistance of Sacramento Police Department. He is being held on $60,000 bail and is awaiting transport to Los Angeles to appear in court.

Santa Monica Police Department is asking the public to contact Detective Nicole Murphy at 310-458-8941 or the Watch Commander at 310-458-8427 if they have any information about similar assaults on elderly individuals.

The arrest follows community concerns over a different assault on an elderly resident.

An elderly man was assaulted while walking in downtown Santa Monica Saturday morning. A man punched him in the face, damaging his teeth and denture and splitting his upper lip.

SMPD has not released the suspect's name or photo because he may be involved in additional crimes, Cobarrubias said, but the SMPD website lists Joseph Gilbert as being arrested and charged with elder abuse at about 3 p.m. on Dec. 7.

Gilbert is in jail on $50,000 bail and has been booked into the county jail ten times in the last year, according to jail records. Gilbert was previously arrested in Santa Monica for bothering customers at a Starbucks.

SPA: An assault claim against an employee was dropped by prosecutors.

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

A woman has come forward with allegations that she was sexually assaulted at a hotel spa, mirroring claims in a lawsuit against the hotel that its general manager refused to fire sexual predators.

The woman, who spoke with the Daily Press on the condition of anonymity, told police that she was sexually assaulted in January 2018 by her massage therapist at the spa inside the JW Marriott Le Merigot in Santa Monica. She came forward after the Daily Press reported on a lawsuit filed in September that alleges spa manager Christina Mills repeatedly asked the hotel's general manager Damien Hirsch to fire staff members who allegedly sexually assaulted spa guests.

The lawsuit claims that Hirsch ignored Mills' recommendations and the employees allegedly continued to assault guests. The hotel fired Mills last November,

Airbnb to remove illegal listings under settlement agreement

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Airbnb will remove listings that violate the city of Santa Monica's home-sharing law under a settlement it reached with the city Tuesday.

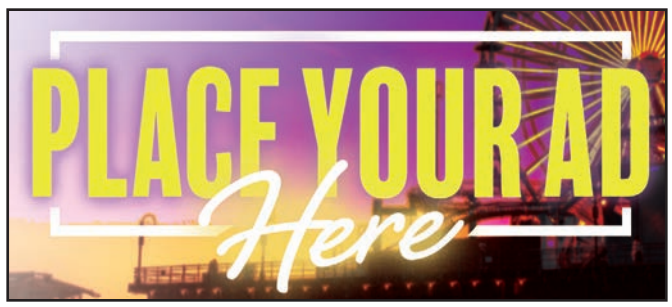

The settlement requires all listings to display a city license number, which are provided to hosts who register with the city and obtain a business permit and license. Starting Jan. 20, Airbnb will only allow each host to list one home and no more than two listings per residence. Airbnb will also pay the city $2 per night for each listing in Santa Monica to support the development of affordable housing.

The settlement marks the end of a three-year legal dispute between Airbnb and the city. In September 2016, Airbnb and Homeaway challenged the city's recently adopted home-sharing ordinance, which allows residents to rent out their homes for up to a month as long as they remain on the premises.

"When Santa Monica adopted its home-sharing ordinance, it struck a balance," said City Attorney Lane Dilg. "There were concerns that

San Francisco aims to rein in tests of tech ideas on streets

JANIE HAR
Associated Press

Tired of San Francisco streets being used as a testing ground for the latest delivery technology and transportation apps, city leaders are now requiring businesses to get permits before trying out new high-tech ideas in public.

Supporters of the legislation, which the Board of Supervisors unanimously approved Tuesday, say it is the first of its kind in the U.S. They say it's long overdue in a city that's a hub for major tech companies but is more accustomed to reacting to the sudden arrival of new technology — such as when hundreds of dockless electric scooters appeared overnight last year.

The e-scooter trend has led to complaints from people in cities across the country.

The tech industry has showered San Francisco with high-paying jobs and cemented its reputation as a place for big ideas, but the success of home-grown companies Airbnb, Lyft and Uber has vexed some residents as streets have become more congested and the housing shortage has worsened.

"I support innovation and technology, but our residents are not guinea pigs, and our public infrastructure is not a free-for-all," said Norman Yee, president of the Board of Supervisors who introduced the legislation.

The Office of Emerging Technology will serve as a one-stop shop for entrepreneurs who want to test their products in San Francisco's public space. Companies will not be allowed to experiment unless the office declares the tech in question a "net public good."

It's not clear how criteria will be used to evaluate proposals, but companies that share data, ensure public safety and privacy when testing, and promote job creation would fare better than those that don't.

The office will have oversight over new technology launched on, above or below city property or on public right-of-ways, but the legislation does not spell out all the possible technologies the office would oversee.

Yee said hoverboards, delivery drones and data-gathering devices on sidewalks or other public infrastructure would be subject to regulation. He's even heard of a business that wants to promote low-tech pogo sticks as transportation. The concept makes him shudder.

"Can you imagine?" Yee said. "Let's put a stop to that before they drop 10,000 pogo sticks into the city."

Local officials have a duty to protect public infrastructure and to send the message that public space is "not the Wild West" for anyone with coding skills and a neat idea, said Aaron Klein, a fellow in economic studies at the Brookings Institution, a public policy think tank.

"On the other hand, too much local control and too many hoops to jump through can be easily manipulated by vested interests to fight advancement," he said.

San Francisco political strategist Jon Golinger says it's time that City Hall took control after nearly a decade of political leaders allowing businesses free rein. The lenience made some people wealthy but didn't provide enough public good to a city with skyrocketing housing prices, growing homelessness and widening income inequality.

"It had a detrimental and lasting effect on the quality of life and the health of our city," he said.

For instance, San Francisco did not start regulating Airbnb until 2014, years after the company started advertising short-term rentals despite a city law that prohibited such stays. Officials also are tangling with Uber and Lyft over congestion, user data and driver pay, among other issues.

Transportation companies like those ride-hailing services are overseen by the state so could not be regulated by the city office, says Erica Maybaum, an aide to Yee. It also would not regulate a service like Airbnb because that involves a private platform and private properties, she said.

The Silicon Valley Leadership Group, founded by David Packard of Hewlett-Packard, objects to the permitting requirement, saying it would stifle innovation and burden business.

But the legislation has the backing of sf.citi, a tech association founded by angel investor Ron Conway, who's a longtime nemesis of advocates of stricter regulation.

"We believe that the supervisor's approach of working with — rather than against — industry to build legislation is the kind of leadership this city needs to be successful," said Jennifer Stojkovic, sf.citi's executive director.

Vikrum Aiyer, vice president of public policy at food delivery service Postmates and a member of the work group that crafted the legislation, said at a public hearing last month that the days of public-private head-butting are over.

"This is an era in which government needs to build empathy for technology, and technology companies must build more empathy for government," he said.

Yee came up with the idea for regulation nearly two years ago, after he successfully passed legislation requiring companies to get permits to test delivery robots. The idea gained more urgency after hundreds of dockless scooters appeared on city sidewalks in 2018, providing a fun ride for some but irritation for others forced to weave around them.

The city moved to ban the scooters until officials could regulate them.

All Must Speak Out, II

WHY WAIT?

When I posted last week's CURIOUS CITY column, about the need to speak up when outrageous, immoral, illegal, even treasonous things are said and done by our con man in the Oval Office, his evil crew and his GOP lackeys — yes, straight talk is what's called for, not tiptoeing around with weak wishy-washy wondering — I added, "Soon a column about the insanity in Santa Monica.... now is the time to stop walking on eggshells and call BS, call insanity. This is not normal, not acceptable, and must not stand."

BUT FIRST, SOME GOOD NEWS!

Our Santa Monica Conservancy is having their holiday party this Saturday, 3 - 5 p.m., at 401 25th Street, with wine, hors d'oeuvres and live music, and the opportunity to mingle with your neighbors who also care about preserving the character of our historic city, and that is not an easy task these days.

I don't always agree with everything the Conservancy does, or fails to do, but they do an awful lot of good to preserve the best, historic parts of Santa Monica, and deserve our thanks. The party is free to Conservancy members, or $20 for guests, which can be applied to membership.

The star of the party is always the home that hosts it, in this case the 106-year-old landmarked American Colonial Revival residence of real estate magnate Tom Bundy and tennis champion May Sutton Bundy, the first American player to win the singles title at Wimbledon. See? You've already learned something cool about SM from the Conservancy and you haven't even joined yet.

BEER WITH ME

The other good news is that one of my very favorite beers in the entire world is being featured at a sampling tomorrow night (Thurs). Goose Island's BOURBON COUNTY STOUT is released only around Thanksgiving, it's pretty dang expensive and it sells out within a few days. But Craft Beer & Whiskey Overlord Phil McGovern of the Daily Pint, across from Virginia Avenue Park, has some, even from 2015, '17 and '18.

The stouts are aged up to two years in 35-year-old Heaven Hill whiskey barrels, which loads it with thick flavor. You get a very small glass and you savor it by sips. There are very few things I've enjoyed having in my mouth more than Bourbon County Stout.

Where else can you get such useful information about Santa Monica? (And no, Goose Island doesn't send me samples. Dammit.)

While you're there, ask Phil if he's chosen the date yet of the January celebration bash he hosts in memory of the great Scottish poet, lyricist ("Auld Lang Syne") and farmer Robbie Burns. Bagpipes, men in kilts and the procession and address to the haggis, free buffet of Scotch Eggs, Orkney Clapshot, Courageous Cock A Leekie soup — best party in town.

Image by vectorportal.com

OUTRAGE: It's not all bad news. There are good beers for sale at the moment.

OUTRAGE IN SANTA MONICA

I've written about these icky, persistent problems here so many times in the last seven years I can't stand it. "Neither can we!" — the chorus rises, I know.

But here's my point. We all know about what's gone wrong here. We've addressed it. Met about it. Organized. Complained. Protested. But our City government seems deaf, and immune. Nothing changes and the perpetrators keep getting reelected.

What I'm asking for now, just for the moment, is that we all stop and consider these things again, as if they just happened, from the aspect of how outrageous they are, and how wrong it is that we have to endure it.

INSANITY IS

Appealing a lost court decision, for no compelling reason, and continuing to appeal, spending literally tens of millions of our taxpayer dollars, AND REFUSING TO TELL US HOW MUCH YOU'VE SPENT! The height of arrogance and privilege.

Insanity is letting a commercial company drop their product all over our streets and sidewalks, with many residents seriously injured, not enforcing existing laws, not forcing them to be permitted, and spending a couple of years studying the situation, when many other cities simply said, Are you kidding?— no!

Insanity is easing regulations for developers and large chain luxury retail, forcing longtime residents out of their apartments and mom and pop businesses to fold their tents, leaving the citizenry that's left to drive to West LA or Culver City to get the services and goods we need. Who are you working for, anyway?

Insanity is letting SMRR, despite their long-ago good founding principles and accomplishments, continue to pick and run our government with the number one objective being staying in power, intent on

LA Law Library Presents QuickLook Class on Evictions

LA Law Library presents a QuickLook legal research class on Friday, December 13, at 1:30 p.m. at Santa Monica Main Library, 601 Santa Monica Blvd. LA Law Library legal research specialists teach free, 45-minute overviews of legal information search tools and techniques as part of their regular "office hours" visits on the second Friday of each month.

The topic for the December 13 QuickLook class is Evictions. The class will cover the eviction or "unlawful detainer" process and what resources are available to help. QuickLook classes are shortened versions of more extensive classes taught at LA Law Library's Main Branch in downtown Los Angeles. For more information on LA Law Library classes, visit http://www.lalawlibrary.org/classes.

After the class, from 2:30 to 5 p.m., the legal research specialist will be available to assist patrons, including legal professionals, in finding information and resources on any legal topic.

LA Law Library does not provide legal advice. LA Law Library provides legal resources and assistance with legal re-search as an educational service. For legal advice, you should consult an attorney.

This program is free and open to all ages. Seating is limited and on a first-arrival basis. The Santa Monica Public Library is wheelchair accessible. For disability-related accommodations, call Library Administration at (310) 458-8606 at least one week prior to the event. The Main Library is served by Big Blue Bus routes 1, R10 and 18. Ride your bike. Bicycle parking racks are available at the library.

bringing more and more renters here to that purpose, who will be ill informed voters choosing all incumbents. Look around you! Do you like what SMRR operatives have turned SM into the last 15 years? Do you love that Wall of Lincoln that's going up? How about the huge developments just announced?

Insanity is doing nothing to try to alleviate traffic, because the unspoken planning philosophy is that cars are bad and everyone should walk, bike or scooter, yes, you too, Grandma. Just think about all this development and see if that doesn't make sense.

Insanity is letting a handful of inner circle folks with an agenda make stealth moves for six years to paint over a beloved environmental mural that's been on Lincoln more than 40 years. To put the Obamas name up instead? The City recently touched up our famous murals under the overpass, but let the Muir Woods mural go untouched for all that time. Don't forget similar neglect for Chain Reaction, and both were gifts to the city.

The list is long and insane, pick your favorites. Insane-aMonica.

despite praising her work in several performance reviews.

The woman, who had patronized the spa once before, said she became uncomfortable when her massage therapist watched her get undressed. During the massage, she said, he touched her breasts and placed his erect, clothed penis on her hands. She said she left the room, told a receptionist she had been assaulted and ran out of the hotel.

She reported the assault to the Santa Monica Police Department, which investigated the incident and referred it to the Santa Monica City Attorney's Office for filing. The City Attorney's Office rejected the case due to insufficient evidence, said city spokesperson Constance Farrell.

The woman said an SMPD detective told her that another spa guest had complained about the same massage therapist. The detective asked her to pick out the massage therapist from a lineup of photographs, but she was not completely sure that she could identify him and did not select a photograph.

She also said Mills, the spa manager, reached out to her multiple times by email to find out what happened during her massage. She told Mills and Hirsch, the general manager, that she had a horrible experience and wanted her money back but did not reveal the details of the assault.

She said she corresponded with the SMPD detective until July 2018, when he told her he was waiting on a review for charges against the massage therapist.

"I never heard from him again," she said. "I was trying to move on and put it out of my head. I was just hoping he would do it and I never followed up."

While Mills was employed at Le Merigot from September 2016 to November 2018, she repeatedly asked Hirsch for permission to fire spa employees whom guests said had inappropriately touched them, according to the lawsuit. Mills said she also told Hirsch and other top managers that the workers were allegedly misclassified as independent contractors.

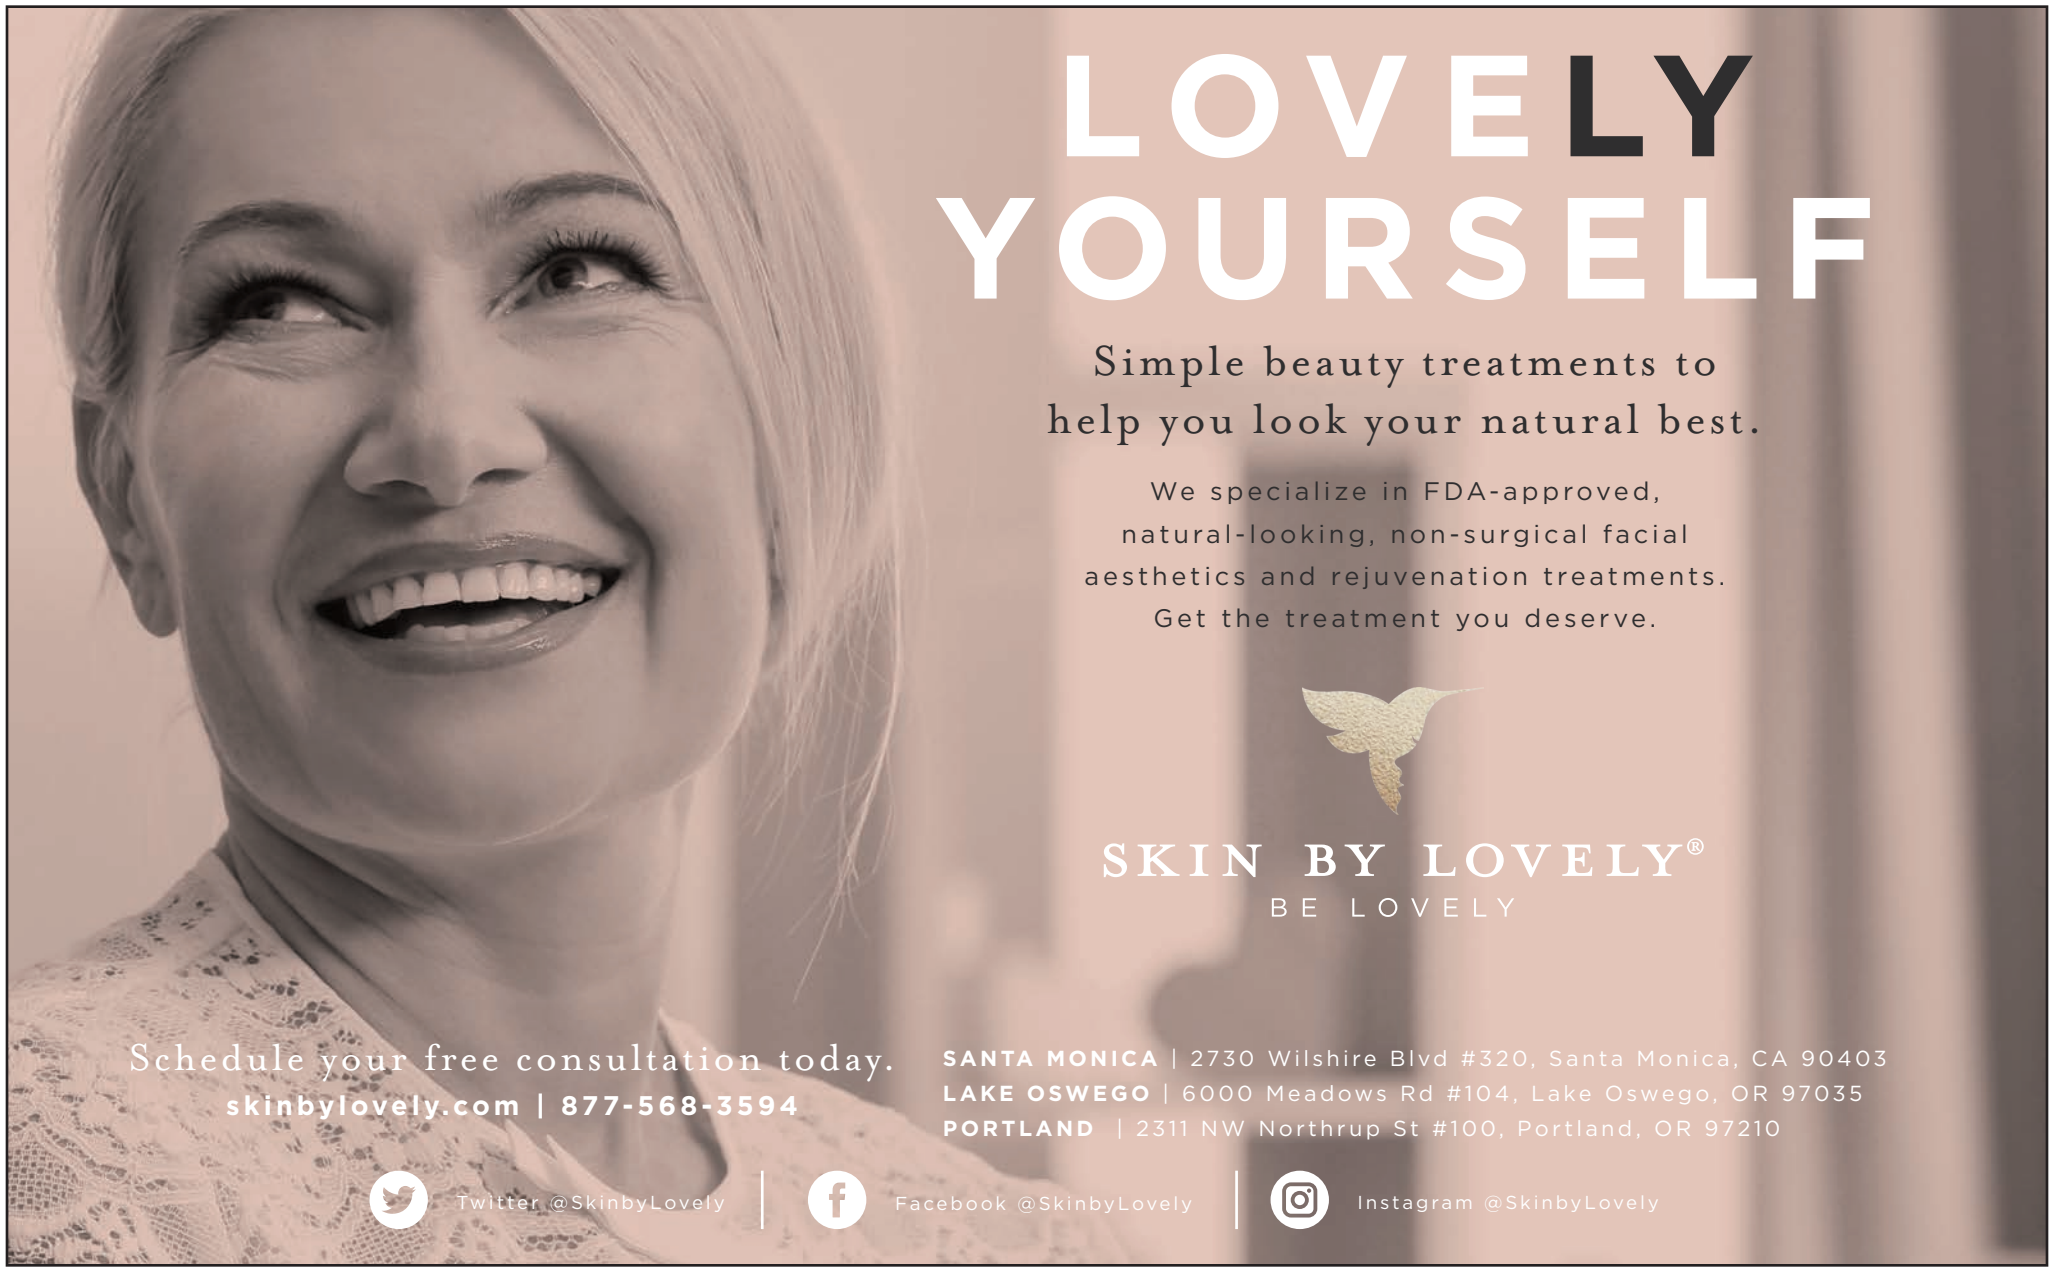

Mills said Hirsch refused to allow her to terminate the predatory employees because he was afraid the workers would sue them for classifying them as independent contractors rather than employees.

Mills said she was fired after several months of reporting the assaults and alleged misclassification, even though Hirsch had written in performance reviews that Mills had addressed the spa's problems and optimized its productivity, calling her "the absolute perfect fit for what needed to happen in this hotel."

Mills filed the lawsuit against Hirsch and Columbia Sussex, a hotel company that operates the JW Marriott Le Merigot. Mills seeks damages to cover lost past and future income and benefits in a sum to be determined at trial.

Columbia Sussex declined to comment on the lawsuit. Hirsch could not be reached for comment.

Facebook rebuffs US AG over access to encrypted messages

MATT O'BRIEN
AP Technology Writer

Facebook is rebuffing efforts by U.S. Attorney General William Barr to give authorities a way to read encrypted messages.

The heads of Facebook-owned WhatsApp and Messenger services told Barr and his U.K. and Australian counterparts that Facebook is moving forward with plans to enable end-to-end encryption on all of its messaging services. End-to-end encryption locks up messages so that not even Facebook can read their contents.

WhatsApp already uses end-to-end encryption. Facebook plans to extend that protection to Messenger and Instagram Direct.

Barr and other officials had asked the company in October to hold off. In a letter to Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg, they insisted that precluding access by law enforcement could hinder efforts to prevent or investigate crimes. The letter repeatedly emphasized the dangers of child sexual exploitation to justify their stance.

Barr reiterated his concerns in a speech Tuesday, calling the encryption fight "one of our highest priorities" and describing "an increasing number of horror stories about how people are dying, or being molested or whatever, but we cannot get in."

Law enforcement has long sought a way to read encrypted messages that's analogous to wiretaps for phone calls. Security experts, however, say that giving police such access makes messaging insecure for everyone by creating vulnerabilities that others can exploit.

In Facebook's response Monday to Barr and other authorities, Will Cathcart, head of WhatsApp, and Stan Chudnovsky, head of Messenger, said creating such a "backdoor" for law enforcement "would be a gift to criminals, hackers and repressive regimes, creating a way for them to enter our systems and leaving every person on our platforms more vulnerable to real life harm."

Facebook has said that people have the right to private conversations online and that companies are already able to respond to government agencies when they receive valid legal requests. Facebook's letter emphasized the many tools the company has built to try to detect criminal and other problematic activities using signals from unencrypted information.

Barr said at a Wall Street Journal event on Tuesday that there are benefits to encryption, such as to secure communications with a bank. But he said the growth of consumer apps with end-to-end encryption, like WhatsApp and Signal, have aided "terrorist organizations, drug cartels, child molesting rings and kiddie porn type rings."

His comments came on the same day that executives from Facebook and Apple were testifying about encryption at a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing.

Apple's director of user privacy, Erik Neuenschwander, told senators in prepared remarks Tuesday that encryption not only protects an iPhone user's sensitive data, but is an important way of safeguarding financial and health data in an "increasingly interconnected future."

"We do not know of a way to deploy encryption that provides access only for the good guys without making it easier for the bad guys to break in," he said.

Apple resisted the government's efforts to gain access to an iPhone belonging to a perpetrator of a 2015 terrorist attack in San Bernardino, which killed 14 people. The company went to court to block an FBI demand for Apple to disable security measures that complicated efforts to guess the phone's passcode. The FBI eventually relented after it found another way of getting into the phone, but a longstanding fight between the tech industry and Justice Department over finding workarounds has flared up again under Barr.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (DECEMBER 11)

As always, your opinion of yourself catches on. You'll believe that you're vital to the action, and then soon find yourself right at the center, making improvements in your world. Colleagues and loved ones hold you up as inspiration. You'll work with someone you've long admired. Sweet souls come into your day to day. Cancer and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 3, 33, 13, 28 and 16.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Though it feels like you shouldn't or can't move from a situation, you're not actually stuck. What holds you here is imaginary, but it may still be a very good reason. Examine your options. Ask for insight from others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You're afraid that if you show too much support, enthusiasm or appreciation, people will become satisfied and stop trying to impress you. Perhaps it's true. But it's more likely that they will become addicted to your attention.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You can still be an open and honest person without sharing everything with everyone. People can only handle so much. Holding back honors your individuality whilst respecting the value of their time and attention.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You've developed a sense about people. You can tell when they are interacting with a version of you that they've created and when they are actually seeing you. It's knowledge that's come to you because you were ready for it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You don't have all that's necessary to accomplish what you want, but go forward anyway. You'll be surprised at the resources you'll be able to access once this train starts moving down the track.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). How boring life would be if you only took on the tasks you knew you would succeed at. Anyway, today you're not attracted to the places you've already been. You want to see and try new things.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You've lost objectivity. A different person could live inside your daily life and consider the experience a vacation, an adventure, a thrilling challenge or an insurmountable one. Imagining their view will change yours.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Stretching is good for the body and better for the soul. So agree to a task that seems like a sizable reach. You've been underestimating yourself lately and are capable of much more than you think.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). People can't play when they are stressed. Fear limits the range of both imagination and body. Playful moods take hold in an atmosphere of trust and safety.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). If you've ever gotten to know identical twins, you've experienced firsthand the way physicality completely changes to reflect the being inside. Any work you do on your insides will be reflected in your appearance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You'll get the chance to show people how you came to a conclusion, or let them know what's involved in a process you know about. You'll glean new insights in the sharing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Writing helps you internalize information. And at an even more primal level, so does drawing. It matters not a bit how good you are at either. Put this useful tool to work to make a change you've been thinking about.

Double Up on Full Moon Fun

When you experience something that delights you to the core, you're driven to share it. But not everyone you're close to likes the same things as you. There's big, double-sized fun on tap under the full Gemini moon, especially for those who make the effort to be with special ones who can join you in the celebration of what you love.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTIONS

"I'm a Pisces who wants to fall in love. I really do. This Aries I'm seeing says that I make it too hard for him to get to know me and that I obviously have a really tough time opening up. I don't want to lose him, and maybe he's right. Why can't I let down my guard?" Because you don't feel like it. When you do feel like it, you will. The Piscean sensitivity can be a curse or a superpower and is usually some mix of both at the same time. If you let yourself, you could be a sponge, allowing others to fill you with their own emotions and agenda. That's why you're so reserved. You've done this in the past and felt the unique pain that comes from losing yourself. To some extent, we all live behind emotional safety walls of our own construction. The height of the wall is determined by how we perceive the threat on the other side. If you really think you're going to be hurt, your wall will be thick, high and bulletproof. That's only natural – and wise. I would be wary of anyone who wants you to open up faster than you really feel comfortable doing. For psychic Pisces, falling in love is a natural process and cannot be forced. Trust yourself. The right person will be both patient and willing to earn the privilege of knowing you at deeper levels.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

If you find yourself "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree," then you just might be listening to Brenda Lee who, in the '60s, had more charted hits than any other female artist. The fiery Sagittarian earned the nickname "Little Miss Dynamite" because the surprising power of her voice contrasted with her petite stature. Lee's Sagittarian worldliness is represented in songs recorded in multiple languages. Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis.com.

CRIME WATCH BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON NOVEMBER 28, AT 11 A.M.

Downtown Service Officers responded to a call of a male subject yelling, screaming and kicking signs along the promenade in the 1200 block of 3rd St. The subject then picked up a light fixture with large glass light bulbs and slammed them together causing them to break. Officers arrived and met with the DTSM representative who made a private person's arrest of the subject. The suspect remained uncooperative with police officers during the investigation. Christopher William Riley, 39, from Gardena, was arrested for vandalism and resisting arrest. Bail was set at $20,000.

vacation rentals could decrease our housing supply in the midst of a housing crisis. The City Council adopted an ordinance that allows community members to supplement their incomes by legally inviting residents into their homes."

A federal appeals court rejected the challenge to the ordinance in March and the City Council tightened the ordinance in September after it became aware that some hosts were operating de facto hostels in single-family homes. The new rules prohibit hosts from accepting more than two bookings at a time and from acting as the host for more than one listing.

Dilg said the settlement will ensure those rules are enforced.

"The win for us is the ability to regulate the platform's conduct," she said. "Going after the hosts is very inefficient when the company is still allowing them to post listings. Now, when we provide Airbnb with notice that a listing violates the ordinance, they will take down that listing for us."

She added that the court decision and the settlement give the city the ability to enforce the rules on other home-sharing platforms or negotiate similar settlements.

Councilmember Kevin McKeown said the settlement will help preserve the city's limited housing stock.

"We now can better protect real permanent homes, especially our affordable rent-controlled apartments, from being used as de facto hotel rooms, displacing our neighbors," McKeown said.

The city and Airbnb entered into the settlement while the company's appeal of the March court ruling was pending. The parties agreed to temporarily stay the appeal and negotiate the settlement.

"After years of uncertainty for our host community in Santa Monica, the new settlement agreement provides our hosts the clarity they need to continue sharing their homes," said Matt Middlebrook, Airbnb's California head of public policy. "We are proud to support Santa Monica's efforts to build and maintain affordable housing and look forward to continuing to work with city leaders on policies that strengthen the communities our hosts call home, just as we've done in jurisdictions around the world."
