Community bids farewell to longtime crossing guard

RETIRE: Local parents, students and neighborhood residents gathered Friday for a going away celebration to honor crossing guard Rikki Floyd, who's manned the corner of 14th and Pearl for more than a decade.

Whether it's city employees, parents or the dozens of students who walk by daily, anybody who regularly passes the corner of 14th and Pearl knows Rikki Floyd, the beloved crossing guard who's served the Will Rogers' community for more than 10 years.

With her red stop sign, sparkling personality and penchant for conversation, Floyd has come to know almost every single resident — both human and canine — who live within a two block radius of her crossing corner.

During a community celebration for the retiring crossing guard Friday, parents recalled coaxing their now-college-aged children to school using nothing more than the opportunity to talk to Floyd.

"She knows everybody's name — adults, nannies, all the kids, all the dogs — and even all of the people who are not even school-goers," said parent Bailey Field, who was one of many in attendance for Friday's pop-up party. "She just makes people feel like they're visible and they're important. She also likes to add some kind of joy and is always really compassionate with us."

During the holiday times, Floyd always had a treat to delight the kids, attendees said while they described her colorful

Artist will lead talks over Muir Woods mural

BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

Commissioned by artist Jane Golden in 1978, the Muir Woods mural positioned at the corner of Lincoln and Ocean Park boulevards has captivated the eyes of passers-by for more than three decades.

Despite its popularity with some in the local community, the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District recently suggested the mural be painted over after staff cited concerns of erosion, lead paint and other environmental hazards.

Four Ideas To Help Our City Grow More Inclusively

BY TARA BARAUSKAS

Santa Monica is uniquely equipped to be a leader in Southern California's quest to solve the affordable housing crisis. Our engaged and compassionate community has demonstrated leadership on embracing progressive values for decades, and these values can guide us as we work together to meet new Regional Housing Needs Assessment (RHNA) requirements for our city to build substantially more affordable housing in the next Housing Element cycle (2022-2030). I have four suggestions to help Santa Monica rise to the challenge and meet these requirements, simultaneously reducing traffic, embracing diversity, increasing affordability, and promoting environmental sustainability.

1. GROW SMART

No one wants to see 10-story skyscrapers next to a beach bungalow. Incremental incentives and bonuses, like allowing most areas to add an additional floor for 100% affordable housing, will efficiently and effectively use the limited land available to meet the projected 9,000-unit RHNA requirement. This gradual change, such as going from three to four stories, if built in neighborhoods near jobs, schools and transit, will also reduce traffic congestion and greenhouse gas emissions.

We want to embrace sustainable planning that reduces traffic, encourages walking, and improves our air quality. Adding new affordable homes close to jobs and schools will make our city more walkable, bikeable or transit-oriented, which will make Santa Monica a even more close-knit, progressive community. This means seeing your neighbors' faces, not their cars, when you're out and about. If we fulfill these requirements by adding homes near job centers, that means more Santa Monicans can walk or bike to work, the grocery store, or use our incredible Big Blue Bus system. It means children are safer walking to and from school and after-school programs. And it means fewer cars clogging up the streets.

2. REDUCE CONSTRUCTION COSTS

The City of Santa Monica has long been a champion of affordable housing, with policies like inclusionary housing and administrative approval processes. Expanding these policies can have a tremendous impact in cutting red tape without compromising the character of our communities or the quality of our homes.

Championing change starts at the local level, but must be followed by regional and state policymakers. For example, increasing the administrative approval threshold for 100% affordable housing from 50 units to 75 units seems like a small change, but it will offer much-needed savings (time and cost) for non-profit housing providers that serve low-income neighbors. Utilizing modern innovations like modular construction or pre-fabricated building components could also significantly cut costs. And using City-owned property to build affordable housing would stretch limited housing dollars used for each development.

3. SUPPORT AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Our community understands that we all have to pitch in to keep our city the special place that it is. A few years ago, citizens voted yes on Measures GS/GSH to help fund affordable housing in our city. Already, this funding has been instrumental in helping produce housing for low-income, seniors, and disabled residents. In the next decade we have a major task ahead of us to meet the RHNA housing requirement so a lot will need to change to meet this new challenge. Simply reducing the cost of construction won't be enough, so we need to bring more ideas to the table to make sure that responsible developers have access to the funding needed to meet this critical requirement. Many people in the community have embraced affordable housing in their neighborhood for many years, have said "yes" to new affordable housing and voted yes on GS/GSH to provide more resources to build it. That is the kind of embracing that is appreciated, helpful, and will be needed even more in the coming years.

4. SUPPORT OUR NEIGHBORS

Santa Monica has a diverse job market, and people who work critical job functions in highly unaffordable areas shouldn't be penalized with a lengthy commute that is frustrating and hurts our air quality. Businesses and schools have a hard time attracting and retaining staff when that staff faces driving 1.5-2 hours each way in order to work in this area. It's time for informed advocates to discuss how affordable housing, clustered around job centers, is necessary to truly embrace residents of all incomes, backgrounds, and abilities. Making sure that people who grew up in Santa Monica, or work here, can afford to live here builds community and affirms our values.

It might seem simple but starting a conversation and sharing these values with your neighbor can have impact. Even better, going out in the community to discuss how our City can grow incrementally helps put a friendly face on how we will benefit from changes. Please attend a community meeting, affordable housing tour, or advocate for well-planned, efficient affordable housing at a public hearing.

Everyone is welcome in our City. We are truly lucky to live and work in a place that upholds the values of diversity and inclusion. Now, as we shift our action plans to meet the RHNA requirement, and do our part in California to end the housing crisis, we can make our home the model for progressive city planning.

MURAL

In October, after hours of discussion and input from residents, the district's Board of Education came to a unanimous decision to leave the mural in place until local stakeholders had the opportunity to voice their opinions on how the district should best move forward with the beloved mural.

Thanks to his local ties to Philadelphia — Golden's current place of residence — SMMUSD Board President Jon Keane said he spoke directly to the artist to gauge if she had any interest in leading a community-oriented process that could decide the fate of the mural.

"I played my Philly card with her and she called me right back," Kean said in an interview Friday.

"She was very flattered that the people of this community have such an emotional attachment to her work. It made her feel very good, but at the same time, she understands that murals are not a permanent art form and that sometimes murals fade away and need to be updated, replaced, rejuvenated or renovated," Kean said. "So, her advice to us was we need to identify why people connect so strongly with the original piece and to use that energy moving forward."

SMMUSD believes the best way to identify why people feel so strongly about the piece is to have Golden host a series of meetings at the end of January, which will allow anybody with an opinion the opportunity to share it.

Kean said the meetings will occur over the course of three days with the first gathering being held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 30, 2020 on Santa Monica College's campus. The next day, small groups comprised of students, activists and others stakeholders will meet with Golden and her team individually to ensure the group has nailed down the true feelings of the community.

On the final day of discussions — Feb. 1, 2020 — Golden and the district will gather at 721 Ocean Park Boulevard for a meeting that Kean said will likely last three hours.

"We truly want a collaborative effort with residents so everybody can voice what's best in their eyes," Kean said, mentioning the board isn't sure what conclusion will be reached at the end of the meetings. "But we do know that the mural can't be restored. It could be replaced, a new piece could go up or it can be some combination of the two, but it cannot be restored."

District staff said a sign-up procedure will be announced and every effort will be made to accommodate all interested parties.

"We are pleased that Ms. Golden has agreed to guide this community process on reimagining the mural space at the Obama Center," said SMMUSD Superintendent Dr. Ben Drati. "We are confident that her passion and expertise for mural art along with her personal connection to this space will ensure that our final design choice will take all factors and interests into consideration. The new mural will be a source of community pride and enjoyment for decades to come."

Court Order Allows Hotel Worker Protections to Take Effect January 1

Today, the U.S. District Court issued an order allowing the workload provisions of the City of Santa Monica's Hotel Worker Protection Ordinance to go into effect as planned on January 1, 2020. A hotel owner and management group sought to invalidate these provisions of the law, which strengthens workplace safety and compensation protections for Santa Monica's 2,100 hotel housekeepers. The law received unanimous City Council support when it passed in August.

"The court has validated Santa Monica's compassionate concern for the safety of hotel workers, whose hard labor makes possible our successful hospitality sector," said Mayor Kevin McKeown.

Columbia Sussex Management and CW Hotel Limited Partnership filed a complaint arguing that the ordinance was unconstitutional and invalid. They sought a preliminary injunction to prevent the workload provisions of the ordinance from going into effect on January 1. Judge Otis Wright's order denies the request for preliminary injunction and finds that plaintiffs have not shown a likelihood of success on any of their claims made under the National Labor Relations Act, the dormant commerce clause, and the California Occupational Safety & Health Act.

"We are pleased by the court's order, which affirms that the City's lawful enhancement of protections for hotel workers employed in our community," said City Attorney Lane Dilg.

The Hotel Worker Protection Ordinance:

Provides hotel housekeepers with safety protections to prevent against sexual violence or other threatening behavior.

Establishes daily workload maximums of 4,000 square feet for hotels with less than 40 guest rooms and 3,500 square feet for hotels with greater than 40 guest rooms, and requires a double overtime compensation rate for all hours worked in a workday when a housekeeper's workload exceeds these maximums.

Requires training on personal rights and safety, and education to protect public health and prevent instances of human trafficking, domestic violence, and sexual violence.

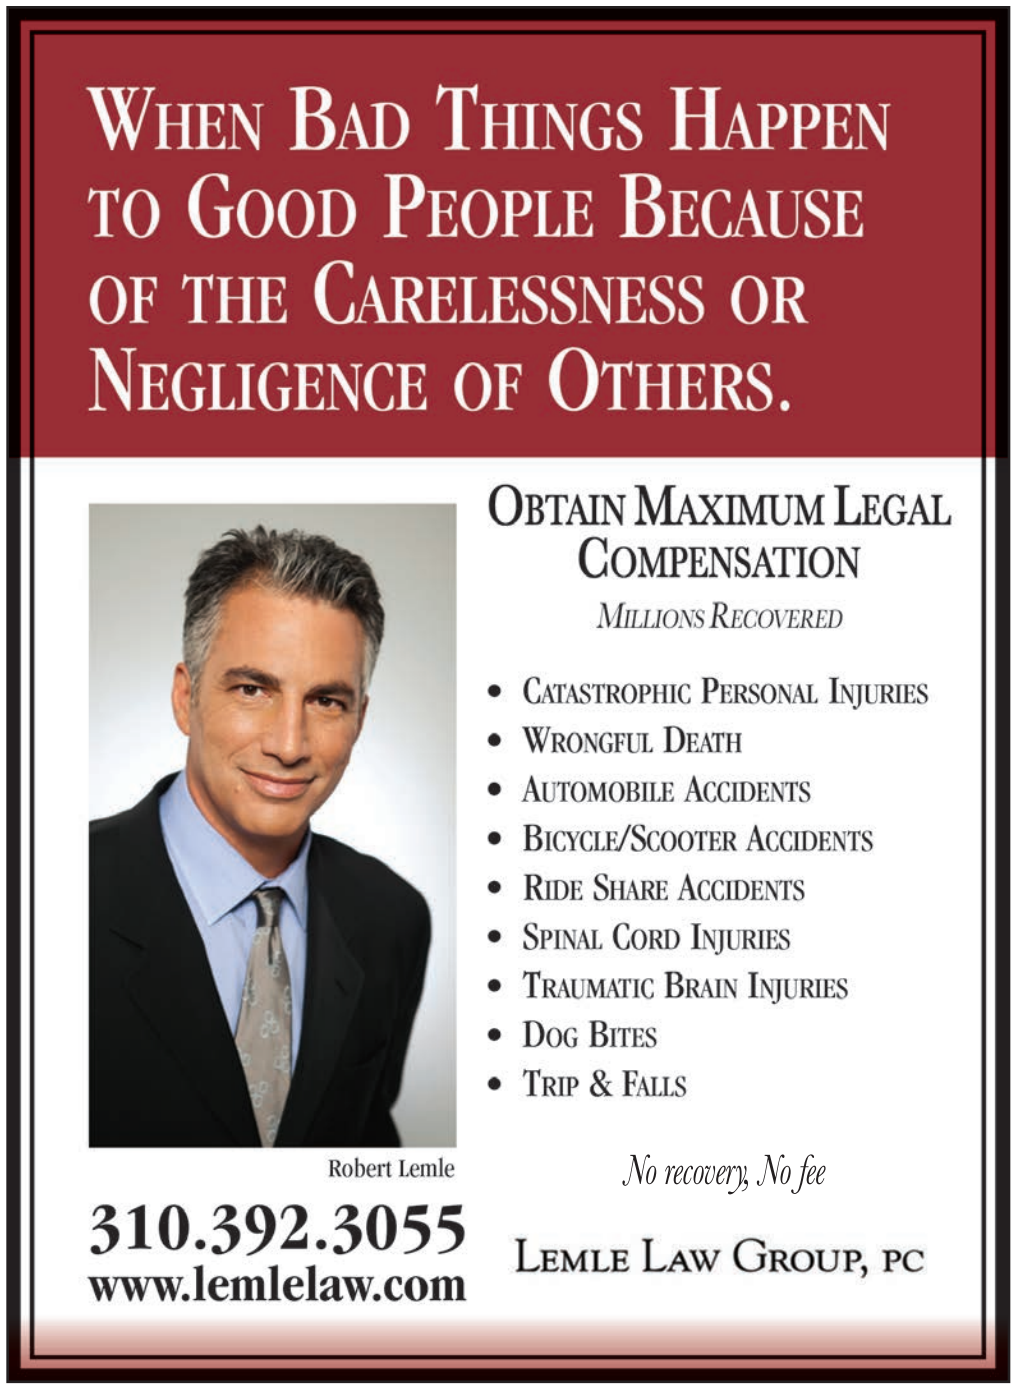

Calls for hotel worker retention for a 90-day transition period in instances of a change in hotel ownership.

The ordinance takes effect on a rolling basis by provision: the worker retention provision became effective upon the effective date of the ordinance in October, the safety protections and workload/overtime provisions take effect on January 1, 2020, and training will be required by January 1, 2021.

Candidates and climate

DEAR EARTHTALK: WHERE DO THE REMAINING DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES STAND ON CLIMATE AND ENVIRONMENT?

Mary W., Miami, FL

It was just a few months ago that two dozen Democrats were vying for their party's nomination to take on Donald Trump in 2020. While technically 16 are still in the race, only seven—Biden, Buttigieg, Klobuchar, Sanders, Steyer, Warren and Yang—qualified for participation in the December 2019 debate (based on a minimum number of contributing supporters and success in polling in the four "early voting" states). While the Democratic party will most likely choose its candidate from among these seven, it's still too early to count out the other contenders.

For their part, environmentalists would've been happy if Washington governor Jay Inslee, who made promoting the need to address climate change the central tenet of his 2020 presidential bid, was still in the race. Before dropping out in August, Inslee released an omnibus plan to phase out fossil fuels and shift the economy wholesale over to green energy. Fans called it a more practical version of the Green New Deal, a similarly comprehensive green energy-based economic overhaul plan introduced into Congress earlier in the year.

With Inslee out, no one candidate stands out as particularly focused on the environment, although they all support a carbon drawdown of some sort. Elizabeth Warren has adopted Inslee's climate plan lock, stock and barrel. Previously, she had co-sponsored the Green New Deal along with fellow senators Sanders, Booker and Klobuchar. Most of the other Dems in the running expressed support for the Green New Deal.

Meanwhile, Tom Steyer, a hedge fund billionaire-turned-activist, has lots of environmental cred given his role as founder and funder of NextGen Climate (now NextGen America) an advocacy non-profit and political action committee which steered some $74 million of his riches toward environment-friendly Congressional and gubernatorial candidates in the 2014 elections.

Another compelling candidate from an environmental perspective is media mogul and former NYC mayor Michael Bloomberg, who has put up $150 million of his own money in support of the Sierra Club's "Beyond Coal" campaign which helped shutter some 50 coal-fired power plants nationwide. Last June, he pledged another $350 million to the cause via Beyond Carbon, his initiative to fight dirty energy.

Other candidates may not have so much money to throw around, but it doesn't mean they aren't also keen to fight climate change. Reading through the answers of a recent environment survey of the Democratic hopefuls by the non-profit League of Conservation Voters (LCV) shows more similarities than differences, with each of the Dems pledging to commit billions or trillions of dollars to fighting climate change and restore the U.S. to a leadership position on the issue internationally.

In short, voters concerned about climate change would do well to pull their levers in favor of any of the Democrats running. Whether there are enough like-minded Americans to unseat Trump in 2020 is another question entirely—but the health of the planet may just hang in the balance.

CROSSING GUARD

Christmas, Valentine's Day and Mardi Gras costumes.

"It really transforms the community and brings everyone together because people stop and they chat and get to know each other. And it just gets our day off to such a positive start," parent Pamela Petrigliano said. "No matter how much trouble we had getting out of the house with our kids, when you have her smiling and calling out, 'Hello!' to everyone, it just puts you in a good mood, and I think it affects all of us in such a positive way."

Floyd said she was originally placed at Lincoln Middle School when she began working as a crossing guard but one Monday after Christmas break, "I'm driving and I can't wait to get to my corner and my boss calls to say, 'I need you to go to 14th and Pearl.'"

"I thought, 'Oh, I'm going to miss all my kids,'" Floyd said, "not knowing that they're all going to pass right through my new spot to get to the school... So yeah — I got here. I loved it. They loved me, and it's been a love affair ever since."

Floyd's corner was packed with residents for hours on Friday as nearly hundred residents came out to bid farewell.

"It fills my heart with joy to know I touched all of these individuals. I've had people who I don't cross stop by and say, 'Oh, we love you. Thank you,'" Floyd said at the conclusion of her shift Friday. "My whole thing is everybody needs a smile in the morning to get started, so I tried to wave to as many people as I can and smile as much as I can."

Floyd hopes to continue smiling in Hawaii, where she will soon be moving to during retirement.

"Everybody has just been so lovely and wonderful," Floyd said. "It's the heart-to-heart hellos and goodbyes that I'm gonna miss so much. It's also going to be pretty hard not seeing the little ones finish and move on."

VOTED SANTA MONICA'S MOST LOVED GROCER @coopportunitymarketdeli

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (DECEMBER 23)

Love is a form of faith. To love someone is to trust your heart to someone else's care. You will learn someone very well, and choose carefully how to invest your feelings. But ultimately, love is still a risk. It is because you are willing to take the risk that you experience so much beauty and fulfillment. Libra and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 3, 30, 6, 22 and 14.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Where can you get fresh air, fantastic ideas, blood flow, soul healing and a metabolism boost without buying a single thing? Walking outdoors. It's where the best things will happen today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Ultimately, you get to choose how you spend your time. It's easy to lose sight of this when you're with dominant people who would like you to join their agenda. It's fun when it's your choice and you feel in control.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You've all but forgotten about that little chunk of good karma you generated years ago, though it hasn't forgotten about you. It will circle back right when it will be most profound to receive it.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You'll be prolific, producing much more than you thought you would, so apply yourself where you are most needed or where you are certain to enjoy yourself as you work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You want something you haven't articulated yet. Maybe you've been afraid to say it out loud. Regardless, it's go time. State the deal. Things will only start happening after you eliminate the ambiguity in a relationship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You don't like to be teased unless the teasing is so playful or interesting that it's somehow its own reward. Movie trailers sometimes fit the bill. One thing that doesn't is when people say, "I'll tell you later."

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You'll be good at figuring people out and settling into a place that's going to work well with the entire group. It will probably mean chipping in even when you don't feel ready or holding back when you feel overqualified.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You can't go any faster or do any more than your best. Expecting yourself to is unloving. There is no need to punish yourself nor is there a gain from doing so that makes any sense.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You require things of your relationships, things that are not spoken about, but are nonetheless clearly conveyed to the observant counterpart. The nonobservant counterpart will be utterly lost.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). If you gain by losing and lose by gaining, then you'll be on par with most people today. But if you can celebrate this with genuine enthusiasm and gratitude for the funny way life works out, then you'll be in a league of your own.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Those willing to compromise to make an arrangement work are more invested in the success of the arrangement than they are in their personal satisfaction or ego gratification.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). What one person considers very awkward is a comfortable family tradition to someone else. You'll be reading the signals, dialed into the microexpressions that tell the inside story.

Scorpio Moon Rules the Festival of Lights

A spiritual way of being isn't acquired, it has always been, though an awareness of one's true nature may ebb and flow. The Scorpio moon that rules this beginning to Hanukkah lends a soulful feeling to the rituals of the holiday. "To me every hour of the light and dark is a miracle, every cubic inch of space is a miracle." -- Walt Whitman

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTIONS

"When I listen to a song, I hear the words and think about what they mean. Is it wrong that it really bothers me that he doesn't? He butchers them when he sings along, and doesn't know or care what any song is about. Is that a Taurus thing? I'm not saying that I'm going to stop dating him over this, but... would I be wrong to?" There are lyric people, and there are rhythm people. Taurus rules the vocal cords and it also rules earthly rhythm. While there are millions of Taurus natives who care deeply about the words, he's more concerned with the feel of the groove. Rhythm people keep the action flowing. Their responsibility to the beat of both life and music means they feel they can't afford to stop and consider things deeply. Lyric people are in no rush. They want to understand the meaning of things and will take all the time they need to do so. When a rhythm person mows over their process, the lyric person feels uncomfortable, overlooked and disregarded. These two may not listen to music or do other things the same way, but they do have complementary strengths. That said, stop dating him if you want to. You need no reason. Love has its own irrational logic. If you don't feel it; you're not feeling it.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

Besides being ranked by Rolling Stone magazine as among the best singers of all time, Eddie Vedder is known for his social and political commentary, activism and stage dives. The Rock & Roll Hall of Famer was born when the sun and Mercury were in passionate Sagittarius and the moon was in Leo, the sign of showmanship. Lucky Jupiter was in Taurus, the sign of the voice. Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis.com.

SOCALO

was credited for introducing many Westsiders to regional Mexican cooking, and Feniger and Milliken said Socalo incorporates new influences from Baja, Sonora and the rapidly evolving Mexican-American food scene.

"The emphasis we used to have on trying to be as authentic as possible has kind of shifted because in Mexico they're really being innovative with their cuisine, and in L.A., New York and Chicago, all sorts of incredible Mexican food is being created," Milliken said.

Socalo will open Thursday for counter-service breakfast and lunch, with happy hour and dinner to follow at a later date. It will offer a range of Mexican craft beers on tap and specialty tequila, mezcal and other spirits.

Menu highlights include a breakfast burrito with refried beans, Oaxacan cheese, crispy potatoes and chipotle aioli; jackfruit tinga tacos with roasted poblano, crispy jalapeño and avocado tomatillo salsa; and lamb birria with consomé, escabeche, tomatillo mint salsita. Milliken said diners can expect to find the chefs' housemade seasoning — smoky, citrusy ground chiles with salt — on "just about everything."

Many items on the menu are vegetarian, vegan or health-conscious, Milliken added.

"It's the way of the future," she said. "Part of our responsibility is to create dishes that are really satisfying and delicious, but also healthy for the planet and our bodies."

Feniger said she is most excited about the tacos vampiros and salsa macha, two items the chefs haven't worked with before. Vampiros, a style of taco in which the tortilla is fried on the comal with griddled cheese, meats and salsa, have exploded in popularity in Los Angeles over the past five years. Socalo will serve versions with steak, shrimp and just cheese.

"I love the smoky flavor that comes from the griddled cheese on the comal," Feniger said. "We top it with salsa macha, which is completely addictive. To have a dish or ingredient that people find addictive is such an amazing thing because you don't find often find items that you just crave."

The restaurant, which is more intimate than Border Grill's large, bustling former location, is intended to serve as an all-day hangout, Feniger said. The clue is in the name: Socalo is a combination of zócalo, the central plaza of many Mexican towns, and SoCal.

"We have two big tables in the bar and a lot of booths throughout the space," Milliken said. "The bar is indoor-outdoor and very communal."

Milliken and Feniger said they are excited to serve a part of Santa Monica that has historically had few notable restaurants (Bruce Marder's Rooster and Ratree Boonpatara's Thai Vegan II are recent entries to the neighborhood). For those arriving from further afield, the restaurant offers 90 minutes of free parking in the Gateway Hotel.

"There's so much demand in Santa Monica for truly local places and it's important to us is that this is a place where people get an early morning coffee, come in for brunch and hang out at happy hour," Feniger said.
